committed on a person, or with respect to property in or upon any coach, etc., or vessel, during a journey or voyage, it will be sufficient if the coach or vessel in the progress of the journey or voyage, passed through the county or by the boundary of the county in which the defendant is indicted. (See ante, p. 43). As to proceedings in respect of property stolen in a foreign country, see 59 & 60 Vict. c. 52, s. 1 (ante, p. 433).

"Three Pairs of Shoes," etc.]—The species of goods must be proved as laid; for instance, upon this indictment, if the prosecutor were to fail in proving that shoes, or a waistcoat, were stolen, the defendant must be acquitted, although there were indisputable evidence of his having stolen other articles (ante, p. 76), unless the indictment were amended according to the evidence, under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 1. (See ante, pp. 52, 296, 305.) It is not necessary to enumerate all the articles stolen at one time unless a restitution order is desired. (See ante, p. 269). And it is not necessary that the prosecutor should prove all the articles mentioned in the indictment to have been stolen; if he prove the defendant to have stolen any one of them (as, for instance, if he prove that the defendant stole the waistcoat, or one pair of the shoes), it will be sufficient. (Ante, p. 300.) Goods may be described by the name by which they are known in trade; as, for instance, a set of new handkerchiefs in the piece may be described as so many handkerchiefs, though they are not separated from each other, if the pattern designates each, and they are considered in trade as so many handkerchiefs. R. v. Nibbs, 1 Mood. C. C. 25. Ingots of tin, or a bar of iron, may be described as so many pounds weight of tin or iron; but where an article has obtained, in common parlance, a name of its own, it would be wrong to describe it by the name of the material of which it is composed. R. v. Mansfield, C. & Mar. 140, Coleridge, J. Coin may be described simply as money, without specifying any particular coin, and the allegation will be sustained by proof of any amount of coin, though the particular species of coin of which such amount was composed shall not be proved. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 18 (ante, pp. 52, 57), where the cases are collected and discussed. As to the proper description of live or dead animals, see the cases collected, ante, p. 76. Where an indictment charged a defendant with stealing "one bushel of chaff, one bushel of oats and one bushel of beans," and the evidence was that the articles were mixed together, Bayley, J., held the description insufficient, and said that it should have been "a certain mixture, consisting of one bushel of chaff, etc." R. v. Kettle, 3 Chit. Cr. L. 947, a. But in a subsequent case, Alderson, B., doubted the propriety of this ruling, and expressed an opinion, that although substances chemically mixed ought to be so described, substances mechanically mixed ought to be described by the names applicable to them before the mixture. R. v. Bond, 1 Den. 517; 19 L. J. (M. C.) 138 (C. C. R.). An indictment against A. for stealing, and B. for receiving a mixture of grain, is not sustained by evidence which shows that two sorts of grain, then separate, were stolen by A., mixed by him, and afterwards sold by him to B. R. v. Robinson, 4 F. & F. 43, Pollock, C.B. Although it is necessary to prove that the prosecutor's goods have been taken, that may be proved by circumstances, although the witnesses for the prosecution cannot swear to the loss of the articles said to have been stolen, nor that the property found upon the prisoner and alleged to have been stolen is the prosecutor's. R. v. Burton, Dears. 282; 23 L. J. (M. C.) 52 (C. C. R.) (ante, p. 341). See also R. v. Mockford, 11 Cox, 16 (C. C. R.).

Distinct takings—How charged.]—By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 5 (ante, p. 428), it is lawful to insert several counts in the same indictment against the same person, for any number of distinct acts of stealing, not exceeding three, which may have been committed by him against the same person within the space of six months from the first to the last of such acts, and to proceed thereon for any or all of them. See R. v. Lonsdale, 4 F. & F. 56, Pollock, C.B. (ante, p. 90). And by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 6 (ante, p. 428), "if upon the trial of any indictment for larceny it appears that the property alleged in such indictment to have been stolen at one time was taken at different times, the prosecutor shall not by reason thereof be required to elect upon which taking he will proceed, unless it shall appear that there were more than three takings, or that more than the space of six months elapsed between the first and the last of such takings; and in either of such last-mentioned cases the prosecutor shall be required to elect to proceed for such number of takings, not exceeding three, as appear to have taken place within the period of six months from the first to the last of such takings." Before 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 17) the practice was otherwise; R. v. Smith, Ry. & M. 295: R. v. Ellis, 6 B. & C., 145; except where it was not impossible that all the goods might have been stolen at one time. R. v. Dunn, 1 Mood. C. C. 146: R. v. Hinley, 2 M. & Rob. 524, Maule, J. But both before and since 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 6, where the acts constitute a continuous taking, the prosecutor ought not to be put to his election. R. v. Bleasdale, 2 C. & K. 765, Erle, J.: R. v. Shepherd, L. R. 1 C C. R. 118; 37 L. J. (M. C.) 45: R. v. Firth, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 172; 38 L. J. (M. C.) 54: cf. R. v. Henwood, 11 Cox, 526 (C. C. R.): (and see ante, pp. 88–91). In R. v. Wright, Dears. & B. 431; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 65; 7 Cox, 413 (C. C. R.), where a bank clerk had misappropriated a large sum of money during a considerable period of his employment, and admitted the amount, it was held that it was not necessary for the jury to find that a specific amount was stolen on a particular day.

What can be stolen.]—The goods taken must, in the absence of any express statutory enactment, appear in evidence to be personal goods; for none other can be the subject of larceny at common law.

Larceny at common law.]—1. Things real, or which savour of the realty, cannot be the subject of larceny at common law; and so strict was the rule in this respect that a larceny could not be committed of title-deeds, 1 Hale, 510; 1 Hawk. c. 33, s. 35; or of any other charter or writing concerning the realty, R. v. Westbeer, 1 Leach, 12; 2 Str. 1133, 1137: R. v. Walker, 1 Mood. C. C. 155, or even of the box in which they were kept. 1 Hale, 510; 3 Co. Inst. 109. Larceny of title-deeds is now punishable under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 28 (post, p. 497).

Lands, tenements and hereditaments (either corporeal or incorporeal), cannot, in their nature, be the subject of larceny. Of things, also, which adhere to the freehold, as corn, grass, trees, and the like, or lead or other thing attached to a house, no larceny can be committed at common law; but the severance of them was, and in many cases still is, a mere trespass, and the subject of a civil action only. 1 Hawk. c. 33, s. 34. The Forester's case, Y. B. 11 & 12 Edw. 3, f. 641. In R. v. Clinton, Ir. Rep. 4 C. L. 6, it was held not larceny to appropriate drifted and ungathered seaweed lying between high and low water mark on the shore exclusively owned by A. But it was always held at common law, that if the owner or a stranger sever things real, and another man come and steal them—or if the thief sever them at one time, and at another come and take them away—it is larceny. 3 Co. Inst. 109; 1 Hale, 510; Lee v. Risdon, 7 Taunt, 188, 191; 17 R. R. 484, 486: R. v. Foley, 17 Cox, 142; 26 L. R. (Ir.)

299: (C. C. R. Ir.). It would appear, however, that the mere severance by the wrongdoer at one time and the taking away by him at another, are not sufficient to constitute larceny, unless he had, between the severance and the taking away, intended to abandon his wrongful possession of the article severed. If the wrongdoer did not intend to abandon his possession, but merely left the article concealed on the land after severance until he could conveniently return and carry it away, then the severance and carrying away are one continuous act, although a considerable time may have elapsed between the severance and taking away, and there is no larceny at common law. R. v. Townley, L. R., 1 C. C. R. 315; 40 L. J. (M. C.) 144. The carcass of a diseased pig, which has been buried in the land three feet below the surface, and which is dug up the same day by the prisoner, has not become so attached to the soil as to prevent its being the subject of larceny in an indictment against the prisoner for stealing it. R. v. Edwards, 13 Cox, 384 (C. C. R.). Larceny of ore from mines is now punished by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 38 (post, p. 482); larceny of certain materials affixed to buildings, by s. 31 (post, p. 491); and of vegetable products, by ss. 32–37 (post, pp. 483–491).

2. Bonds, bills, etc., being mere choses in action, are not the subject of larceny at common law, for they are of no intrinsic value. Calye's case, 8 Co. Rep. 33: 1 Hawk. c. 33, s. 35; 1 Hale, 510, n. So, it was held by ten judges [Parke, B., dissenting), that, even on an indictment for stealing a piece of paper the defendant could not be convicted of stealing an agreement though unstamped, for building certain cottages, the work under which agreement was actually in progress, R. v. Watts, Dears. 326; 23 L. J. (M. C.) 56 (C. C. R.). Larceny of such documents is now punishable under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 27 (post, p. 500), and in the case of theft by persons in the public service, or the police, under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, ss. 69, 70 (post, p. 467), and in the case of theft of postal packets by officers of the post office, under 7 W. 4 and 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 26 (post, p. 503). Documents cannot properly be described in the indictment as "goods and chattels." R. v. Powell, 2 Den. 403; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 78 (C. C. R.).

3. Larceny at common law cannot be committed of things which are not the subject of property, as of a corpse; R. v. Haynes, 12 Co. Rep. 113; and see 2 East, P. C. 652; 1 Hawk. c. 33, s. 46. As to offences with respect to human bodies, see post, Book II. Part II. ch. vi. s. 2 (c). But the carcass of a diseased pig, which had been killed and buried by the owner in his own land, and of which he intended to make no further use, was held still to remain his property, so as to support an indictment for larceny against a person who afterwards disinterred and sold the carcass. R. v. Edwards, 13 Cox, 384 (C. C. R.). Of things in which no person has any determinate property, as treasure trove, wreck, etc., till seized, it has been said that larceny cannot be committed; 1 Hale, 510; 1 Hawk. c. 33, s. 38; but it would seem that the true owner, though unknown, has still a property in them, before seizure by the lord, unless there be circumstances to show an intended dereliction of the property. 2 East, P. C. 606, 607. The same has been said of wreck. But theft from wrecks is now punishable under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 64 (post, p. 515).

Animals.]—At common law larceny cannot be committed with respect to animals feræ naturæ (unless they are dead, tamed, or in confinement) as of deer, hares and conies in a forest, chase or warren; fish in an open river or pond; or wild fowls at their natural liberty. 1 Hale, 511; Fost. 366; 1 Hawk. c. 33, ss. 39, 40; Y. B. 18 Edw. 4, f. 8, pl. 7; R. v. Rough, 2 East, P. C. 607. Deer stealing is now punishable by statute 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, ss. 12–15 (post, p. 474), and the taking of hares and rabbits by night in warrens or grounds used for breeding or keeping them is punishable under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 17 (post, p. 476). Theft, etc., of fish in private waters is punished under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 24 (post, p. 474), and of oysters, etc., from beds or fisheries under s. 26 (post, p. 479). As to property in oysters and mussels, see also 31 & 32 Vict. c. 45, ss. 51, 52, 55 (post, p. 475). Animals feræ naturæ when killed upon the soil by a wrongdoer, become the absolute property of the owner of the soil: Blades v. Higgs, 11 H. L. C. 621; 34 L. J., C. P. 286: Lord Lonsdale v. Rigg, 1 H. & N. 923: 26 L. J., Ex. 196. If the wrongdoer kills them on the soil and leaves them there, intending to abandon the possession of them, but afterwards returns and takes them away, such taking amounts to larceny. But if the wrongdoer after killing them, leaves them concealed on the soil, not with the intention of abandoning the possession, but intending, on the other hand, to return and take them away when it should be convenient for him to do so, and afterwards does take them away, such taking away is not larceny, as the killing and taking away are one continuous act, although a considerable time may have elapsed between the killing and taking away. R. v. Townley, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 315; 40 L. J. (M. C.) 144. Poachers, of whom the prisoner was one, wrongfully killed a number of rabbits upon the land belonging to the Crown. They placed the rabbits in a ditch upon the same land, some of the rabbits in bags, and some strapped together. They had no intention to abandon the wrongful possession of the rabbits which they had acquired by taking them, but placed them in a ditch as a place of deposit till they could conveniently remove them. About three hours afterwards the prisoner came back and began to remove the rabbits. It was held that the taking of the rabbits and the removal of them were one continuous act, and that the removal was therefore not larceny. Id. Prisoner was employed to trap wild rabbits, which he did, but, contrary to his duty, took them to another part of the land and placed them in a bag, intending to appropriate them to his own use, which a fellow servant observing, went and took some of the rabbits out of the bag during prisoner's absence, nicked them, and replaced them in the bag, his reason for nicking them being that he might know them again. Prisoner afterwards took away the bag and the rabbits. It was held that the act of the fellow servant in nicking the rabbits was no reduction of them into the possession of the master, so as to make the prisoner guilty of stealing them by carrying them away after they had been so nicked. R. v. Petch, 14 Cox, 116 (C. C. R.). It seems that the mere killing of an animal feræ naturæ by a sportsman is not such a reduction of it into his possession as to make it his property, so as to sustain a charge of larceny against a person who takes it fraudulently and with intent to deprive the owner of it, before the sportsman has picked it up. R. v. Roe, 11 Cox, 554, 557, Willes, J. Fish taken at sea are in the possession of the owner of the smack by which they are taken, and are therefore the subject of larceny. R. v. Mallison, 20 Cox, 204; 66 J. P. 503.

If animals feræ naturæ are reclaimed or confined, or are practically under the care and dominion of the prosecutor, and may serve for food, they may be the subjects of larceny. So larceny may be committed of deer so enclosed in a park that they may be taken at pleasure (see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 13, post, p. 473), fish in a trunk or net, pheasants or partridges in a mew or coop: 1 Hale, 511; 1 Hawk. c. 33, s. 41: R. v. Garnham, 8 Cox, 451, Pollock, C.B.; R. v. Head, 1 F. & F. 350, Campbell, C.J.; young pheasants hatched by a hen, and under the care of the hen in a coop, although the coop is in a field at a distance from the dwelling-house, and although the pheasants are designed ultimately to be turned out and to become wild; R. v. Cory, 10 Cox, 23, Channell, B.; partridges about three weeks old and able to fly a little, which have been hatched and reared under a common hen, and afterwards remain about the prosecutor's premises with the hen as her brood and sleep under her wings at night, although neither the hen nor the partridges are in a coop or otherwise confined; R. v. Shickle, L. R., 1 C. C. R. 158; 38 L. J. (M. C.) 21; or pigeons which, though they have free access to the open air, are tame and reclaimed, and return to their house or box. R. v. Howell, 2 Den. 362, n.: R. v. Brooks, 4 C. & P. 131: R. v. Cheafor, 2 Den. 361; 21 L. J. (M.C.) 43 (C. C. R.) See Smith v. Dear, 67 J. P. Rep. 244. Where the taking of pigeons does not amount to larceny, it is summarily punishable under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 23. Swans, it is said, if lawfully marked, are the subject of larceny at common law, although at large in a public river; Dalt. Just. c. 156; and whether marked or not, if they be in a private river or pond. Case of Swans, 7 Co. Rep. 16. Their eggs seem not to be the subjects of larceny (see 2 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.), 247), but persons taking or destroying them out of the nest can be summarily punished under s. 24 of the Game Act, 1831. As to rooks, see Hannan v. Mockett, 2 B. & C. 934; 4 D. & R. 518: as to hawks, 1 Hawk. c. 32, s. 36. All valuable domestic animals, as horses, and all animals domitæ naturæ, which serve for food, as swine, sheep, poultry, turkeys (Roberts v. Williams, 12 East, 33, 34: Carleton v. Brightwell, 2 P. Wms. 462; 24 Eng. Rep. 815; peacocks (Y. B. 18 Hen. 8, pl. 11), and the like, and the product of any of them, as eggs, milk from the cow while at pasture, wool pulled from the sheep's back; R. v. Martin, 1 Leach, 171; 2 East, P. C. 618; and the flesh of such as are ferœ naturæ, may be the subject of larceny. 1 Hale, 511: see R. v. Gallears, 1 Den. 501; 2 C. & K. 981, 982; 19 L. J. (M. C.) 13 (C. C. R.). But it is not larceny at common law to steal animals which do not serve for food, such as dogs, ferrets, though tame and salcable; R. v. Searing, R. & R. 350; and other creatures kept for whim and pleasure. 1 Hale, 512; Lamb. Eiren. 267; Dalt. Just. c. 156; 1 Hawk. c. 33, s. 36: R. v. Robinson, Bell, 34; 28 L. J. (M. C.) 58 (C. C. R.). But theft of such animals, if ordinarily kept in confinement, is summarily punishable under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, ss. 21, 22 (post, p. 471), subject to the election of the accused to be tried on indictment. R. v. Sherriff, 20 Cox, 384. And the theft of dogs, or possession of stolen dogs, is punishable under ss. 18, 19 (post, p. 470).

Gas, water, and electricity.]—Gas passing through the consumer's pipes is the subject of larceny by him, if he fraudulently appropriate it at a point before that at which by his contract he is entitled to use it. R. v. White, Dears. 203; 22 L. J. (M. C.) 123 (C. C. R.): R. v. Firth, L. R., 1 C. C. R. 172; 38 L. J. (M. C.) 54. Water supplied by a water company to a consumer, and standing in his pipes, may be the subject of a larceny at common law. Ferens v. O'Brien, 11 Q. B. D. 21; 52 L. J. (M. C.) 70. Any person who maliciously or fraudulently abstracts, causes to be wasted or diverted, consumes or uses any electricity is guilty of simple larceny, and punishable accordingly, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 56, s. 23. R. v. Armanni, Cent. Crim. Ct., 1899; 130 C. C. C. Sess. Pap., p. 707.

Value.]—Since the abolition of the distinction between grand larceny and petty larceny (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 2, ante, p. 427, which re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 2), no statement need be made as to the value of the property stolen except in those cases where value or price is of the essence of the offence (14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 24, ante, p. 54). And although, to make a thing the subject of larceny, it must be of some value, yet it need not be of the value of any coin known to the law, that is to say, of a farthing at the least. R. v. Morris, 9 C. & P. 349. Cf. R. v. Edwards, 13 Cox, 384 (C. C. R.), ante, p. 437. Where value is the essence of the offence sufficient articles must be named in the indictment to amount in value to the sum necessary to constitute the offence. R. v. Forsyth, R. & R. 274.

Ownership—"Of the goods and chattels of J. N."]—It must be proved upon the trial, that the goods stolen are the absolute or special property of the person thus named in the indictment. Formerly it was of the utmost importance that he should not be misnamed; misnomer is, however, now immaterial, owing to the powers of amendment now possessed by the court (14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 1: ante, p. 52). See the cases collected, ante, p. 58, as to the description of property where there is a bailment: and as to various special cases, see ante, pp. 61–66.

"Feloniously did steal."]—In all cases of larceny, the question whether the defendant took the goods knowingly or by mistake—whether he took them bonâ fide under a claim of right, or otherwise—and whether he took them with an intent to return them to the owner, or fraudulently, with an intent to deprive the owner of them altogether, and to appropriate or convert them to his own use—are questions entirely for the consideration of the jury, to be determined by them upon a view of the particular facts of the case. R. v. Farnborough [1895] 2 Q. B. 484: 64 L. J. (M. C.) 270 (C. C. R.). Where a man was charged with stealing three hare-wires and a pheasant it was ruled that if he really believed that the wires and pheasant belonged to him he was not guilty of larceny even though he might have committed an offence against the Game Acts. R. v. Hall, 3 C. & P. 409, and cf. R. v. Boden, 1 C. & K. 395. The taking and carrying away must be felonious, that is, done animo furandi; 4 Bl. Com. 232. This indeed, is not very definite; but larceny (at common law) may correctly be defined thus: the wrongful or fraudulent taking and carrying away the personal goods of another, from any place, with a felonious intent to convert them to the taker's own use, and make them permanently his own property, without the consent of the owner; 2 East, P. C. 553; the word "felonious" being explained to mean that there is no colour of right to excuse the act; and the "intent" being to deprive the owner, not temporarily, but permanently of his property. R. v. Thurborn, 1 Den. 387; 2 C. & K. 831; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 140: R. v. Guernsey, 1 F. & F. 394, Martin, B. If the sheep of A. stray into the flock of B., and B., not knowing it, drive them home along with his own flock, and shear them, this is no felony; but it would be otherwise if he did any act for the purpose of concealing them, for that would indicate his knowledge of their being the sheep of another. 1 Hale, 507. If, under colour of arrear of rent, although none be actually due, I distrain or seize my tenant's cattle, this may be a trespass, but is no felony. 1 Hale, 509. If I take an estray, upon a claim of right to it as lord of the manor, it is no felony, however groundless my claim may be. Id. 506. So, if a man having done work upon a chattel, returns it to the owner, and, a dispute afterwards arising between him and the owner as to the price to be paid for the work, he seizes and carries off the chattel, against the will of the owner honestly intending to hold it as a security for the amount which he alleges to be due to him, this is no felony, although, in fact, nothing may be due to him. R. v. Wade, 11 Cox, 549, Blackburn, J. A creditor who violently assaults his debtor, and so forces him then and there to pay him his debt, cannot be convicted of robbery, there being no felonious intent. R. v. Hemmings, 4 F. & F. 50, Erle, C.J. If a servant take his master's horse without his knowledge, and bring him home again; if a man take his neighbour's plough that is left in the field, and use it upon his own land, and then return it; these may be trespasses, but are not felonies, 1 Hale, 509, because the returning the thing taken sufficiently evinces that the party, when he took it, had no intention to deprive the owner of it, or to convert it to his own use. Returning the goods, however, can be considered merely as evidence of the defendant's intention when he took them; for if it appear that he took them originally with the intent of depriving the owner of them, and of appropriating them to his own use, his afterwards returning them will not purge the offence. See 1 Hawk. c. 34, s. 2; 1 Hale, 533. In R. v. Phillips, 2 East, P. C. 662, 663, it was proved that the defendants took two horses out of the prosecutor's stable at night without his leave, and having ridden them about thirty miles, left them at an inn, desiring care to be taken of them, and saying that they should return in three hours; the defendants were taken on the same day at the distance of fourteen miles from the inn, walking in a direction from it: the jury found the defendants guilty, but at the same time found specially that the defendants meant merely to ride the horses thirty miles, and to leave them there, without an intention to return for them, or otherwise dispose of them: and ten of the judges held that this was no felony, as there was no intention in the prisoners to change the property, or make it their own. So, where the servant of a tanner took out of his master's warehouse dressed skins of leather, with intent to bring them in and charge them as his own work (which they were not), and to get paid by his master for them, this was held to be no larceny. R. v. Holloway, 1 Den. 370; 2 C. & K. 942; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 60 (C. C. R.): see R. v. Webb, 1 Mood. C. C. 431: R. v. Poole, Dears. & B. 345; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 53 (C. C. R.). Cf. R. v. Richards, 1 C. & K. 532 (post, p. 442). But where the jury found the defendant guilty of larceny in stealing plate, but recommended him to mercy on the ground that they believed he ultimately intended (not saying when he so intended) to return the property, this statement was held not to qualify the verdict, so as to bring the case within the principle of the above decisions. R. v. Trebilcock, Dears. & B. 453; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 103 (C. C. R.). And where A. took B.'s goods wrongfully, and offered them for sale to B., as the goods of another, he was held guilty of larceny. R. v. Hall, 1 Den. 381; 2 C. & K. 917; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 62 (C. C. R.): see R. v. Manning, Dears. 21; 22 L. J. (M. C.) 21 (C. C. R.). Where, upon an indictment for larceny, it appeared that the prisoner had clandestinely taken the goods alleged to have been stolen from a young woman, for the mere purpose of inducing her to call for them, that he might have an opportunity of soliciting her to commit fornication with him, the judges held this not to be a felonious taking. R. v. Dickinson, R. & R. 420. The prisoner's goods having been seized under warrants of execution of a county court, and being in possession of the bailiff, the prisoner, with intent to deprive the bailiff of his authority, and so defeat the execution, forcibly took the warrants from him. On these facts it was held that the prisoner was not guilty of larceny of the warrants, but that he was guilty of taking the warrants for a fraudulent purpose within the meaning of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 30 (post, p. 493). R. v. Bailey, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 347; 41 L. J. (M. C.) 61. Cf. R. v. Jones, 1 Den. 188; 2 C. & K. 236 (post, p. 443). So where the captain of a ship, taken as a prize, secreted some of the cargo, and clandestinely removed it from the ship, it being doubtful whether he did so for his own benefit or for that of his owners, he was recommended for a free pardon; but the majority of the judges were of opinion that if the goods had been secreted for his own benefit, it would have amounted to larceny. R. v. Van Muyen, R. & R. 118. And where a person stole certain articles, and also took a horse, not with an intention to steal it, but merely to get off more conveniently with the property, this was held not to be a felonious stealing of the horse. R. v. Crump, 1 C. & P. 658. The Roman law recognized furtum usûs as an offence. See R. v. Fortuin [1883] 1 Buchanan (Cape Colony), 290. Where the prosecutor met the prisoner, whom he knew to be a poacher, and seized him, and the prisoner, being rescued, seized the gun of the prosecutor, and ran away with it, and subsequently was heard to say that he would sell it, and the gun was never afterwards heard of, Vaughan, B., upon an indictment for stealing the gun, told the jury that it would not be felony if the prisoner took the gun under an impression at the time that it might be used so as to endanger his life, and not with an intention of disposing of it, although he might afterwards have determined to dispose of it; and the jury, being of opinion that he had no intention of disposing of the gun at the time he took it, acquitted the prisoner. R. v. Holloway, 5 C. & P. 524. Where A., at the instigation of a police officer, concerted with three persons to commit a felony, in order that the officer might apprehend them, and upon their conviction receive the reward, which was to be divided between the officer and A., and A. with the others did commit the felony, it was held by the majority of the judges, that A. had not the felonious intention necessary to make him the principal, although he acted from a bad motive, namely, the reward, because he was present, not to aid and assist, but to detect, and had no intention that the felony should be successful. R. v. Dannelly, R. & R. 310; 2 Marsh. 571 (Ex. Ch.).

There are cases which go to establish that it is not necessary that the taking should be lucri causâ, if it be fraudulent, and with intent wholly to deprive the owner of the property. Thus, where a prisoner, to screen his accomplice, who was indicted for horse stealing, broke into the prosecutor's stable, and took away the horse, which he backed into a coal-pit and killed, and it was objected at the trial that this was not larceny, because the taking was not with an intention to convert the horse to the use of the taker, animo furandi et lucri causâ; seven of the judges held that it was larceny, and six of that majority were of opinion that, to constitute larceny, it was not essential that the taking should be lucri causâ, if it be fraudulent and with intent wholly to deprive the owner of the property; but some of this majority thought that the object of the prisoner might be deemed a benefit, and the taking lucri causâ. R. v. Cabbage, R. & R. 292. Again, where the prisoners, servants in husbandry, opened the granary of their master by means of a false key, and took thereout two bushels of beans to give to their master's horses, in addition to the quantity usually allowed, this was held larceny by a majority of the judges; but it was alleged by some of the judges that the additional quantity of beans would diminish the work of the men who had to look after the horses; and therefore the lucri causâ, to give themselves ease, was an ingredient in the offence. R. v. Morfit, R. & R. 307. See R. v. Gruncell, 9 C. & P. 365; R. v. Handley, C. & Mar. 547: R. v. Privett, 1 Den. 193; 2 C. & K. 114; which latter cases established that this was larceny, even if the intent of obtaining a private benefit be negatived. The law was altered by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 103, s. 1 (post, p. 464).

Where the defendant was supplied by his master with pig-iron to be put into a furnace to be melted, being paid according to the weight of the metal which ran out of the furnace into bars, and he put in also other iron belonging to his master, whereby the weight of the melted iron, being thus increased, he gained a larger remuneration, it was held that if he did this with the felonious intent of converting the iron to a purpose for his own profit, it was a larceny. R. v. Richards, 1 C. & K. 532, Tindal, C.J.: cf. R. v. Holloway, 1 Den. 370; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 60 (ante, p. 441). So, the secreting and destroying of a post-letter in the hope of suppressing inquiries supposed by the defendant to be made in it respecting her character, was held to be larceny. R. v. Jones, 1 Den. 188; 2 C. & K. 236 (C. C. R.). Cf. R. v. Bailey, L. R., 1 C. C. R. 347; 41 L. J. (M. C.) 61 (ante, p. 441). Money was given to the prisoner by the prosecutor, his master, for the purpose of paying a turnpike toll on his journey about his master's business. Some days afterwards the prisoner was asked by his master if he had paid the toll. He said that he had not, having gone by another road by which he had evaded the turnpike, and that he had spent the money on beer for himself and his mates. The prisoner was convicted of larceny of the money, but it not appearing, on a case reserved as to whether these facts proved a larceny, that the question of felonious intent had been distinctly left to the jury, the conviction was quashed. R. v. Deering, 11 Cox, 298 (C. C. R.). Cockburn, C.J., Bramwell, B., and Montague Smith, J., seemed to be of opinion that the facts did not disclose any felonious intent. Id. 300, 301.

"Take."]—There must be a taking of the goods, either actual or constructive, in order to constitute larceny. At common law it was not larceny for a wife to carry away and convert to her own use the goods of her husband, for husband and wife were regarded as one person in law, and consequently there could be no taking so as to constitute larceny; 1 Hale, 514; 1 Hawk. c. 33, s. 32; and the same if the husband were jointly interested with others in the property so taken. R. v. Willis, 1 Mood. C. C. 375. Nor at common law could the husband be guilty of larceny of his wife's goods, as her goods became his property on the marriage, 2 Bl. Com. by Kerr, 388. But the common law has been very materially modified by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), under which a married woman may hold property in her own name separately from her husband, and he may, under certain circumstances set forth in s. 12 of that statute (ante, p. 60), be indicted for stealing it from his wife. And as the husband may be guilty of stealing from the wife, the wife may also be guilty of stealing from the husband, for "a wife doing any act with respect to any property of her husband, which, if done by the husband with respect to property of the wife, would make the husband liable to criminal proceedings by the wife under this Act, shall, in like manner, be liable to criminal proceedings by her husband." 45 & 46 Vict. c. 75, s. 16. The acts which, if done by the husband with respect to property of the wife, would make him liable to criminal proceedings by the wife under this Act are to be found in 45 & 46 Vict. c. 75, s. 12 (ante, p. 60; see also post, p. 459).

Larceny of property by the owner or joint owner.]—The prisoner assigned his goods by deed to trustees for the benefit of his creditors. No manual possession was taken by the trustees under the assignment, but the prisoner himself remained in possession of the goods, and whilst in such possession he removed the goods, intending fraudulently to deprive the creditors of them. The jury found the prisoner guilty of larceny, at the same time finding that the goods were not in the prisoner's custody as the agent of the trustees. Under these circumstances it was held that the verdict of guilty was wrong, as the prisoner being in lawful possession of the goods could not be convicted of larceny. R. v. Pratt, Dears. 360; 6 Cox, 373 (C. C. R.). So, if a man take his own goods, it is no larceny, unless they be in the hands of a bailee, and the taking of them have the effect of charging the bailee. Where thirty bales of nux vomica, which paid no duty upon exportation, but a large duty if intended for home consumption, deposited by A. with B., who gave the usual bond to the custom-house, were sent by B., under the care of C., to be shipped on board a foreign vessel for exportation, and A., by collusion with C., took the nux vomica from the bales, substituted cinders for it, and shipped the bales on board the vessel, this was held, by a majority of the judges, to be larceny, because the taking rendered B. chargeable to the custom-house, and liable to a suit upon his bond. R. v. Wilkinson, R. & R. 470: and see R. v. Wadsworth, 10 Cox, 557. If one of several joint-tenants or tenants in common of a personal chattel, carry away and dispose of it, this is not larceny at common law; 1 Hale, 513; there was, in fact, no taking, for he was already in possession; it was merely the subject of an action of account, or bill in equity. But if he had taken it out of the possession of a person in whose hands it was for safe custody, and the effect of the taking would have been to charge the bailee, that was held to be a larceny at common law; as where a member of a benefit society entered the room of a person with whom a box containing the funds of the society was deposited, and took and carried it away, this was held to be larceny, the bailee being answerable to the society for the funds. R. v. Bramley, R. & R. 478. So also where the prisoner, a member of an industrial society, fraudulently took money from the shop of the society, which was under the management of H., another member, who was responsible for all moneys coming into his possession, the prisoner was held to have been rightly convicted of larceny on an indictment laying the property in the money in H. R. v. Webster, L. & C. 77; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 17; 9 Cox, 13 (C. C. R.). So, where the prisoner, a member of a co-operative society and one of the committee of management, fraudulently took money from the society's shop, where B., a servant of the society, sold its goods and received payments and was accountable for the money, the prisoner was held to have been rightly convicted of larceny on an indictment laying the property in the money in B. R. v. Burgess, L. & C. 299; 32 L. J. (M. C.) 185.

By the Larceny Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 116), s. 1 (ante, p. 432), theft by member of co-partnership and joint beneficial owner is punishable in the same way as if they had not had any interest in the thing stolen. See R. v. Smith, L. R., 1 C. C. R. 266; 39 L. J. (M. C.) 112. An association having for its object not the acquisition of gain, but the mental improvement of its members, is not a "co-partnership" within the meaning of 31 & 32 Vict. c. 116. R. v. Robson, 16 Q. B. D. 137; 55 L. J. (M. C.) 55. But persons who have the control and disposition of money, or who have the power of devoting it, for the purpose of their enjoyment or amusement are beneficial owners within the statute. R. v. Neat, 69 L. J. (Q. B.) 118; 16 T. L. R. 109 (C. C. R.; 19 Cox, 424). In that case money collected for a fête by a committee was appropriated by a member of the committee. The offence created by 31 & 32 Vict. c. 116, s. 1, is a felony, and therefore the word "feloniously" is properly used in an indictment for such offence. R. v. Butterworth, 12 Cox, 132 (C. C. R.). Where the property is laid in the individual beneficial owners, who together form an association which is illegal under the Companies Acts, the indictment is good. R. v. Tunkard [1894] 1 Q. B. 548: 63 L. J. (M. C.) 61, C. C. R. (and see post, p. 564).

Larceny of goods found.]—It was at one time considered that if a man lost goods, and another found them, and, not knowing the owner, converted them to his own use, this was not larceny, 3 Co. Inst. 108; 1 Hawk. c. 33, s. 2, even although he denied the finding of them or secreted them. 1 Hale, 506. But this doctrine was always treated as subject to narrow limitations. Id.: 2 East, P. C. 664: R. v. Kerr, 8 C. & P. 176: R. v. Reed, C. & Mar. 306: R. v. Peters, 1 C. & K. 245: R. v. Mole, Id. 417. And the true rule of law resulting from the authorities on this subject has been pronounced to be, that, "if a man finds goods that have been actually lost, or are reasonably supposed by him to have been lost, and appropriates them, with intent to take the entire dominion over them, really believing, when he takes them, that the owner cannot be found, it is not larceny; but if he takes them, with the like intent, though lost, or reasonably supposed to be lost, but reasonably believing that the owner can be found, it is larceny." R. v. Thurborn, 1 Den. 387; 2 C. & K. 831; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 140 (C. C. R.): R. v. Dixon, Dears. 580; 25 L. J. (M. C.) 39 (C. C. R.): R. v. Shea, 7 Cox, 147 (C. C. R. Ir.); R. v. Christopher, Bell, 27; 28 L. J. (M. C.) 35 (C. C. R.); and where property has been left by a passenger in a train or coach it would seem always to have been treated as larceny, if a servant of the railway company or coach owner appropriated it instead of taking it to the lost property office. See R. v. Pierce, 6 Cox, 117. In R. v. Moore, L. & C. 1; 30 L. J. (M. C.) 77 (C. C. R.), on an indictment for stealing a bank-note, the jury found that the prosecutor had dropped the note in the defendant's shop; that the defendant had found it there; that at the time he picked it up he did not know, nor had he reasonable means of knowing, who the owner was; that he afterwards acquired knowledge who the owner was, and after that converted the note to his own use; that he intended, when he found the note, to take it to his own use, and deprive the owner of it, whoever he was; and that he believed, when he found it, that the owner could be found. It was held, that, upon these findings, the defendant was rightly convicted of larceny. It is to be observed, that in the last-mentioned case, although the prisoner at the time he found the bank-note did not know, nor had reasonable means of knowing, who the owner was, yet that he did believe at the time of the finding that the owner could be found. The case of R. v. Glyde, L. R., 1 C. C. R. 139; 37 L. J. (M. C.) 107, shows that the belief by the prisoner at the time of the finding of the chattel that he could find the owner, is a necessary ingredient in the offence, and that it is not sufficient that he intended to appropriate the chattel at the time of finding it, and that he acquired the knowledge of who the owner was before he converted it to his own use. In that case the prisoner found a sovereign on the highway, believing it had been accidentally lost; but, nevertheless, with the knowledge that he was doing wrong, he at once determined to appropriate it, notwithstanding it should become known to him who the owner was. The owner was speedily made known to him, and the prisoner refused to give up the sovereign. There was, however, no evidence that he believed, at the time of finding the sovereign, that he could ascertain who the owner was, and the prisoner was therefore held not to be guilty of larceny. In R. v. Deaves, 11 Cox, 227; Ir. Rep., 3 C. L. 306, the facts were that the prisoner's child, having found six sovereigns in the street, brought them to the prisoner, who counted them and told some bystanders that the child had found a sovereign. The prisoner and the child then went down the street to the place where the child had found the money, and found a half-sovereign and a bag. On the same evening, about two hours after the finding, the prisoner was told that a woman had lost money, upon which the prisoner told her informant to mind her own business and gave her half a sovereign. It was held by the majority of the Irish Court of Criminal Appeal, that this case could not be distinguished from R. v. Glyde, supra, that there was nothing to show that at the time the child brought her the money the prisoner knew the property had an owner, or, at all events, to show that she was under the impression that the owner could be found, and that therefore the conviction of the prisoner for larceny must be quashed. The proper question to be put to the jury is not whether they are satisfied that the prisoner could have found the owner, but whether they are satisfied that the prisoner himself believed that he could have found the owner. R. v. Knight, 12 Cox, 102 (C. C. R.). It is clearly larceny, if the defendant at the time he finds and appropriates the lost property, knows the owner; and, therefore, where a bureau was given to a carpenter to repair, and he found money secreted in it, which he kept and converted to his own use, it was held to be a larceny. Cartwright v. Green, 8 Ves. 405; 2 Leach, 952; 7 R. R. vi., 99. So if a hackney coachman convert to his own use a parcel left by a passenger in his coach by mistake, it is felony, if he know the owner, or if he took him or set him down at any particular place where he might have inquired for him. R. v. Wynne, 2 East, P. C. 664; 1 Leach, 413: R. v. Lamb, 2 East, P. C. 664: R. v. Sears, 1 Leach, 415, n. So, in every case where the property is not, properly speaking, lost, but only mislaid, under circumstances which would enable the owner to know where to look for and find it (as where a purchaser at a stall of the defendant in a market left his purse on the stall), the person who fraudulently appropriates property so mislaid is guilty of larceny. R. v. West, Dears. 402; 24 L. J. (M. C.) 4. Where a person purchased at an auction, a bureau, in which he afterwards discovered, in a secret drawer, a purse of money, which he appropriated to his own use, it was held that, if he had express notice that the bureau only, and not its contents, if any, were sold to him, or if he had no reason to believe that anything more than the bureau itself was sold, the abstraction of the money was a felonious taking, and he was guilty of larceny: but that, if he had reasonable ground for believing that he bought the bureau with its contents, if any, he had a colourable right to the property, and it was no larceny. Merry v. Green, 7 M. & W. 623; 10 L. J. (M. C.) 154. And in every case in which there is any mark upon the property by which the owner may be traced, or means of knowing who the owner is, and the finder, instead of restoring the property, converts it to his own use, such conversion will amount to larceny. R. v. Preston, 2 Den. 353; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 41: R. v. Pope, 6 C. & P. 346: R. v. Mole, 1 C. & K. 417. But unless at the time of the finding the defendant had the means of knowledge who the owner was, or reasonably believed that he could be found, and had also at the time of the finding an intention of appropriating the property to his own use, his subsequent appropriation of the property, with such means of knowledge, will not of itself be such a conversion as to amount to larceny. R. v. Thurborn (ante, p. 445): R. v. Preston, ubi supra: R. v. York, 1 Den. 335; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 38; 2 C. & K. 841: R. v. Dixon (ante, p. 445): R. v. Christopher (ante, p. 445): R. v. Matthews, 12 Cox, 489 (C. C. R.). A boy having found a lost cheque, the prisoner by some pretence got it from him, and kept it in hopes of getting a reward, but not being satisfied with the reward offered by the owner, he refused to deliver it either to the owner or to the boy. Under this state of facts it was held that the prisoner could not be convicted of stealing the cheque either from the owner or the boy. R. v. Gardner, L. & C. 243; 32 L. J. (M. C.) 35: 9 Cox, 253 (C. C. R.).

Where the finder of a lost purse containing money and documents retained it, not feloniously but in the hope of a reward, and showed it to the prisoner in order to get his opinion as to the amount of the reward likely to be offered, and for this purpose handed the purse and its contents to the prisoner to examine, and the prisoner retained the purse and its contents against the will of the finder, it was held that the prisoner could be convicted of larceny on a count laying the property in the finder. R. v. Swinson, 64 J. P. 72, Bosanquet, Common Sergeant.

Constructive taking.]—We have just said that the taking may be actual or constructive: actual, where the goods have been actually taken out of the owner's possession, against his will or without his consent, and which requires no further comment or illustration: constructive, where the owner delivers the goods, but either he does not thereby divest himself of the legal possession, or the possession of the goods has been obtained from him by fraud, and in pursuance of a previous intent to steal them. The cases of constructive taking may be classed under the following heads: —(1) Where, by the delivery the owner of the goods passes not only the possession, but the right of property also. (2) Where the possession has been obtained animo furandi. (3) Where the possession was originally obtained bonâ fide, and without a felonious intent. (4) Where the delivery does not alter the possession in law.

1. Obtaining property in goods by fraud, etc.]—As to the cases where, by a delivery of the goods, not only the possession, but the right of property also, passes.—It is well established that if the owner, of his own free will, part with the property in the goods taken, there can be no felony in the taking, however fraudulent were the means by which the delivery of the goods was procured; R. v. MacGrath, L. R., 1 C. C. R. 205; 39 L. J. (M. C.) 7: R. v. Lovell, 8 Q. B. D. 185; 50 L. J. (M. C.) 90: 2 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 141; 2 East, P. C. 668; and it is clear that no subsequent conversion by the person in whom the right of property has thus vested, can be construed into larceny, whatever the intent of the party may be. As, for instance, where goods are sold upon credit and delivered, no conversion of them by the vendee can amount to larceny. Where the defendant bought a horse, at a fair, of the prosecutor, to whom he was known, and having mounted the horse, said to the prosecutor that he would return immediately and pay him, to which the prosecutor answered, "Very well:" the defendant rode the horse away, and never returned; this was held to be no larceny, because the property, as well as the possession, was parted with. R. v. Harvey, 1 Leach, 467; 2 East, P. C. 669; 3 R. R. 714. So, where the defendant sent to a hatter, in the name of one of his customers, for a hat, and it was accordingly delivered to the messenger upon the credit of the customer; the judges held that this was not larceny, the owner having parted with his property in the hat. R. v. Adams, R. & R. 225; 2 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 145. So, where a woman obtained from the prosecutor, in the name of one of his neighbours, half a guinea's worth of silver, and said that she would return presently with the half guinea, it was held not to be larceny for the same reason. R. v. Coleman, 2 East, P. C. 672. So, where A. allowed B. to take a sovereign away to get change for it, and he never returned, this was held no larceny of the sovereign. R. v. Thomas, 9 C. & P. 741. So, where the defendant sent a letter to the prosecutor in the name of another person, requesting the loan of £3 for a few days, and obtained the money accordingly; eleven of the judges held this to be no felony, because it appeared that the property in the money was intended to pass by the delivery. R. v. Atkinson, 2 East, P. C. 673. So, where the defendant obtained goods of a tradesman by means of a forged order from a customer. R. v. Adams, 1 Den. 38. And where the prosecutor was inveigled by a set of sharpers to bet with them, and, by a preconcerted trick, one of them won from him the money in question, which he paid, imagining it to have been won fairly: the judges held that it was no larceny, the prosecutor having parted with his property in the money under the idea that it had been fairly won. R. v. Nicholson, 2 Leach, 610. And where the goods are obtained not from the owner, but from his servant, who has an authority co-equal with his master, and parts with his master's goods, intending to part with the property in them, such goods cannot be said to be stolen, inasmuch as the servant intends to part with the property in them, and has authority to do so. R. v. Prince, L. R., 1 C. C. R. 150; 38 L. J. (M. C.) 8. If, however, the servant's authority is so limited, then he can only part with the possession and not with the property; if he is tricked out of the possession, the offence so committed will be larceny. In R. v. Longstreeth, 1 Mood. C. C. 137 (post, p. 454), the carrier's servant had no authority to part with the goods, except to the consignee. His authority was not to act generally in his master's business, but limited in that way. The offence was in that case held to be larceny on that ground, and this distinguishes it from R. v. Jackson, 1 Mood. C. C. 119, infra, which the same judges, or at any rate some of them, had shortly before decided. There, the servant from whom the goods were obtained, had a general authority to act for his master, and the person who obtained the goods was held not to be guilty of larceny. See the judgment of Blackburn, J., in R. v. Prince, L. R., 1 C. C. R., at p. 155; 38 L. J. (M. C.) 11. And therefore where a person obtained money from the cashier of a bank by presenting, knowing it to be forged, a forged order purporting to be drawn by a customer of the bank, this was held not to be larceny, because the cashier, in paying the money, was acting within the scope of his general authority. R. v. Prince, ubi supra. So, where the defendant bought goods and desired them to be sent to him with a bill and a receipt, and the shopman who brought them left them, upon being paid for them by two bills, which, however, afterwards turned out to be mere fabrications; the judges held that this was not larceny, because the prosecutor had parted with the property, as well as the possession, upon receiving what was deemed at the time by his servant to be payment. R. v. Parkes, 2 Leach, 614; 2 East, P. C. 671. Where the servant of a pawnbroker, who had a general authority from his master to act in his business, delivered up a pledge to the pawner upon receiving a parcel, which he supposed to contain diamonds, and under that belief parted with the pledge entirely, but the parcel contained stones of no value, this was held to be no larceny. R. v. Jackson, 1 Mood. C. C. 119. And see R. v. Barnes, 2 Den. 59; 30 L. J. (M. C.) 34 (C. C. R.); R. v. Essex, Dears. & B. 371; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 20 (C. C. R.). The subjects above referred to in this paragraph were fully considered in R. v. Middleton, L. R., 2 C. C. R. 38; 42 L. J. (M. C.) 73 (C. C. R.). In that case the prisoner was a depositor in a post-office savings bank, in which 11*s.* stood to his credit. He gave notice in the ordinary form to withdraw 10*s.*, and a warrant for that amount was issued to him, and a letter of advice was sent to the post-office at N. to pay him 10*s.* He went to that office and handed his deposit-book and the warrant to the clerk. The clerk, instead of referring to the proper letter of advice for 10*s.*, referred by mistake to another letter of advice for £8 16*s.* 10*d.*, and placed the latter amount upon the counter. The clerk entered the amount paid, £8 16*s.* 10*d.*, in the prisoner's deposit-book and stamped it. The prisoner took up the money and went away, having at the moment of taking it up an animus furandi, and knowing the money to be the money of the postmaster-general. Upon these facts, it was held by eleven of the judges that the prisoner was guilty of larceny, and by four he was not. Seven of the eleven held that, even assuming the clerk to have the same authority to part with the possession of and property in the money which the postmaster-general, the owner, would have had, the mere delivery under a mistake, though with the intention of passing the property, did not pass the property, and that as the property did not actually pass, although it was intended to pass, and as the prisoner took up the money animo furandi, there was both a taking and a stealing within the definition of larceny. Three of the eleven held the prisoner guilty of larceny, on the ground that the clerk had only a limited authority to part with the money to the person named in the letter of advice, and, therefore, no property passed to the prisoner, and the prisoner took up the money animo furandi. One of the eleven held the prisoner guilty on the ground that the mistaken act of the clerk in placing the money on the counter stopped short of placing it completely in the prisoner's possession, and that his subsequently taking it up was larceny. The minority, consisting of four judges, who held that the prisoner was not guilty, based their opinion on the ground that the clerk had a general authority to part with the property in the money, and that he intended, although acting under a mistake, to part with such property to the prisoner at the time he handed over the money to him, and that having such general authority and such intention, and acting upon them, there was no felonious taking by the prisoner without the consent and against the will of the owner. See also R. v. Hollis, 12 Q. B. D. 25; 53 L. J. (M. C.) 38 (post, p. 453): R. v. Hehir, 18 Cox, 267 (C. C. R. Ir.). As to the effect on the right to a restitution order of the transfer of property in goods by means not amounting to larceny, see ante, p. 266, 268.

Whether, when property is given by the owner to a person under a mistake of which the latter was not aware when he received it, and afterwards, on finding out the mistake, he fraudulently converts such property to his own use, such person is guilty of larceny, is a question which, after having been argued before fourteen judges, still remains unsettled, seven of their lordships having answered it in the affirmative, and seven in the negative. R. v. Ashwell, 16 Q. B. D. 190; 55 L. J. (M. C.) 65, and see R. v. Riley, post, p. 457. The facts of that case were that the prisoner asked the prosecutor for the loan of a shilling. The prosecutor gave the prisoner a sovereign, believing it to be a shilling, and the prisoner took the coin under the same belief. Some time afterwards he discovered that the coin was a sovereign, and then fraudulently appropriated it to his own use. The prisoner having been convicted of larceny of the sovereign, it was held by the Court for Crown Cases Reserved that the prisoner had not been guilty of larceny as a bailee, but the court being equally divided as to whether the prisoner had been guilty of larceny at common law, the conviction stood. Id. R. v. Ashwell does not affect the old rule of law that the innocent receipt of a chattel, coupled with its subsequent fraudulent appropriation, does not amount to larceny. R. v. Flowers, 16 Q. B. D. 643; 55 L. J. (M. C.) 179. See Stephen, Dig. Cr. L. (6th ed.), p. 261.

Larceny by a trick.]—Where a man, having the animus furandi (see ante, p. 440), obtains, in pursuance thereof, possession of goods by some trick or artifice (the owner not intending to part with his entire right of property, but with the temporary possession only (Cr. L. Com. 4th Rep., p. 50), this is considered such a taking (even although there be a delivery in fact) as to constitute larceny: see 1 Hawk. c. 33, ss. 15–23. Where the defendant offered to give the prosecutor gold for bank-notes, and upon the prosecutor's laying down some bank-notes, for the purpose of having them changed for gold, the defendant took them up, and went away with them, promising to return immediately with the notes, but never in fact returned; Wood, B., said that the property in the notes had never been parted with at all, and left it to the jury to say, whether the defendant had the animus furandi at the time he took the notes, and said, that if they were of that opinion the case clearly amounted to larceny. R. v. Oliver, 4 Taunt. 274 cit.; 2 Leach, 1072; see R. v. Rodway, 9 C. & P. 784. The prisoner at a race-meeting made a bet with the prosecutor, laying odds against a particular horse, and the money for which the prosecutor backed the horse was deposited with the prisoner. The prosecutor admitted that he would have been satisfied although he did not receive back the same coins. The horse won, but while the race was being run the prisoner fraudulently went off with the money. It was held that as it appeared that the prosecutor parted with his money with the intention that in the event of the horse winning it should be repaid, while the prisoner obtained possession of the money fraudulently, never intending to repay it in any event, there was no contract by which the property in the money could pass to the prisoner, and therefore there was evidence of larceny by trick. R. v. Buckmaster, 20 Q. B. D. 182; 57 L. J. (M. C.) 25. Where the defendant agreed to discount a bill for the prosecutor, and the bill was given to him for that purpose; he told the prosecutor that if he then sent a person with him to his lodgings, he would give him the amount, deducting the discount and commission; a person was sent accordingly, but, upon reaching the lodgings, the defendant left the messenger there, and went out on pretence of getting the money, but never returned: the judge left it to the jury to say whether the defendant obtained possession of the bill with intent to steal it, and whether the prosecutor meant to part with his property in the bill, before he should have received the money for it: the jury being of opinion in the affirmative on the first proposition, and in the negative on the second, convicted the prisoner, and the judges afterwards held the conviction to be right. R. v. Aickles, 2 East, P. C. 675; 1 Leach, 294. Where the defendant obtained from a silversmith two cream-ewers, in order that the customer of the silversmith, with whom the defendant said he lived, might select which he liked best, and absconded with them, but the silversmith did not charge for either of the ewers, and did not at the time of the delivery intend to charge for either of them until he had ascertained which would be chosen, this was held by Bayley, J., to be larceny, because the possession only, and not the right of property, had been parted with: R. v. Davenport, MS., 1 Archbold's Peel's Acts (3rd ed.), 271; 2 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 146. So, where the prisoner went to a shop and said that A. wanted some shawls to look at, and the prosecutor gave her five shawls, which she converted to her own use, it was held by Patteson, J., that as the property in the shawls would continue in the prosecutor until the selection was made, it was larceny if A. did not send for them; but there being no evidence that A. did not send for them, the prisoner was acquitted, because it was assumed, in the absence of such evidence, that A. did send her, that she received the shawls properly, and that she only conceived the design of wrongfully converting them to her own use, after she had rightfully obtained possession of them. R. v. Savage, 5 C. & P. 143; 2 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 146. Where the defendant prevailed upon a tradesman to take goods to a particular place, under pretence that the price would then be paid for them, and afterwards induced him to leave the goods in the care of a third person, from whom the defendant got the goods without paying the price, the tradesman swore that he did not intend to part with the goods until they were paid for, and the jury found that the defendant, ab initio, intended to get the goods without paying for them; this was held to be larceny. R. v. Campbell, 1 Mood. C. C. 179. So where the defendant induced a tradesman to send his goods by a servant to a particular place, with change for a crown piece, and on the way met the servant, and giving him a counterfeit crown piece, induced him to part with the goods and change, which he had no authority to do without receiving payment; this was held to be larceny. R. v. Small, 8 C. & P. 46. So, where the prisoners ordered goods of the prosecutor, and the latter sent them to their house by his servant with strict injunctions not to part with them without receiving the price, and the prisoners gave the servant a cheque which they knew to be worthless, upon which he left the goods with them; this was held to be larceny. R. v. Stewart, 1 Cox, 174. If the owner had himself carried the goods and parted with them as the servant did, no doubt it would have been a case of false pretences; or if the servant had had a general authority to act, it would have been the same as if the master acted. But in this instance he had a limited authority which he chose to exceed. If the prisoners intended to get possession of these goods by giving a piece of waste paper, which they had no reasonable ground to believe would be of use to anybody, and the servant had received positive instructions not to leave the goods without cash payment, the charge of larceny is made out. Per Alderson, B., in R. v. Stewart, supra. See also R. v. Longstreeth, 1 Mood. C. C. 137 (post, p. 454). So, where the defendant having bargained for goods, which, by the custom of trade, should have been paid for before they were taken away, took them away without the consent of the owner, and when he bargained for them did not intend to pay for them, but meant to get them into his own possession, and dispose of them for his own benefit; this was held to be larceny. R. v. Gilbert, 1 Mood. C. C. 185. And where the defendant, intending ab initio to get goods by fraud, had them put into his cart upon the express condition that they should be paid for before they were taken out of the cart, and then took them out of the cart without paying for them, and converted them; this was held to be larceny. R. v. Pratt, 1 Mood. C. C. 250; R. v. Cohen, 2 Den. 249 (C. C. R.). The prosecutor sold goods to the prisoner, who agreed to pay ready money for them, and the goods were then delivered by the prosecutor to the prisoner, who then refused either to pay the money or restore the goods, having never intended to pay for them, and having meditated the fraud from the beginning; this was held to be larceny. R. v. Slowly, 12 Cox, 269 (C. C. R.). So, obtaining money or goods by the practice of ring dropping (as it is termed) has been held to be larceny. Thus, where the defendant in the presence of the prosecutor, picked up a purse in the street, containing a receipt for 147*l.* for a "rich brilliant diamond ring," and also the ring itself, it was then proposed that the ring should be given to the prosecutor, upon his depositing his watch and some money, as a security that he would return the ring as soon as his proportion of the value of it should be paid to him by the defendant; the prosecutor accordingly deposited his watch and money, which were taken away by some of the defendant's confederates; but the ring turned out to be of the value of 10*s.* only, and the watch and money were never returned: it was left to the jury to say, whether this was not an artful and preconcerted scheme to get possession of the prosecutor's watch and money; and the jury, being of that opinion, convicted the defendant. R. v. Patch, 1 Leach, 238. In R. v. Moore, 1 Leach, 314; 2 East, P. C. 679, the defendant being convicted of larceny under the same circumstances, and the case being reserved for the opinion of the judges, nine of them were of opinion that this practice of ring dropping amounted to larceny; and they distinguished it from the case of a loan; for here, although the possession was parted with the property in the goods was not. See also R. v. Watson, 2 Leach, 640; 2 East, P. C. 680. On the same principle it has been held, that a gipsy who obtains and keeps money or goods by a false pretence of witchcraft, the person from whom she obtains them merely intending to part with the possession and expecting them to be returned, is guilty of larceny. R. v. Bunce, 1 F. & F. 523, Channell, B. Where the defendant, in the presence of the prosecutor, picked up a purse containing a watch chain and two seals, which the defendant and his confederate represented to be gold, and worth 18*l.*, and the prosecutor purchased the defendant's share for 7*l.*, intending to part with the property in the money as well as the possession of it, Coleridge, J., held that this was not larceny. R. v. Wilson, 8 C. & P. 111. So, where the prisoner by means of what is known as the purse trick, induced the prosecutor to give him a shilling for a purse, by showing the prosecutor three shillings, and then making it appear as if the prisoner had dropped them into the purse whereas he had in fact only dropped three halfpence into the purse, this was held not to be larceny but false pretences. R. v. Solomons, 17 Cox, 93 (C. C. R.). Where the defendants decoyed the prosecutor into a public-house, and then introduced the play of cutting, and one of them prevailed on the prosecutor, who did not play on his own account, to cut the cards for him; and then under the pretence that the prosecutor had cut the cards for himself, and lost, another of them swept his money off the table, and went away with it, it was considered to be a case in which it should be left to the jury to determine quo animo how the money was obtained; and that it would be felony should they find that the money was obtained upon a preconcerted plan to steal it. R. v. Horner, 1 Leach, 270; Cald. 295. So, where the prosecutor was induced, by a preconcerted plan, to deposit his money with one of the defendants, as a deposit upon a pretended bet, and the stakeholder afterwards, upon pretence that one of his confederates had won the wager, handed the money over to him; and it was left to the jury to say, whether, at the time the money was taken, there was not a plan that it should be kept, under the false colour of winning the bet, and the jury found that there was: this was held to be larceny; because at the time the defendants obtained the money from the prosecutor, he parted with the possession only, and the property was to pass eventually only if the other party won the wager. R. v. Robson, R. & R. 413. See R. v. Buckmaster, 20 Q. B. D. 182; 57 L. J. (M. C.) 25 (C. C. R.) (ante, p. 450). The prisoner agreed at a fair to sell a horse to the prosecutor for 23*l.*, of which 8*l.* was to be paid to the prisoner at once, and the remainder upon delivery of the horse. Prosecutor handed 8*l.* to the prisoner, who signed a receipt for the money; by the receipt it was stated that the balance was to be paid upon delivery. The prisoner never delivered the horse to the prosecutor, but caused it to be removed from the fair under circumstances from which the jury inferred that he had never intended to deliver it. It was held that the prisoner was rightly convicted of larceny by a trick of the 8*l.*, on the ground that the prosecutor had not intended to part with his property in the 8*l.*, until the prisoner had fulfilled his part of the bargain, which he never intended to do. R. v. Russett [1892] 2 Q. B. 312; 17 Cox, 534 (C. C. R.). This is a strong case, for the prosecutor in the course of his evidence said "I never expected to see the 8*l.* back, but to have the horse." Id. Where two men, J. and W., acting in concert, and intending to defraud the prosecutor, entered his shop, and by means of an artifice induced him to draw a cheque on his banker for 42*l.*, payable in the name of the prisoner J., and then to accompany J. to the bank to see it paid, on the understanding that they were to return to finish the transaction by the payment to the prosecutor of 42 sovereigns, and that the prisoner W. was to remain at the shop till they went to and returned from the bank; at the bank, by the prosecutor's desire, and in his presence, the banker handed four 10*l.* notes and two sovereigns to the prisoner J.; the prosecutor and J. then left the bank together, and while on their way back to the shop J. absconded with the notes and two sovereigns, which he and W., who had in the meantime gone off from the shop, appropriated to their own use; this was held to be a larceny by both prisoners of the notes and the two sovereigns, the prosecutor never having parted with the property in and possession of them, and J. having no more than the bare custody of them until the payment to the prosecutor of the 42 sovereigns. R. v. Johnson, 2 Den. 310; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 32 (C. C. R.). Where the defendant by false representations induced the prosecutrix to buy from him a dress for 25*s.*, promising that if she would do so he would give her another dress worth 12*s.*; then took a guinea from her hand, gave her a dress worth much less than a guinea, and refused to give her the other dress he had promised: this, it being found by the jury that it was part of the defendant's scheme to obtain the money by means of a pretended sale, was held to be larceny. R. v. Morgan, Dears. 395; 6 Cox, 408 (C. C. R.). Where the prisoner went into a shop and asked for change for half a crown, and the shopman gave him two shillings and sixpence, the prisoner held out the half-crown, and the shopman just took hold of it by the edge, but never actually got it into his custody, and the prisoner ran away with the change and the half-crown; upon an indictment for stealing the two shillings and sixpence, Parke, J., held it to be larceny, but doubted whether an indictment would lie for stealing the half-crown. R. v. Williams, 6 C. & P. 390. So also, where A. & B. went into a shop, and A. put down sixpence in silver and sixpence in copper, and asked the prosecutrix to give him one shilling in change, upon which she took one shilling from the till and put it on the counter beside the sixpence in silver and the sixpence in copper; A. then said to the prosecutrix that she might as well give him a florin and take it all; she took a florin from the till and put that on the counter, expecting she was to receive two shillings of the prisoner's money, and the prisoner went away with the florin; the prosecutrix did not discover her mistake till she was putting the change into the till, but at the same moment B. distracted her attention by asking the price of some article: it was held that the prosecutrix never intended to part with her property in the florin, till she had received two shillings of the prisoner's money, and that the offence was larceny. R. v. McKale, L. R., 1 C. C. R. 125; 37 L. J. (M. C.) 97. So where two persons by a series of tricks fraudulently induced a barmaid to pay over money of her master to them without having received from them in return the proper change, the barmaid having no authority to pay over the money without receiving the proper change, and having no intention of, or knowledge that she was so doing, it was held that they were guilty of larceny. R. v. Hollis, 12 Q. B. D. 25; 23 L. J. (M. C.) 38. Where a hosier, by the desire of the defendant, took a parcel of silk stockings to his lodging, out of which the defendant chose six pairs, which were laid on the back of a chair, the defendant then sent the prosecutor back to his shop for some articles, and, while he was absent, absconded with the stockings; the judges held, that this amounted to larceny, the defendant having clearly obtained possession of the goods animo furandi. R. v. Sharpless, 1 Leach, 93; 2 East, P. C. 675. So, where the prosecutor having told his servant in the defendant's hearing to go to S. and pay him some money, the defendant offered to take it, falsely stating that he lived a few doors from S., which statement induced the prosecutor to deliver the money to the defendant to take to S., instead of which he appropriated it to his own use; and the jury, finding the defendant guilty, stated that their verdict was founded on the belief that the defendant had obtained the money by a trick, intending at the time to appropriate it to his own use; the conviction was held right. R. v. Brown, Dears. 616 (C. C. R.). To constitute a larceny at common law, by a party to whom the goods have been delivered on hire, there must be not only an original intention to convert them to his own use, but a subsequent actual conversion: and a mere agreement by the hirer to accept a sum offered for the goods by the third party, who, however, did not intend to purchase unless his suspicions as to the honesty and right of the vendor to sell were removed, was held not to amount to such a conversion. R. v. Brooks, 8 C. & P. 295, Tindall, C.J. The question, however, as to larceny by the party hiring the goods which arose in R. v. Brooks and in R. v. Pear, 1 Leach, 212: 2 East, P. C. 685, 3 R. R. 703: R. v. Banks, R. & R. 441: R. v. Charlewood, 1 Leach, 409; 2 East, P. C. 689, 3 R. R. 706: R. v. Semple, 1 Leach, 420; 2 East, P. C. 691, 3 R. R. 709, will not now arise by reason of the provisions of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 3 (ante, p. 427) by which the fraudulent appropriation of property by bailees is declared to be larceny. (See post, p. 456). Where the prisoner went to an inn, on a fair-day, and desired the ostler to bring out his horse, and, upon the latter saying he did not know which was his horse, went into the stable, and pointing to a mare, said it was his, and the ostler brought out the mare, which the prisoner attempted to mount, but could not, the mare being frightened; upon which he desired the ostler to lead the mare out of the yard, which was done; but, before he could mount, the prisoner was detected and secured: Garrow, B., held this to be larceny. R. v. Pitman, 2 C. & P. 423. If a man, animo furandi, sue out a replevin, and by that means obtain the possession of another man's horse, and ride away with it: or by a fraudulent ejectment get possession of another's house, and carry away the goods out of it, he is guilty of larceny. 1 Hale, 507; 1 Hawk. c. 33, s. 12; 3 Co. Inst. 108: and see R. v. Farre, Kel. (J.) 43; 2 Leach, 1064, n. Where the defendant obtained the mail bags from the post-office, pretending that he was the mail guard, and then ran away with them; the jury, being of opinion that he got possession of them with intent to steal them, found him guilty; and the judges held the conviction to be right. R. v. Pearce, 2 East, P. C. 603. In this case the property did not pass, for the postmaster had no property in the mail bags to part with. 2 East, P. C. 673. Where the defendant, animo furandi, obtained goods from the servant of a carrier, by falsely pretending to be the person to whom the goods were directed, it was held to be larceny; because the servant had no authority to part with the goods but to the right person. R. v. Longstreeth, 1 Mood. C. C. 137. And where a carrier's servant left goods at the prisoner's house by mistake, but without any inducement from the prisoner, who, afterwards, knowing that they had been left by mistake, and did not belong to him, converted them to his own use; this was held to be larceny. R. v. Little, 10 Cox, 559. So, where the prosecutor, intending to sell his horse, sent his servant with it to a fair, but the servant had no authority to sell or deal with it in any way, and the defendant by fraud induced the servant to part with the possession of the horse, under colour of an exchange for another, intending all the while to steal it. This was held to be larceny. R. v. Sheppard, 9 C. & P. 121, Coleridge, J. T. J., the owner of a watch, sent it to be regulated to A., the person from whom he had bought it, and who had no authority to deliver it to anybody but the owner. The defendant fraudulently induced A. to believe that T. J. desired the watch to be sent by post to the postmaster at B., in a letter; and the watch, having been so sent, the defendant personated T. J., and induced the postmaster to deliver it to him as T. J. It was held that, on the receipt of the watch by the postmaster, the special property of A. ceased, and the general property of the owner, being unincumbered, drew to it the possession; that the postmaster had only the custody of the watch for the purpose of delivering it to the owner, and so his possession, being the possession of the owner, the obtaining of it by the defendant was a larceny from T. J. R. v. Kay, Dears. & B. 231; 26 L. J. (M. C.) 119 (C. C. R.). Where an "automatic box," the property of a company, was placed in a public passage, and was so constructed that upon a penny being placed in it a cigarette was ejected from it, and the prisoner, instead of putting a penny in the box, put into it a metal disc of the size of a penny, and so obtained a cigarette, it was held that he was guilty of larceny. R. v. Hands, 16 Cox, 188 (C. C. R.). Prosecutor was owner of a coal yard, at which coal and slack were sold; the price of slack being about half the price of coal. By the custom of the yard, with which the prisoner was acquainted, the carts were weighed on entering the yard empty, and after being loaded were again taken to the machine and weighed, and the weight of the coal on the cart being thus ascertained, the price was paid before the carts were permitted to leave the yard. The prisoner went to the yard with his cart, and asked for a load of coal, which was loaded on his cart by the prosecutor's servant. After the cart was loaded, the prisoner placed slack over the coal so as to conceal it, and took the cart to the weighing machine. Being asked by the man at the weighing-machine what he had in his cart, he replied "slack." The cart was then weighed, and, the contents having been paid for after the rate of slack, was driven away by the prisoner. It was held, that if the prisoner went into the yard with the preconceived plan of obtaining the coal by the above artifice, he might be convicted of stealing the coal. R. v. Bramley, L. & C. 21; 8 Cox, 468 (C. C. R.). Where the defendant, by artifice, obtained possession of a request-note at the India-House, by means of which he obtained a permit for a chest of tea belonging to the prosecutor (to whom he was a perfect stranger), and the chest of tea was thereupon delivered to him: the judges held this to be larceny, notwithstanding the possession had been obtained by means of a regular request-note and permit. R. v. Hench, R. & R. 163. A hosier in the Haymarket, having sent his apprentice with a parcel of stockings to Cheapside, the defendant met him on Ludgate Hill, and asked him where he was going; the apprentice answered to Mr. Heath's; the defendant replied, that he was the person, desired the boy to give him the parcel, and gave him a small parcel in return, to take home to his master: the boy accordingly gave him the parcel; but the parcel he took from him for his master contained nothing but old rags of no value: the judges held this to be larceny. R. v. Wilkins, 1 Leach, 520; 2 East, P. C. 673; and see Cundy v. Lindsay, 3 App. Cas. 459.

Distinction between larceny and obtaining by false pretences.]—These two cases so nearly resemble a few of the cases collected under the first head (ante, p. 449), as to create some difficulty in distinguishing them upon principle. They may be considered as very near the line which separates the one class of cases from the other. In such cases, it is more prudent to indict the defendant for obtaining goods, etc., by false pretences; because if upon an indictment for obtaining goods, etc., by false pretences, it be proved that the defendant obtained the goods, etc., under circumstances which in law amount to larceny, he will not upon that ground be entitled to an acquittal. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 88 (post, p. 593). Between the crime of false pretences and that of larceny the most intelligible distinction seems to be this:—In larceny the owner of the thing stolen has no intention to part with his property therein to the person taking it, although he may intend to part with the possession; in false pretences the owner does intend to part with his property in the money or chattel, but it is obtained from him by fraud. White v. Garden, 10 C. B. 919, 927, Talfourd, J.: R. v. Barnes, 2 Den. 59; 20 L. J.(M. C.) 34 (C. C. R.): R. v. Robins, 6 Cox, 420; Dears. 418 (C. C. R.). "If," says Parke, B., "a person, through the fraudulent representations of another, delivers to him a chattel, intending to pass the property in it, the latter cannot be indicted for larceny, but only for obtaining the chattel under false pretences." Powell v. Hoyland, 6 Ex. 67, 70: R. v. Adams, R. & R. 225: Cundy v. Lindsay, ubi supra: Bentley v. Vilmont, 12 App. Cas. 471.

Where a man, having the animus furandi (see ante, p. 440), obtains possession of goods by frightening the owner, as by threatening him with temporary imprisonment unless he delivers up his goods, and the owner does deliver them under the influence of the fear inspired by this threat, this is considered such a taking (although there is a delivery in fact) as to constitute larceny. R. v. MacGrath, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 205; 39 L. J. (M. C.) 7: R. v. Lovell, 8 Q. B. D. 185; 50 L. J. (M. C.) 90. The prisoner, acting as auctioneer at a mock auction, knocked down a piece of cloth to the prosecutrix for 26*s.*, she not having bid, as he knew. The prosecutrix denied that she had bid; the prisoner asserted that she had, and must pay before she could leave the auction room. The prosecutrix tried to go out of the room, when a confederate of the prisoner prevented her doing so. She then in fear paid the 26*s.*, and took away the cloth which was given to her. These facts were held to constitute a larceny of the 26*s.* R. v. Macgrath, supra. The learned judges who decided this case expressed a doubt whether upon these facts the prisoner might not have been indicted for robbery, but they all agreed that even if a robbery had in fact been committed, that did not preserve the prisoner from the liability to be convicted of larceny, as a robbery includes a larceny. See the judgment of Blackburn, J., in R. v. Macgrath, supra. As to whether the facts in that case would have sustained an indictment for robbery, see R. v. Knewland, 2 Leach, 721: R. v. Wood, 2 East, P. C. 732, from which it would seem that they would not.

3. Larceny as a bailee.]—At common law, where goods were delivered to a man upon trust, or taken by him lawfully and bonâ fide and without any fraudulent design and with the owner's consent, he was not guilty of larceny by converting them to his own use. Therefore, in all cases where goods were borrowed or hired from the owner, or were delivered by the owner to another to have work done upon them, or cattle were delivered to be agisted, or the like, and so in all other cases where goods were in the possession of a bailee, and he, while the contract of bailment subsisted, converted the goods to his own use, this was not larceny, but only breach of trust: because the original taking was bonâ fide and rightful: unless, indeed, the jury found, on evidence warranting them in so finding, that the goods were originally obtained by the defendant from the owner animo furandi, or that the defendant received them, harbouring at the time an intention wrongfully to convert them to his own use. (See ante, p. 440 et seq.) It is, however, no longer necessary to refer to the numerous cases decided on this subject, many of which turned upon very nice distinctions, because, under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 3 (see ante, p. 427, and note), it is no longer a defence to an indictment for larceny, that the defendant originally received the goods in the character of a bailee. As to the former law, see R. v. Cornish, 6 Cox, 432, 433, n. (C. C. R.). For that statute enacts, that "whosoever, being a bailee of any chattel, money, or valuable security, shall fraudulently take or convert the same to his own use, or the use of any person other than the owner thereof, although he shall not break bulk or otherwise determine the bailment, shall be guilty of larceny, and may be convicted thereof upon an indictment for larceny; but this section shall not extend to any offence punishable on summary conviction." (See R. v. Wells, 1 F. & F. 109; and as to fraudulent misappropriation by persons entrusted with property, see 1 Edw. 7, c. 10, s. 1 (post, p. 475). Even before these statutes, although the goods had in the first instance been obtained without a felonious intent, yet if the possession of them was obtained by a trespass, the subsequent fraudulent appropriation of them, during the continuance of the same transaction, was a larceny. As where a man, driving a flock of sheep from a field, drove with them a sheep belonging to another person, without knowing that he had done so, but afterwards, when he discovered the fact, sold that sheep and appropriated the proceeds of the sale to his own use; he was held to be rightly convicted of larceny. R. v. Riley, Dears. 149; 22 L. J. (M. C.) 48 (C. C. R.). As a general rule a bailee cannot be convicted of larceny unless the bailment was to re-deliver the very same chattel or money. R. v. Hassall, L. & C. 58; 30 L. J. (M. C.) 175 (C. C. R.): R. v. Hoare, 1 F. & F. 647, Wightman, J.: R. v. Garrett, 2 F. & F. 14; 8 Cox, 368, Willes, J. A bailee is responsible when the article with which he has been intrusted is one which he is to return, or to deliver to somebody else, in specie; but he is not made responsible when he is at liberty, or is bound, to convert the particular article delivered to him into something else, before he returns it or delivers it to the other persons to whom he is instructed to deliver it. Re Bellencontre [1891] 2 Q. B. 122, at 137, Cave, J. The prosecutor gave a mare of his into the care of the prisoner, telling him that it was to be sold on the next Wednesday. On that day the prosecutor did not go himself to sell the mare, but sent his wife, who went to where the prisoner was, and saw him ride the mare about a horse-fair, and sell her, and receive on such sale some money. The prosecutor's wife then asked the prisoner to give her the money, saying she would pay his expenses, which, however, he declined to do, and he absconded with the money. The jury having found upon these facts that the prisoner had authority to sell the mare and had converted the money to his own use, it was held, Stephen, J., diss., that the prisoner was a bailee of the money so paid to him, and was rightly convicted of stealing it. R. v. De Banks, 13 Q. B. D. 29; 53 L. J. (M. C.) 132; Ex parte George, 18 Cox, 631. In R. v. Clegg [1869] Ir. Rep. 3 C. L. 166 (C. C. R.), C. had contracted with a salvage association to save cargo from a wrecked ship. He saved some and wrote saying so and what he had saved. He then sold part and appropriated the proceeds. Held that he could properly be convicted of larceny as a bailee. The prosecutor asked the prisoner to bring him half a ton of coals from a coal-staith, and gave him money to pay for them. The prisoner bought half a ton of coals accordingly in his own name. He then put the coals into his own cart, and on his way abstracted one cwt. of the coals, and afterwards delivered the residue to the prosecutor as the coals which he had required. The prisoner was not in the prosecutor's employment. On these facts it was held that the prisoner was guilty of larceny as a bailee, some of the judges thinking that the coals being purchased with money given by the prosecutor for that express purpose, the property in them vested in the prosecutor on the purchase; others holding that to make the prisoner a bailee there must be evidence of a specific appropriation of the coals to the prosecutor; and all the court agreed that there was evidence on the facts of such an appropriation. R. v. Bunkall, L. & C. 371; 33 L. J. (M. C.) 75 (C. C. R.),

The prosecutor placed a sum of money in the hands of the prisoner for the purpose of purchasing coals for the prosecutor from a colliery company, which coals the prisoner was to pay for with the money so placed in his hands by the prosecutor. The prisoner did not buy any coals, but fraudulently appropriated the money to his own use. On these facts he was held to have been rightly convicted of larceny as a bailee of the money so placed in his hands. R. v. Aden, 12 Cox, 512 (C. C. R.). A carter was employed by the owner of a cargo of coals to load the coals in the carter's own cart from the vessel, and deliver specified quantities to persons whose names were on a list given to him. He sold two loads of the coals fraudulently to persons whose names were not on the list, and appropriated the money to his own use. It was held that he was guilty of larceny as bailee of the two loads. R. v. Davies, 10 Cox, 239 (C. C. R.). The prosecutor delivered two brooches to the prisoner to sell for him at 200*l.* for one and 115*l.* for the other, and the prisoner was to have them for a period not exceeding ten days for that purpose. After the ten days had elapsed the prisoner sold the brooches, with other jewellery, for 250*l.*, but arranged with the vendee that he might redeem the brooches for 110*l.* before a certain time. The prisoner was held to be guilty of larceny as a bailee of the brooches, it having been his duty after the ten days had expired without his effecting a sale to return the brooches in specie to the prosecutor, whereas he had sold them after the ten days without the intention of repossessing himself of them so as to enable him to fulfil that duty. R. v. Henderson, 11 Cox, 593 (C. C. R.). Quære, whether if he had had such intention, that would have been a defence. In the judgment it is expressly said that that question did not arise in the case, as the jury must be taken to have found that he had no such intention. Id. Where the prisoner, a commercial traveller, was intrusted by the prosecutors with silk for sale, and it was his duty at the end of six months to send in an account for the entire six months, and to return the unsold silk, and before the end of the six months he appropriated the silk to his own use, he was held to be rightly convicted of larceny as a bailee. R. v. Richmond, 12 Cox, 495 (C. C. R.). Where the prisoner was indicted for larceny as bailee of a coat, and the evidence was that the prosecutor had lent the coat to the prisoner to wear for a day, and that some few days afterwards the prisoner left the town, and was found wearing the coat on board a vessel bound for Australia, Martin, B., stopped the case on the ground that there was no evidence of a conversion sufficient to satisfy the statute. The determination of the bailment, said his lordship, must be something analogous to larceny, and some act must be done inconsistent with the purposes of the bailment. R. v. Jackson, 9 Cox, 505. In order to bring a bailee within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 3, there must be a taking or conversion by him with the intention permanently to deprive the owner of his property. If he pledges the goods wrongfully, yet with the intention of redeeming them and restoring them to the owner, such a conversion by him does not come within this section; but if he pledges them with no intention of redeeming them and restoring them to the owner, but with the intention of depriving the owner of them altogether, he is guilty of a fraudulent conversion within the section. R. v. Wynn, 16 Cox, 231 (C. C. R.): R. v. Medland, 5 Cox, 292. The drawer of an accommodation bill for 30*l.* received it from the acceptor, upon an arrangement to get it cashed and pay over to the latter all the proceeds, except 3*l.*, which the drawer was to retain for his trouble. Instead of carrying out this arrangement, the drawer handed the bill to one of his creditors who was pressing him for payment of a debt for 10*l.*, in order that the creditor might discount the bill, and retain out of it his debt of 10*l.*, and then hand over the balance to the drawer. The creditor, however, did not carry out this arrangement, and detained the bill. On these facts it was held by Chambers (Common Serjeant), that although the drawer was a bailee of the bill within the meaning of the statute, yet that there was no conversion of it by him analogous to larceny, and therefore that an indictment against him for larceny as bailee of the bill could not be sustained. R. v. Weekes, 10 Cox, 224. Whilst in treaty with a firm of solicitors for the transfer of a public-house licence, the prisoner was required by them to give security for the purchase-money before they would assist him in procuring a transfer. To enable him to give the required security, the prosecutor accepted three bills of exchange drawn upon him by the prisoner, which it was agreed that the latter should deposit with the solicitors by way of security, and that he should not negotiate or use them for any other purpose, and if the transfer was not effected that he should return them to the prosecutor. The prisoner, who, instead of depositing the bills with the solicitors, applied two of them to other purposes for his own benefit, was held not to have been a bailee of the bills within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 3 (ante, p. 427). R. v. Cosser, 13 Cox, 187, Bramwell, B. But a person who receives a bill of exchange for the purpose of getting it discounted and handing the proceeds over to another, and instead of getting it discounted indorses it as his own to a creditor in payment of his account, intending to pass the property in the bill absolutely to the creditor, is a bailee of a valuable security, and guilty of a fraudulent conversion of the same to his own use, within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 3. R. v. Oxenham, 46 L. J. (M. C.) 125; 13 Cox, 349. In delivering the judgment of the court in this case, Coleridge, C.J., said that in his opinion the cases of R. v. Weekes and R. v. Cosser, supra, were rightly decided. See Re Bellencontre (ante, p. 457).

Even before the Married Women's Property Acts it was held that a married woman might be a bailee within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 3; R. v. Robson, L. & C. 93; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 22 (C. C. R.); overruling R. v. Denmour, 8 Cox, 440, Martin, B. And where an infant fraudulently converted to his own use goods which had been delivered to him by the owner under an agreement for their hire, it was held that he was rightly convicted of larceny as a bailee of the goods. R. v. Macdonald, 15 Q. B. D. 323; 15 Cox, 757 (C. C. R.).

At common law if the goods of a husband be taken with the consent or privity of the wife, it is not larceny. R. v. Harrison, 1 Leach, 47; R. v. Avery, Bell, 150; 28 L. J. (M. C.) 185 (C. C. R.). But if a woman steal the goods of her husband, and give them to her avowterer, who, knowing it, carries them away, the avowterer is at common law (or under the early statute, 13 Edw. 1, c. 34) guilty of felony; Dalt. c. 157; and where a stranger took the goods of the husband jointly with the wife, this was held to be larceny by him, he being her adulterer; R. v. Tolfree, 1 Mood. C. C. 243 (overruling R. v. Clark, 1 Mood. C. C. 376, n.): R. v. Featherstone, Dears. 369; 23 L. J. (M. C.) 127 (C. C. R.): R. v. Berry, Bell, 95; 28 L. J. (M. C.) 70 (C. C. R.): R. v. Flatman, 14 Cox, 396 (C. C. R.). And so it is, even though no adultery had then been committed, but the goods are taken with the intent that the wife shall elope and live in adultery with the stranger. R. v. Tollett, C. & Mar. 112, Coleridge, J.; R. v. Thompson, 1 Den. 549; 4 Cox, 191 (C. C. R.). And if a servant by direction of his master's wife, carries off his master's property, and the servant and wife go off together with the property with the intention of committing adultery, the servant may be indicted for stealing the property. R. v. Mutters, L. & C. 511; 34 L. J. (M. C.) 54; 10 Cox, 50 (C. C.

R.). It seems, however, that if a wife elopes with an adulterer, it is no larceny in the adulterer to assist in carrying away her necessary wearing apparel. R. v. Fitch, Dears. & B. 187; 26 L. J. (M. C.) 169; 7 Cox, 269 (C. C. R.); overruling on this point the direction of Coleridge, J., in R. v. Tollett, C. & Mar. 112. The prisoner, who had lodged at the prosecutor's house, left it, and the next day the prosecutor's wife also left, taking a bundle with her, which however was not large enough to contain the things which it was found had been taken away from the house on the evening when she left. Two days after, all the things were found in the prisoner's cabin, or on his person, in a ship in which the prosecutor's wife was, the prisoner and the prosecutor's wife having taken their passage in the ship as man and wife. It was held that from these facts the jury were justified in drawing the inference that the prisoner had received the property knowing it to have been stolen by some evilly disposed person. R. v. Deer, L. & C. 240; 32 L. J. (M. C.) 33; 9 Cox, 225 (C. C. R.). In that case it was clear that all the things which the prisoner was charged with receiving could not have been taken away by the prosecutor's wife, and therefore the jury were justified in concluding that some one, other than the prosecutor's wife, had actually stolen the goods, and that the prisoner had received them from that other person. If the goods had been taken by the prosecutor's wife and received by the prisoner from her, he could not have been convicted of receiving. For a wife, although she may have committed adultery, cannot at common law steal her husband's goods; and therefore the adulterer, receiving from her the goods which she has taken from her husband, cannot be guilty of receiving stolen goods. R. v. Kenny, 2 Q. B. D. 307; 46 L. J. (M. C.) 156. An adulterer cannot be convicted of stealing the goods of the husband brought by the wife to his house; in which the adultery is afterwards committed, merely upon evidence of their being there, unless they be traced to his personal possession. R. v. Rosenberg, 1 C. & K. 233. As to larceny by a wife of her husband's property see R. v. Streeter [1900] 2 Q. B. 601 (C. C. R.) post, p. 550. Where a wife took her husband's goods from a place within the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court, and was found committing adultery with the prisoner at Liverpool, the husband's goods being then in the prisoner's possession, but there was no evidence that the goods had been under the prisoner's control at any place within the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court, it was held that the prisoner could not be indicted in that court for larceny. R. v. Prince, 11 Cox, 145.

These authorities, so far as they depend on the common law, must now be read subject to the provisions of ss. 12, 16 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (ante, pp. 60, 443), which render one spouse liable to criminal proceedings for stealing the goods of the other when about to leave or desert the other. See R. v. James [1902] 1 K. B. 540 (C. C. R.).

4. Delivery of physical, without legal, possession.]—If a servant, who has merely the care and oversight of the goods of his master, as the butler of plate, the shepherd of sheep, and the like, embezzle them, this is a larceny at common law: 1 Hale, 506; because the goods, at the time they are taken, are deemed in law to be in the possession of the master, the possession of the servant in such a case being the possession of the master. It was the duty of the prisoner, who was in the prosecutor's service as foreman, to enter weekly on a pay-sheet the amount due to each workman for the week's wages, to present this sheet to the cashier, and, the total amount due to the several workmen having been reckoned up, to obtain such total amount from the cashier, and to pay thereout the amounts due to the respective workmen. The prisoner, intending at the time to defraud his master, falsely represented on the pay-sheet that 1*l.* 10*s.* 4*d.* was due to a certain workman, whereas a sum of 1*l.* 8*s.* only was due to him, and having obtained the total amount for the week from the cashier, which included such sum of 1*l.* 10*s.* 4*d.*, fraudulently appropriated the difference of 2*s.* 4*d.* to his own use. This was held to be larceny of the 2*s.* 4*d.*, for although it has been obtained by the prisoner from the cashier by a false pretence, it was merely handed to the prisoner as the servant of the master, and continued the property and in the constructive possession of the master. R. v. Cooke, L. R., 1 C. C. R. 295; 40 L. J. (M. C.) 68. Where a person employed to drive cattle, or to take them to a particular place for a special purpose, and bring them back, sells them, it is larceny at common law; for he has the custody merely, and not the right to the possession; R. v. Stock, 1 Mood. C. C. 87: R. v. M'Namee, 1 Mood. C. C. 368; although the intention to convert them was not conceived until after they were delivered to him. R. v. Harvey, 9 C. & P. 353, Alderson, B.: R. v. Jackson, 2 Mood. C. C. 32: see R. v. Goode, C. & Mar. 582, Patteson, J.: R. v. Jones, Id. 611, Cresswell, J.: R. v. Smith, 1 C. & K. 423, Coleridge, J. Where the defendant, who was carter to the prosecutor, went away with and disposed of his master's cart, it was held to be felony. R. v. Robinson, 2 East, P. C. 565. Where the defendant, a porter to the prosecutor, was sent by his master to deliver goods to a customer, and, instead of doing so, sold them, the judges held this to be felony. R. v. Bass, 2 East, P. C. 566. The defendant, foreman and shopkeeper to the prosecutor, not residing in the house with him, but merely attending there in the daytime, received from his master a bill of exchange, with directions to send it enclosed in a letter to J. S. in London; the defendant absconded with the bill, and the judges held this to be felony. R. v. Paradise, 2 East, P. C. 565; 3 R. R. 721, cit. So, if money or a valuable security (as a cheque drawn by the prosecutor on a banker: R. v. Heath, 2 Mood. C. C. 33) be given by a master to his servant to carry to another, or to purchase goods with, and the servant apply it to his own use, it is larceny. R. v. Lavender, 2 East, P. C. 566: 2 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 328; R. v. Beaman, C. & Mar. 595, Patteson, J. So, if a man, having purchased corn on board a vessel, send his clerk or lighterman with a barge for the purpose of landing it, and the clerk or lighterman misappropriate a part of it, this has been held larceny. R. v. Abrahat, 2 Leach, 824: R. v. Spears, 2 Leach, 825; 2 East, P. C. 568. So, where the servant of a master carman, employed to cart goods, by collusion with others suffered the goods, and the cart, to be taken away, it was held to be larceny in the servant; and to be immaterial whether the property were laid in the bailee or the original owner. R. v. Harding, R. & R. 125. So, where a servant got ten guineas from her master, in order to get silver for them, and, instead of doing so, ran away with the guineas, it was held to be larceny. R. v. Atkinson, 1 Leach, 302, n. Even where a confidential clerk to a merchant, who had authority to get his master's bills discounted, and had the general management of his cash concerns, took a bill of exchange, unindorsed, got it discounted, and absconded with the produce of it, it was held to be felony. R. v. Chipchase, 2 Leach, 699; 2 East P. C. 567; and see R. v. Murray, 1 Leach, 344. In Farquharson v. King [1902] App. Cas. 325, a firm of timber merchants warehoused with a dock company their timber imported by them, and instructed the dock company to accept all transfer or delivery orders signed by a particular clerk, who had a limited authority to make sales to known customers. The clerk under an assumed name fraudulently sold his master's timber to K. who did not know the firm nor the clerk under his real name. Halsbury, L.C., held this to be a clear case of larceny by the clerk. Where the defendant, a clerk and cashier in a banking-house, made false entries in the books to the credit of a customer, then obtained the customer's cheque for the sum thus falsely placed to his credit, and paid the amount of the cheque to himself by certain bank-notes, entering the payment in the books as being made to "a man"; this was held by the judges to be a larceny of the bank-notes. R. v. Hammon, R. & R. 221; 2 Leach, 1083; 4 Taunt. 304; 13 R. R. 596. So, if a sheriff's officer clandestinely sell, for his own use, part of the goods which he has seized under a fi. fa., he is guilty of larceny, because he has the custody of the goods merely, like a servant, and has not the legal possession. R. v. Eastall, 2 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.), 264. But where A. employed B., who was by business a drover, to drive pigs and deliver them to C. at L.; he was to be paid by the day, but, by the usage of the trade, he had a right to drive other persons' pigs to L. along with A.'s if he chose; he drove the pigs to L., and as C.'s wife would not receive them, he took them to L. market, sold them, and absconded; this was held (before 20 & 21 Vict. c. 54, s. 4; see ante, p. 456) no larceny, as under the circumstances B. was a bailee, and not a servant, and he had no original intention of stealing the pigs. R. v. Hey, 1 Den. 602; 2 C. & K. 983 (C. C. R.): R. v. Gibbs, Dears. 445; 24 L. J. (M. C.) 62 (C. C. R.). An unauthorized gift by the servant of his master's goods is as much a felony as if he sold or pawned them. R. v. White, 9 C. & P. 344. And where a third party receives goods from a servant under colour of a pretended sale, knowing that the servant has no authority to sell them, and is in fact defrauding his master, this is larceny in both. R. v. Hornby, 1 C. & K. 305, Coltman, J. But where goods, of which the master has never been in possession, are delivered to the servant for the master's use, and the servant instead of delivering them to his master, by depositing them in his house, or the like, converts them to his own use, this is held not to be larceny at common law. 2 East, P. C. 568. Therefore, if a shopman receives money from a customer of his master, and instead of putting it into the till, secretes it; R. v. Bull, 2 Leach, 841, cit.; or, if a banker's clerk receive money at the counter, and, instead of putting it into the proper drawer, purloin it; R. v. Bazeley, 2 Leach, 835; or receive a bond for the purpose of being deposited in the bank, and, instead of depositing it, convert it to his own use; R. v. Waite, 1 Leach, 28; 2 East, P. C. 570; in these cases it has been held that the clerk or shopman is not guilty of larceny. So, where a servant was sent by his master to get silver for a 5*l.* note, which he did, and absconded with the silver, it was held not to be larceny, because the silver had never been in the possession of his master, except by the hands of the servant. R. v. Sullens, 1 Mood. C. C. 129. And where the prosecutor, having employed the defendant to purchase Exchequer bills for him, gave him a cheque upon his bankers for the amount, and the defendant received the amount of the cheque in bank-notes, and absconded, it was held not to amount to a larceny of the notes, because the prosecutor never had possession of them except by the hands of the defendant. R. v. Walsh, R. & R. 215; 2 Leach, 1054; 4 Taunt. 258. What is a sufficient delivery to the master for this purpose must depend upon the nature of the goods. Thus, the putting down, by the servant, of a load of hay, which the master had sent him for, at the master's stable door, was held a sufficient delivery to the master to make the servant guilty of larceny in then appropriating a part of it to his own use. R. v. Hayward, 1 C. & K. 518; Tindal, C.J.

If the owner of goods deliver them to another, but be present all the time they are in the other's possession, and there be no intention on the part of the owner to relinquish his dominion over them by such delivery, the owner still retains the possession in law, notwithstanding this delivery; and if the person to whom he has so delivered them make away with them and convert them to his own use, he will be guilty of larceny. 2 East, P. C. 683, 684; 1 Hawk. c. 30, s. 2. As, for instance, if the owner give the goods to a man to carry, and accompany him at the same time—if the man run away with the goods, he is clearly guilty of larceny. The law laid down in this paragraph was cited with approval, and formed the ground of decision in R. v. Thompson, L. & C. 225; 32 L. J. (M. C.) 53 (C. C. R.). In that case a lady, wishing to get a railway ticket, finding a crowd at the pay place, asked the prisoner, who was nearer to the pay place, to get a ticket for her, and handed him a sovereign to pay for it. He took the sovereign, intending to steal it, and immediately ran off with it. On these facts he was held to have been guilty of larceny at common law, as the lady being present retained the dominion and possession in point of law, after she had handed the sovereign to him for the intended purpose. Id.

So, if a man have the bare charge or special use of the goods of another, this does not divest the owner of the possession in law; and if the person who thus has the use of them fraudulently convert them, it is larceny. As, for instance, if a guest rob his inn or tavern of a piece of plate, it is larceny; for he hath not the possession delivered to him, but merely the use. 1 Hale, 506; 1 Hawk. c. 33, s. 6.

Although the taking must, in strictness, be invito domino, yet where a servant being solicited to become an accomplice in robbing his master's house, informed his master of it; and the master thereupon told him to carry on the affair, consented to his opening the door leading to the premises, and to his being with the robbers during the robbery, and also marked his property, and laid it in a place where the robbers were expected to come; it was held that this conduct of the master was no defence to an indictment against the robbers. R. v. Eggington, 2 Leach, 913; 2 B. & P. 508; 5 R. R. 689: cf. R. v. Williams, 1 C. & K. 195.

"Carry away."]—In order to constitute larceny, there must not only be a taking, but also asportation, or carrying away. A bare removal from the place in which the thief found the goods, though he does not make off with them, is a sufficient asportation; 1 Hale, 508; 4 Bl. Com. 231. As, for instance, if a man be leading another's horse out of a close, and be apprehended in the fact; or if a guest, stealing goods out of an inn, have removed them from his chambers downstairs; 3 Co. Inst. 108, 109; or if a servant, animo furandi, take his master's hay from his stable, and put it into his master's waggon; R. v. Gruncell, 9 C. & P. 365; or, if a thief, intending to steal plate, take it out of a chest in which it was, and lay it down upon the floor, but be surprised before he can make his escape with it; R. v. Simson, Kel. (J.) 31; 1 Hawk. c. 33, s. 28: R. v. Amier, 6 C. & P. 344; or if, intending to steal a cask of wine, he remove it from the head to the tail of the waggon in which it is placed, and be detected before he can effect his purpose of carrying it off. R. v. Walsh, 1 Mood. C. C. 14. And where the defendant drew a book from the inside pocket of the prosecutor's coat, about an inch above the top of his pocket; but whilst the book was still about the person of the prosecutor, the prosecutor suddenly put up his hand, upon which the defendant let the book drop, and it fell into the prosecutor's pocket; this was considered a sufficient asportation to constitute larceny. R. v. Thompson, 1 Mood. C. C. 78. So, the transfer of a letter by a letter-carrier from his pouch to his pocket is a sufficient asportation. R. v. Poynton, L. & C. 247; 32 L. J. (M. C.) 29 (C. C. R.). But where the defendant merely set a package on end, in the place where it lay, for the purpose of cutting open the side of it to get out the contents, and was detected before he had accomplished his purpose; the judges held that this was not sufficient. R. v. Cherry, 2 East, P. C. 556; 1 Leach, 236, 321. So, where the thief was not able to carry off the goods on account of their being attached by a string to the counter: Anon., 2 East, P. C. 556; or to carry off a purse on account of some keys attached to the strings of it getting entangled in the owner's pocket: R. v. Wilkinson, 1 Hale, 508; the court in these cases held, that there was not sufficient carrying away to constitute larceny: to render the asportation in such cases complete, there must be a severance. 2 Russ. (6th ed.), 122; and see R. v. Lapier, 1 Leach, 320, where the defendant had assaulted a lady, and torn from her ear an earring which was subsequently found in her hair. Where, however, there is no asportation, the prisoner may be indicted for an attempt to steal, which is a misdemeanor at common law (see ante, p. 3); or upon an indictment for the full offence of larceny, he may be convicted of the attempt only. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 9 (ante, p. 219). A man may be convicted of an attempt to steal when, even if no interruption had taken place, he could not have committed the complete offence, e.g., when a thief puts his hand in an empty pocket. R. v. Ring, 61 L. J. (M. C.) 116; 17 Cox, 491: R. v. Brown, 24 Q. B. D. 357; 59 L. J. (M. C.) 47; 16 Cox, 715 (C. C. R.): overruling R. v. Collins, L. & C. 471: 33 L. J. (M. C.) 177. As to attempts generally (see ante, p. 2). As to what is sufficient to constitute an attempt to steal, see further R. v. Cheeseman, L. & C. 140; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 89; 9 Cox, 100 (C. C. R.), where the circumstances were peculiar. In an indictment for an attempt to steal, it is sufficient to aver that the prisoner attempted to steal the goods of A. B. without specifying the particular goods. R. v. Johnson, L. & C. 489; 34 L. J. (M. C.) (C. C. R.).

LARCENY BY CLERKS OR SERVANTS.

Statutes.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 (Larceny Act, 1861), s. 67.]—Whosoever, being a clerk or servant, or being employed for the purpose or in the capacity of a clerk or servant, shall steal any chattel, money or valuable security belonging to or in the possession or power of his master or employer, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding fourteen years . . . or to be imprisoned . . . and, if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping. [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 6, with the addition of the words in italics.]

26 & 27 Vict. c. 103 (Misappropriation by Servants Act, 1863), s. 1—Punishment of servants taking their master's corn, etc., without authority.]—"If any servant shall, contrary to the orders of his master, take from his possession any corn, pulse, roots, or other food, for the purpose of giving the same or of having the same given to any horse or other animal belonging to or in possession of his master, the servant so offending shall not by reason thereof be deemed guilty of or be proceeded against for felony, but shall, on conviction of such offence before two justices of the peace, at their discretion, either be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding three months, or else shall forfeit and pay such penalty as shall appear to them to be meet, not exceeding the sum of 5*l.*; and if such penalty shall not be paid, either immediately after the conviction, or within such period as the said justices shall at the time of the conviction appoint, the servant so offending shall be imprisoned, with or without hard labour. . . .

"Provided always, that if upon the hearing of the charge the said justices shall be of opinion that the same is too trifling, or that there are circumstances in the case which render it inexpedient to inflict any punishment, they shall have power to dismiss the charge without proceeding to a conviction:

"Provided also, that if upon the trial of any servant for feloniously taking from his master any corn, pulse, roots, or other food consumable by horses or other animals, such servant shall allege that he took the same under such circumstances as would constitute an offence punishable under this Act, and thereof shall satisfy the jury charged with his trial, then it shall be lawful for such jury to return a verdict accordingly; and thereupon the court before which such trial shall take place, shall proceed to award such punishment against such servant as may be awarded by two justices of the peace on the conviction of any person under the provisions of this Act:

"Provided also, that in case of non-payment of any penalty to be imposed by the court on such servant, he shall be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding three months, as the court shall order, unless such penalty be sooner paid."

24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 72.]—Power to convict of embezzlement on indictment for larceny, and vice versâ (see post, p. 557).

1 Edw. 7, c. 10 (Larceny Act, 1901), s. 1—Fraudulent conversion of property.]—(See post, p. 475).

Indictment under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 67.

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—then being clerk and servant ("clerk or servant") to J. N. [or then being employed by J. N. for the purpose and in the capacity of a clerk and servant to him the said J. N. ("employed for the purpose or in the capacity of a clerk or servant")], certain money to the amount of ten pounds, ten yards of linen cloth, and a certain valuable security, to wit, one bill of exchange for the payment of ten pounds ("any chattel, money, or valuable security," see ante, p. 427), of and belonging to the said J. N., his master [or employer] [or, in the possession and power ("possession or power") of the said J. N. his master [or employer] then being], feloniously did steal, take, and carry away: against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace of our lord the King, his crown and dignity.

A count for larceny at common law may be added, but is unnecessary, as the jury can negative the relation of master and servant and convict of simple larceny. R. v. Jennings, 7 Cox, 397: Dears. & B. 447 (C. C. R.). If it appear that the money, etc., was received by the clerk, etc., for and on account of his master, and was not received into the possession of the master otherwise than by the actual possession of the clerk, etc., so as not to amount to larceny but to embezzlement, the defendant is nevertheless not entitled to be acquitted, but the jury may return as their verdict that the defendant was not guilty of larceny, but was guilty of embezzlement, and thereupon he shall be liable to be punished in the same manner as if he had been convicted on an indictment for embezzlement; but he cannot be afterwards prosecuted for embezzlement on the same facts. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 72 (post, p. 557). This provision extends to indictments framed upon 31 & 32 Vict. c. 116, s. 1 (ante, p. 430), relating to larceny or embezzlement by partners or joint beneficial owners. R. v. Rudge, 13 Cox, 17 (C. C. R.).

Felony: penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour, for not more than two years; and, if a male under sixteen years, with or without whipping.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 67 (ante, p. 464); 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 431).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant, at the time he committed the offence, was "clerk or servant" to J. N., or was employed by J. N. for that purpose or in that capacity, as alleged in the indictment. (See post, p. 561, tit. "Embezzlement.") The driver of a glass-coach hired for the day is not the servant of the hirer, so as to come within the statute. R. v. Haydon, 7 C. & P. 445; and see Quarman v. Burnett, 6 M. & W. 499: Milligan v. Wedge, 12 A. & E. 737: Jones v. Scullard [1898] 2 Q. B. 565: R. v. Hey, 1 Den. 602; 2 C. & K. 983 (C. C. R.): R. v. Gibbs, Dears. 445; 24 L. J. (M. C.) 62 (ante, p. 462). In R. v. Warren, 10 Cox, 359, a woman living with a man as his wife was convicted of larceny as a servant.

Then prove the larceny as directed, ante, pp. 404–464; see particularly p. 460. Where, upon an indictment for larceny, it appeared that the defendant, being sent by his master to get change for a £5 note, got silver for it and absconded, it was held that it was not larceny, because the silver had never been in the possession of the master, except by the hands of the defendant; R. v. Sullens, 1 Mood. C. C. 129; but it is now embezzlement within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 68, and see s. 72 (post, p. 557). But if the property be in the possession of the master, even by the hands of another clerk or servant, or by delivery into the master's house or barn, or into his cart or barge, it is larceny. R. v. Murray, 1 Mood. C. C. 276; 5 C. & P. 145: R. v. Watts, 2 Den. 14; 19 L. J. (M. C.) 192: R. v. Spears, 2 Leach, 825: 2 East, P. C. 568: R. v. Reed, Dears. 168, 257; 23 L. J. (M. C.) 25 (C. C. R.). If a servant receives from his master goods for the purpose of selling them and appropriates them to his own use, it is larceny, not embezzlement. R. v. Hawkins, 4 Cox, 224 (C. C. R.). It was the duty of the prisoner, a servant of the prosecutors, to give out materials to be wrought up, and pay the workman when the work was finished, and for this purpose he received cash from his masters, and at the end of each week he accounted with them for sums so received and paid. The cash was kept by him, but he was not authorized to apply it in any other manner. He paid one of the workmen 13*s.*, and fraudulently charged his masters as having paid him 14*s.* 8*d.*, and appropriated the 1*s.* 8*d.* to his own use. On these facts it was held that he was rightly convicted of larceny, as a servant, of the 1*s.* 8*d.* R. v. Low, 10 Cox, 168 (C. C. R.): but see R. v. Dartnell, 20 L. T. (N. S.) 1020, Byles, J. It is not required by the statute that the goods, etc., stolen should be the property of the master; the words of the statute are, "belonging to or in the possession or power of the master." If the defendant is not shown to be the clerk or servant of J. N., but a larceny is proved, he may be convicted of the larceny merely. R. v. Jennings, 7 Cox, 397, ante, p. 465.

As to taking from the possession of the master by the servant, contrary to the master's orders, of any corn, etc., for the purpose of giving the same to any horse, etc. See 26 & 27 Vict. c. 103, s. 1, ante, p. 464.

By the Falsification of Accounts Act, 1874 (38 & 39 Vict. 24), post, p. 591, and the Larceny Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 10), post, p. 575, many of the difficulties formerly found in prosecuting servants for defrauding their masters are removed.

LARCENY BY PERSONS EMPLOYED IN THE PUBLIC SERVICE, OR BY POLICE CONSTABLES.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 (Larceny Act, 1861), s. 69.]—Whosoever, being employed in the public service of [his] Majesty, or being a constable or other person employed in the police of any county, city, borough, district, or place whatsoever, shall steal any chattel, money, or valuable security belonging to or in the possession or power of [his] Majesty, or intrusted to or received or taken into possession by him by virtue of his employment, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding fourteen years . . . [This section was new law in 1861.]

Sect. 70—Venue—Form of Indictment.]— . . . Every offender against . . . the last preceding section may be dealt with, indicted, tried and punished either in the county or place in which he shall be apprehended or be in custody, or in which he shall have committed the offence; and in every case of larceny . . . of any chattel, money, or valuable security in . . . the last preceding section mentioned, it shall be lawful in the warrant of commitment by the justice of the peace before whom the offender shall be charged, and in the indictment to be preferred against such offender, to lay the property of any such chattel, money, or valuable security in [his] Majesty.

Sect. 72—Person indicted for larceny not to be acquitted, if embezzlement be proved.]—Post, p. 557, tit. "Embezzlement."

39 & 40 Vict. c. 36—(Customs Consolidation Act, 1876), s. 29.]—Any moneys, chattels, or other valuable securities which shall or may be received by any officer, clerk, or other person in the service of the customs, either as duties of customs, or under or by virtue of any statute, or by the order or direction of the Commissioners of Customs, or in virtue of his office or employment, or otherwise for the use and service of [his] Majesty, or of any public department, shall be deemed to be money, chattels, or valuable securities for the public service, and shall be considered as such within the meaning of the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), and in any information, indictment, or other instrument in relation thereto, the same may be laid as the property of [his] Majesty.

54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1 (term of penal servitude or imprisonment.]—See ante, p. 235.

A police constable employed by an inspector of prisons as his agent to collect contributions of parents towards the maintenance of their children committed to reformatory and industrial schools under 29 & 30 Vict. c. 117 (which authorized the appointment of an agent), is "employed in the public service of his Majesty." R. v. Graham, 13 Cox, 57 (C. C. R.). A bailiff appointed under the County Court Acts by the high bailiff of a county court to assist him in his duties is not, since the issue of the County Court Rules, 1875, "employed in the public service," etc., but is the servant of the high bailiff. R. v. Parsons, 16 Cox, 498, Cave, J. This was otherwise before 1875: R. v. Glover, L. & C. 466; 33 L. J. (M. C.) 169; 9 Cox, 500 (C. C. R.) The rule O. 2, r. 30 of the Rules of 1875, on which R. v. Parsons was based, is still in force as O. 2, r. 34 of the Rules of 1903.

STEALING OR KILLING HORSES, COWS, SHEEP, ETC.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 (Larceny Act, 1861), s. 10.]—Whosoever shall steal any horse, mare, gelding, colt, or filly, or any bull, cow, ox, heifer, or calf, or any ram, ewe, sheep, or lamb, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding fourteen years. . . . [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 25.]

Sect. 11.]—Whosoever shall wilfully kill any animal, with intent to steal the carcass, skin, or any part of the animal so killed, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable to the same punishment as if he had been convicted of feloniously stealing the same, provided the offence of stealing the animal so killed would have amounted to felony. [This section is framed on, but is wider in its scope than 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 5. As to stealing dogs, see post, p. 470].

Indictment for stealing Horses, Cows, Sheep, etc. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 10).

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—one mare ("horse, mare, gelding, colt, or filly, bull, cow, ox, heifer, or calf, ram, ewe, sheep, or lamb") of the goods and chattels of J. N., feloniously did steal, take, and lead away against the form (as ante, p. 465). If the indictment be for stealing a bull, etc., or sheep, etc., say, "drive away," instead of "lead away." The indictment must give the animal one of the descriptions mentioned in the statute; otherwise the defendant can be punished as for simple larceny merely. R. v. Beaney, R. & R. 416.

Felony: penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 10; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 431).

Evidence.

Prove a larceny of the mare, etc., as directed, ante, p. 434. See R. v. Phillips (ante, p. 441): R. v. Crump, R. v. Cabbage (ante, p. 442): R. v. Harvey (ante, p. 447): R. v. Pear, R. v. Charlewood, R. v. Banks (ante, p. 454): R. v.

Stock, R. v. Smith (ante, p. 461). Where the defendant removed sheep from the fold into the open field, killed them, and took away the skins merely; the judges held, that removing the sheep from the fold was a sufficient driving away to constitute larceny. R. v. Rawlins, 2 East, P. C. 617. But where, upon an indictment for sheep-stealing, the evidence was that the carcasses of the sheep were found lying in the grip of a ditch, killed, and the tallow and fat taken away, the judges held that the removal of the sheep to the ditch for the purpose of killing them was not such a removal as would constitute a larceny of them within the meaning of the statute. R. v. Williams, 1 Mood. C. C. 107; cf. R. v. Petch, 14 Cox, 116 (C. C. R.). R. v. Townley, L. R., 1 C. C. R. 315 (ante, p. 437). (See the next precedent, infra.) Upon the trial of an indictment for horse-stealing, the prosecutor stated that he had agisted the horse on the land of another at some distance, and that, hearing from that person of the loss of the horse, he went to the field where the horse had been to feed; and discovered that he was gone: but neither the agister nor his servant was called as a witness: Gurney, B., held that this was not sufficient evidence against the prisoner, for it was not shown that he might not have obtained possession of the horse honestly. R. v. Yend, C. & P. 176.

The evidence must correspond with the description of the animal in the indictment. If the animal stolen be specially mentioned in the statute, it must be described and proved to be of that particular description, for the enumeration of the several kinds in the statute contradistinguishes the one from the other. Thus, an indictment framed on 15 G. 2, c. 34 (rep.) for stealing a cow was held not to be supported by evidence of stealing a heifer, because the statute mentioned both cows and heifers. R. v. Cook, I Leach, 105; 2 East, P. C. 616. And an indictment for stealing sheep was held not to be supported by evidence of stealing lambs or ewes. R. v. Loom, 1 Mood. C. C. 160. See R. v. Birket, 4 C. & P. 216: R. v. Jewett, 2 Cox, 227: R. v. Puddifoot, 1 Mood. C. C. 247. But R. v. Puddifoot was declared to be bad law in R. v. McCulley, 2 Mood. C. C. 34; 2 Lewin, 272; and the word "sheep" is now held to be a generic term. R. v. Spicer, 1 Den. 82; 1 C. & K. 699. Any sheep or wether is properly described as a "sheep." R. v. Stroud, 6 C. & P. 535 (and see ante, p. 76). An indictment for stealing a colt or filly would be supported by evidence of the larceny of a foal, because colt or filly means a young horse or mare; and a foal is not specifically mentioned in the statute; and it was held that an indictment on 2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 33 (rep.) for stealing a mare was supported by evidence of stealing a filly, though the Act mentioned only horses, geldings, and mares. R. v. Welland, R. & R. 494. Under the present Act it seems sufficient to describe the animal as a horse, and to prove that it is horse, mare, gelding, colt, or filly, as the fact is. R. v. Aldridge, 4 Cox, 143, Erle, J.

The court, however, has now extensive powers of amendment of variances between pleading and proof, where the variance is not material and the defendant cannot be prejudiced thereby. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 1 (ante, pp. 52, 53).

24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 10, applies only to the stealing of live cattle, and theft of dead animals is simple larceny, and the punishment is different. As to the description of dead animals, see ante, p. 76.

ndictment for killing Animals with intent, etc. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 11.)

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—one sheep ("any animal" "provided the offence of stealing the animal so killed would have amounted to felony"), of the goods and chattels of J. N. feloniously and wilfully did kill, with intent feloniously to steal, take, and carry away part of the carcass ("the carcass, skin, or any part of the animal so killed"), that is to say [the inward fat] of the said sheep; against the form (as ante, p. 465). As to indictment for killing a sheep with intent to steal part, etc., see R. v. Wheeler, 7 C. & P. 170; Coleridge, J.

Felony: 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 11. See the last precedent.

Evidence.

To support this indictment, you must prove two things:—

1. That the defendant killed the sheep; and this is proved either positively, as by a witness who saw him do it; or by circumstantial evidence, as, for instance, that the skins were found in his possession, or were sold by him to another person, or the like. (See ante, p. 339). Where the defendant was indicted for killing a lamb with intent to steal part of the carcass, and the evidence was, that he cut off the leg of the lamb whilst it was alive, and carried the leg away before the animal died; the lamb afterwards died of the wound; the judge at the trial thought that as the death-wound was given before the theft, it was sufficient, and the defendant was convicted; the judges afterwards were unanimous that the conviction was right. R. v. Clay, R. & R. 387: see also R. v. Sutton, 2 Mood. C. C. 29; 3 C. & P. 291: R. v. McCulley, 2 Lewin, 272: 2 Mood. C. C. 34.

2. That he killed the sheep with the intent stated in the indictment. The best proof of this is, that the part of the carcass mentioned was actually stolen. But if the defendant was caught in the fact, that is, after killing the sheep, but before he had actually cut it up, then it is for the jury to say, upon a consideration of the facts of the case, whether he did not intend to steal the carcass. Upon an indictment, under 14 G. 2, c. 6 (rep.), for killing three sheep, with intent to steal the whole of the carcasses, the jury found that the defendant intended to steal a part of the carcasses only; but the judges were of opinion that the evidence was sufficient to sustain the indictment, as the statute meant to make it immaterial whether the intent was to steal the whole or a part only of the carcass. R. v. Williams, 1 Mood. C. C. 107.

In this, as in the last case, the evidence should correspond with the description of the animal in the indictment. (See ante, p. 469.)

may restore the same respectively to the owner thereof; and any person in whose possession or on whose premises such bird or the plumage thereof, or such beast or the skin thereof, or such animal or any part thereof, shall be so found, (such person knowing that the bird, beast, or animal has been stolen, or that the plumage is the plumage of a stolen bird' or that the skin is the skin of a stolen beast, or that the part is the part of a stolen animal), shall, on conviction before a justice of the peace, be liable for the first offence to such forfeiture, and for every subsequent offence to such punishment, as any person convicted of stealing any beast or bird is made liable to by the last preceding section. Indictment for stealing a Dog, after a Previous Conviction.

Middlesex, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present, that J. S., on the —— day of ——, A.D. 1905, one dog, the property of J. N., unlawfully did steal, take, and carry away; against the form of the statute in such case made and provided. And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do say, that heretofore and before the committing of the offence hereinbefore charged and stated, the said J. S., on the —— day of ——, A.D. 1901, at ——, in the county of ——, was duly convicted before J. P., Esq., and the Rev. O. R., clerk, two of his Majesty's justices of the peace for the said county, for that he the said J. S. on [etc., as in the previous conviction, to the words] against the form of the statute in such case made and provided; and the said J. S. was thereupon then and there adjudged for his said offence to be committed to and imprisoned in the common gaol in and for the said county, for the term of three months.

[As to the necessity for charging the subsequent offence first, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 116 (ante, p. 430), which enacts, that in any indictment for any offence punishable under this Act, and committed after a previous conviction or convictions for any offence punishable upon summary conviction, it shall be sufficient, AFTER CHARGING THE SUBSEQUENT OFFENCE, to state that the offender was at a certain time and place convicted of an offence punishable upon summary conviction, WITHOUT OTHERWISE DESCRIBING THE PREVIOUS OFFENCE. It would seem, from the last six words, that it is unnecessary to set out the previous conviction at length, as is done in the above indictment, but it is safer to do so, as s. 18 is directed not against a dog-stealer, who has been previously convicted of any larceny punishable on summary conviction, but against one who has been previously summarily convicted of dog-stealing, and it might therefore be argued that the fact of the previous conviction having been for dog-stealing ought to appear on the face of the indictment, notwithstanding the general words used in s. 116.]

Misdemeanor: imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding eighteen calendar months. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 18. See also s. 117 (ante, p. 431), as to fines and sureties.

Evidence.

Prove the subsequent offence, as directed, ante, p. 434 et seq.; and if the defendant is found guilty, or pleads guilty, prove the former conviction in manner directed by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 116 (ante, p. 430); and the identity of the defendant. The mode of proceeding at the trial as to arraignment, etc., is regulated by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 116, ubi supra.

There cannot be a conviction for obtaining a dog by false pretences, under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 88: see R. v. Robinson, Bell, 34; 28 L. J. (M. C.) 58; 8 Cox, 115 (C. C. R.).

HUNTING OR STEALING DEER.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 86 (Larceny Act, 1861), s. 12—In uninclosed part of forest, etc.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and wilfully course, hunt, snare, or carry away, or kill or wound, or attempt to kill or wound, any deer kept or being in the uninclosed part of any forest, chase, or purlieu, shall for every such offence, on conviction thereof before a justice of the peace, forfeit and pay such sum, not exceeding fifty pounds, as to the justice shall seem meet; and whosoever, having been previously convicted of any offence relating to deer, for which a pecuniary penalty shall have been imposed by this or by any former Act of parliament, shall afterwards commit any of the offences hereinbefore enumerated, whether such second offence be of the same description as the first or not, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour . . . and, if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping. [This section is taken from 7 G. 4, c. 29, s. 26.]

Sect. 13—In inclosed ground.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and wilfully course, hunt, snare, or carry away, or kill or wound, or attempt to kill or wound, any deer kept or being in the inclosed part of any forest, chase, or purlieu, or in any inclosed land where deer shall be usually kept, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour . . . and, if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping. [This section is taken from 7 G. 4, c. 29, s. 26.]

Sect. 14—Suspected persons found in possession of venison, etc.]—If any deer, or the head, skin, or other part thereof, or any snare or engine for the taking of deer, shall be found in the possession of any person, or on the premises of any person with his knowledge, and such person, being taken or summoned before a justice of the peace, shall not satisfy the justice that he came lawfully by such deer, or the head, skin, or other part thereof, or had a lawful occasion for such snare or engine, and did not keep the same for any unlawful purpose, he shall, on conviction by the justice, forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding twenty pounds; and if any such person shall not under the said provisions be liable to conviction, then, for the discovery of the party who actually killed or stole such deer, the justice, at his discretion, as the evidence given and the circumstances of the case shall require, may summon before him every person through whose hands such deer, or the head, skin, or other part thereof, shall appear to have passed; and if the person from whom the same shall have been first received, or who shall have had possession thereof, shall not satisfy the justice that he came lawfully by the same, he shall, on conviction by the justice, be liable to the payment of such sum of money as is hereinbefore last mentioned. [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 27.]

Sect. 15—Setting engines for taking deer, etc.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and wilfully set or use any snare or engine whatsoever, for the purpose of taking or killing deer, in any part of any forest, chase, or purlieu, whether such part be inclosed or not, or in any fence or bank dividing the same from any land adjoining, or in any inclosed land where deer shall be usually kept, or shall unlawfully and wilfully destroy any part of the fence of any land where any deer shall be then kept, shall, on conviction thereof before a justice of the peace, forfeit and pay such sum of money, not exceeding twenty pounds, as to the justice shall seem meet. [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 28.]

Sect. 16—Powers of deer-keepers as to seizure, etc.]—If any person shall enter into any forest, chase, or purlieu, whether inclosed or not, or into any inclosed land where deer shall be usually kept, with intent unlawfully to hunt, course, wound, kill, snare, or carry away any deer, every person intrusted with the care of such deer, and any of his assistants, whether in his presence or not, may demand from every such offender any gun, firearms, snare, or engine in his possession, and any dog there brought for hunting, coursing, or killing deer, and in case such offender shall not immediately deliver up the same, may seize and take the same from him in any of those respective places, or, upon pursuit made, in any other place to which he may have escaped therefrom, for the use of the owner of the deer; and if any such offender shall unlawfully beat or wound any person intrusted with the care of the deer, or any of his assistants, in the execution of any of the powers given by this Act (see R. v. Amey, R. & R. 500), every such offender shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour . . . and if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping. Indictment for hunting or stealing Deer in Inclosed Places

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—in certain inclosed land ("in the inclosed part of any forest, chase, or purlieu, or in any inclosed land where deer shall be usually kept"), situate in the parish of ——, in the county of ——, in the occupation of J. N., where deer had been and then were usually kept, one fallow deer, the property of the said J. N., then and there kept and being, in the said inclosed land unlawfully, wilfully and feloniously did hunt, kill, and carry away ("course, hunt, snare, or carry away, or kill or wound, or attempt to kill or wound"); against the form [as ante, p. 465]. The enactment seems to apply to deer of all kinds, ages, and either sex. R. v. Strange, Greaves, Crim. Cons. Acts (2nd ed.), 111. It seems essential to state whether the land is inclosed or uninclosed. See R. v. King, 18 L. J. (M. C.) 43.

Felony: imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and if a male under sixteen years of age, with or without whipping (see ante, p. 240)—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 13. As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, Id. s. 117 (ante, p. 431).

Evidence.

To support this indictment, you must prove the hunting, killing, or stealing of the deer, as stated in the indictment; that the act was unlawful, i.e., done in a place in which it is not lawful for the accused to kill the deer. (Threlkeld v. Smith [1901] 2 K. B. 531, 536; 70 L. J. (K. B.) 921; 20 Cox, 38); that the land in which the offence was committed was at the time inclosed, in the occupation of J. N., and situated as stated in the indictment; and that deer had been and then were usually kept there. In R. v. Money, Gloucester Summer Assizes, 1847, Erle, J., held that an inclosure in the Forest of Dean made under an Act of Charles 2, and surrounded by a ditch and bank sufficient to keep out cattle, but over which deer could pass, was inclosed land within 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 26 (rep.). See Greaves, Crim. Cons. Acts (2nd ed.) 112.

Indictment for hunting or stealing Deer in Uninclosed Places, after a Previous Conviction, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 12 (ante, p. 473).

Southampton, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present, that J. S., on the —— day of ——, A.D. 1905, in a certain uninclosed part of the forest of —— ("in the uninclosed part of any forest, chase, or purlieu"), situate in the parish of ——, in the county of ——, one fallow deer, then and there being in the said uninclosed part of the said forest, unlawfully and wilfully did hunt, kill, and carry away ("course, hunt, snare, or carry away, or kill or wound, or attempt to kill or wound"); against the form of the statute in such case made and provided: And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do say, that heretofore, and before the committing of the offence hereinbefore mentioned, to wit, on the —— day of ——, A.D. 1903, at ——, in the county of ——, the said J. S. was duly convicted before J. P., Esq., and the Rev. O. R., clerk, two of his said Majesty's justices of the peace for the said county of ——, for that he the said J. S. [setting out the previous conviction]: And so the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do say, that the said J. S., on the day and in the year first aforesaid, in the said uninclosed part of the said forest of ——, situate in the said parish of ——, in the said county of ——, the said fallow deer then and there being in the said uninclosed part of the said forest, unlawfully, wilfully and feloniously did hunt, kill, and carry away; against the form of the statute in such case made and provided.

Second count.]—And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present, that the said J. S. afterwards, to wit, on the —— day of ——, A.D. 1905, in a certain uninclosed part of the said forest of ——, situate in the said parish of ——, in the said county of ——, one fallow deer, then and there being in the said uninclosed part of the said forest, unlawfully, wilfully and feloniously did hunt, kill, and carry away; against the form of the statute in such case made and provided: And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do say, that heretofore, and before the committing of the offence in this count hereinbefore mentioned, to wit, on the —— day of ——, A.D. 1903, at ——, in the county of ——, the said J. S. was duly convicted before J. P., Esq., and the Rev. O. R., clerk, two of his said Majesty's justices of the peace for the said county of ——, for that he the said J. S. [setting out the previous conviction. See R. v. King, 13 L. J. (M. C.) 43.] As to the form of this indictment, see the note to the precedent, ante, p. 472.

Felony: punishable as mentioned in the last precedent. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 12.

Evidence.

To support this indictment, you must prove the hunting, killing, or stealing of the deer by the defendant, as stated in the indictment—the commission of the offence in an uninclosed part of the forest, as described, and the locality of that part of the forest in which the offence was committed. If the defendant pleads guilty to, or is found guilty of, the subsequent offence, prove the previous conviction in manner directed by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 96, s. 116 (ante, p. 430), and the identity of the defendant. The course of proceedings at the trial, as to arraignment, etc., is regulated by the last-named section.

The prisoner may take exception to the validity of the previous conviction, and if it be bad, he cannot be convicted upon this indictment. R. v. Allen, R. & R. 513.

Where a summary conviction for an offence relating to a deer did not state substantively where the place was situate in which the offence was committed, but in awarding the distribution of the penalty gave it to the overseers of D., in the said county, "where the said offence was committed," it was held good. R. v. Weale, 5 C. & P. 135.

TAKING OR KILLING HARES OR RABBITS IN WARRENS, ETC., IN THE NIGHT TIME.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 (Larceny Act, 1861), s. 17.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and wilfully, between the expiration of the first hour after sunset and the beginning of the last hour before sunrise, take or kill any hare or rabbit in any warren or ground lawfully used for the breeding or keeping of hares or rabbits, whether the same be inclosed or not, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor; and whosoever shall unlawfully and wilfully, between the beginning of the last hour before sunrise and the expiration of the first hour after sunset, take or kill any hare or rabbit, in any such warren or ground, or shall at any time set or use therein any snare or engine for the taking of hares or rabbits, shall, on conviction thereof before a justice of the peace, forfeit and pay such sum of money, not exceeding five pounds, as to the justice shall seem meet:

Provided that nothing in this section contained shall affect any person taking or killing in the daytime any rabbits on any sea-bank or river-bank in the county of Lincoln, so far as the tide shall extend or within one furlong of such bank. [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 30, with the alterations italicized.]

Indictment.

Commencement as ante, p. 433.]—between the expiration of the first hour after sunset and the beginning of the last hour before sunrise, to wit, about the hour of eleven in the night of the same day, in a certain warren and ground ("in any warren or ground lawfully used for the breeding or keeping of hares or rabbits, whether the same be inclosed or not") in the occupation of J. N., situate in the parish of ——, in the county of ——, the said warren and ground then being lawfully used for the breeding and keeping of hares ("hares or rabbits"), unlawfully and wilfully did take twenty hares ("take or kill"); against the form [as ante, p. 465]. Add a count for taking rabbits, if it be necessary.

Misdemeanor: fine or imprisonment or both (with sureties to keep the peace and be of good behaviour, if the court shall think fit, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117, ante, p. 431).—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 17.

Evidence.

To support this indictment you must prove—1*st*. That the defendant took or killed the hares (or rabbits) in the place mentioned in the indictment. "A rick-yard" where a few rabbits were kept has been held not to be a "ground used for breeding or keeping." R. v. Garratt, 6 C. & P. 369, Patteson, J. "Taking," in the statute, means "catching," and not taking away. Where a defendant, who set several wires in a warren, in one of which a rabbit was caught, was seized just as he was laying hold of the wire to take the rabbit, which was then alive, the judges held this to be a taking within the meaning of statute 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 30 (rep.). R. v. Glover, R. & R. 269.—2*nd*. That the offence was committed in the night-time, as defined, for the purpose of this offence, by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 1 (post, p. 620), that is, between the expiration of the first hour after sunset and the beginning of the last hour before sunrise.—3*rd*. That the place in which the defendant took the hares (or rabbits) was a warren or ground then used for the breeding or keeping of hares (or rabbits); that it was in the occupation of J. N., and is situate as described in the indictment. It is immaterial whether the warren or ground was inclosed or not.

As to when larceny can be committed of rabbits, see R. v. Petch, 14 Cox, 17 (C. C. R.) (ante, p. 438).

The Ground Game Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 47), which gives the occupiers of land the right to kill rabbits and hares, forbids them the use of firearms to kill them between the expiration of the first hour after sunset and the commencement of the last hour before sunrise, and prohibits the use of poison, or of rabbit traps, except in rabbit holes (s. 6). It would seem that if this enactment be disobeyed by an occupier he will be within the provisions of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 17 (ante, p. 476).

TAKING OR DESTROYING FISH IN WATER ADJOINING A DWELLING-HOUSE.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 (Larceny Act, 1861), s. 24.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and wilfully take or destroy any fish in any water which shall run through or be in any land adjoining or belonging to the dwelling-house of any person being the owner of such water, or having a right of fishery therein, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor;

And whosoever shall unlawfully and wilfully take or destroy, or attempt to take or destroy, any fish in any water not being such as hereinbefore mentioned, but which shall be private property, or in which there shall be any private right of fishery, shall, on conviction thereof before a justice of the peace, forfeit and pay, over and above the value of the fish taken or destroyed (if any), such sum of money, not exceeding five pounds, as to the justice shall seem meet:

Provided that nothing hereinbefore contained shall extend to any person angling between the beginning of the last hour before sunrise and the expiration of the first hour after sunset;

But whosoever shall, by angling, between the beginning of the last hour before sunrise and the expiration of the first hour after sunset, unlawfully and wilfully take or destroy, or attempt to take or destroy, any fish in any such water as first mentioned, shall, on conviction before a justice of the peace, forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding five pounds; and if in any such water as last mentioned, he shall, on the like conviction, forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding two pounds, as to the justice shall seem meet;

And if the boundary of any parish, township or vill shall happen to be in or by the side of any such water as is in this section before mentioned, it shall be sufficient to prove that the offence was committed either in the parish, township, or vill named in the indictment or information, or in any parish, township or vill adjoining thereto. [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 34, with addition of the words in italics.]

Sect. 25.]—Power to owner of fishery or his servant or any person authorized by him to seize tackle of persons offending against s. 24. Proviso that if tackle is taken from persons angling in daytime they shall not be liable to pay any penalty or damages.

Indictment.

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—in a certain stream of water ("any water") then running and being in certain land ("any land adjoining or belonging to the dwelling-house") adjoining [or belonging] to the dwelling-house of J. N., situate in the parish of ——, in the county of ——, the said J. N. then being the owner of the said water [or, the said J. N. then having a right of fishery in the said water], ninety fish, to wit, thirty carp, thirty tench, and thirty trout, unlawfully and wilfully did take ["take or destroy"]; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. Where the indictment alleged the fish to be the goods and chattels of the prosecutor, the judges held that these words might be rejected as surplusage. R. v. Hundsdon, 2 East, P. C. 611.

Misdemeanor: fine or imprisonment, without hard labour, or both, with sureties, etc. (See ante, pp. 238, 240; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, ss. 24, 117.

Evidence.

Prove the taking or destruction of the fish mentioned, or some of them. The taking need not be such a taking as would be necessary to constitute a larceny. See R. v. Glover, R. & R. 269 (ante, p. 477). But a taking by angling in the daytime will not be sufficient. And taking fish with the consent of the tenant but not of the owner of soil is not an offence unless the fishing is reserved to the owner by the lease. Jones v. Davies, 20 Cox, 184; 66 J. P. 439 (K. B. D.). If a destruction only be charged, it must be proved to have been wilful. Prove, also, that the fish were taken or destroyed in a stream [or water] running or being in land adjoining to (see R. v. Hodges, post, p. 484), or belonging to the dwelling-house of J. N., and which at the time belonged to J. N., or in which he had a right of fishery. The local situation of the dwelling-house and water must also be proved; but if the boundary of any parish, township or vill, happen to be in or by the side of the water, it will be sufficient to prove that the offence was committed either in the parish, etc., named in the indictment, or in the parish, etc., adjoining thereto. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 24.

STEALING, OR DREDGING FOR, OYSTERS, ETC.

Statutes.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 (Larceny Act, 1861)], s. 26.—Whosoever shall steal any oysters or oyster-brood from any oyster-bed, laying, or fishery, being the property of any other person, and sufficiently marked out or known as such, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable to be punished as in the case of simple larceny (ante, p. 428). [As to the common law, see R. v. Walford [1803] 5 Esp. 62, Hotham, B.]

And whosoever shall unlawfully and wilfully use any dredge, or any net, instrument, or engine whatsoever, within the limits of any oyster-bed, laying, or fishery, being the property of any other person, and sufficiently marked out or known as such, for the purpose of taking oysters or oyster-brood, although none shall be actually taken, or shall unlawfully and wilfully, with any net, instrument, or engine, drag upon the ground or soil of any such fishery, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding three months, with or without hard labour. . . .

And it shall be sufficient in any indictment to describe, either by name or otherwise, the bed, laying, or fishery, in which any of the said offences shall have been committed, without stating the same to be in any particular parish, township, or vill;

Provided that nothing in this section contained shall prevent any person from catching or fishing for any floating fish within the limits of any oyster fishery, with any net, instrument, or engine adapted for taking floating fish only. [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 36, with the addition of the words in italics.]

31 & 32 Vict. c. 45 (Sea Fisheries Act, 1868), part iii. s. 28—Interpretation of terms.]—In this part of this Act the words "oysters" and "mussels" respectively include the brood, ware, half-ware, spat, and spawn of oysters and mussels respectively. In this part of the Act the expression "oyster and mussel fishery" includes a fishery for either oysters or mussels separately, and the term "oyster or mussel fishery" includes a fishery for both oysters and mussels; and the provisions of this part of this Act shall be construed to apply in the case of any fishery to oysters and oyster ground and beds alone, or to mussels and mussel ground and beds alone, or to both oysters and mussels, and oyster and mussel ground and beds, according as the right of fishery is for oysters alone, or for mussels alone, or for both oysters and mussels.

Sect. 42—Marking out of oyster, etc., fishery, how proved.]—Whenever it is necessary in any legal proceeding to prove that in pursuance of any Act of parliament or of an order under this part of this Act, the limits of any oyster and mussel fishery have been duly buoyed or otherwise marked, or notices of such limits have been duly published, posted or distributed, or that notice of the provisions of the order or of such Act relating to the oyster and mussel fishery has been duly published, a certificate purporting to be under the hand of one of the secretaries or assistant secretaries of the Board of Trade, certifying that the Board of Trade are satisfied that the said limits were so buoyed or marked, or that the said notices were duly published, posted, or distributed, shall be received as evidence that the same have been so buoyed or marked, or that the said notices have been so published, posted, or distributed.

Sect. 43—Oyster fishery to be within county for purposes of jurisdiction.]—The portion of the sea-shore to which an order of the Board of Trade under this part of this Act relates (as far as it is not by law within the body of any county) shall for all purposes of jurisdiction be deemed to be within the body of the adjoining county, or to be within the body of each of the adjoining counties, if more than one (see ante, p. 39, 43).

Sect. 51—Property in oysters, etc., within several fishery.]—All oysters and mussels being in or on an oyster or mussel bed within the limits of a several oyster and mussel fishery granted by an order under this part of this Act, and all oysters being in or on any private oyster bed which is owned by any person independently of this Act, and is sufficiently marked out or sufficiently known as such, shall be the absolute property of the grantees or of such owner, as the case may be, and in all courts of law and equity and elsewhere, and for all purposes, civil, criminal, or other, shall be deemed to be in the actual possession of the grantees and such owner respectively.

Sect. 52—Property in oysters, etc., removed from several fishery.]—All oysters and mussels removed by any person from an oyster or mussel bed within the limits of any such several fishery, and all oysters removed by any person from any such private oyster bed, and not either sold in market overt or disposed of by or under the authority of the grantees or owner (as the case may be), shall be the absolute property of the grantees and owner respectively, and in all courts of law and equity and elsewhere, and for all purposes civil, criminal, or other, the absolute right to the possession thereof shall be deemed to be in the grantees and owner respectively.

Sect. 55—Statement and proof of ownership, etc., in case of contiguous fisheries.]—When two or more oyster or mussel beds or fisheries belonging to different proprietors are contiguous to each other, and any proceeding by indictment or otherwise is taken against any person for stealing oysters or mussels from any bed formed under an order made in pursuance of this part of this Act, or for stealing oysters from any bed formed independently of this Act, it shall be sufficient, in alleging and proving the property and lawful possession of the oysters or mussels stolen, and the place from which they were stolen, to allege and prove that they were the property of and in the lawful possession of one or other of such proprietors, and were stolen from one or other of such contiguous beds or fisheries.

Sect. 65—Saving.]—Nothing in this Act shall prevent any person being liable under any other Act or otherwise to any indictment proceeding, punishment, or penalty, other than is provided for any offence by this Act, so that no person be punished twice for the same offence. [Cf. 52 & 53 Vict. c. 63, s. 33, ante, p. 170.]

Indictment for stealing Oysters or Oyster-Brood. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 26, ante, p. 479.)

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—from a certain oyster bed ("any oyster bed, laying, or fishery, being the property of any other person, and sufficiently marked out or known as such") called ——, the property of J. N., and sufficiently [marked out and] known as the property of the said J. N., one thousand oysters feloniously did steal, take and carry away; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. It is sufficient to describe, either by name or otherwise, the bed, laying, or fishery in which the offence is committed, without stating the same to be in any particular parish, township, or vill. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 26. As to the mode of alleging the property in the oysters and the place from which they were stolen when they have been stolen from one of two or more contiguous beds belonging to different proprietors, but it is not known from which of such beds they have been stolen, see 31 & 32 Vict. c. 45, s. 55 (ante, p. 480).

Felony: punishable as simple larceny. (See ante, pp. 428, 433).—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 26.

Evidence.

Prove a larceny of the oysters or some of them as directed, ante, p. 434 et seq. Prove, also, that the place from whence they were taken was at the time the oyster bed, laying, or fishery of J. N., and was sufficiently marked out or known as such. That it was sufficiently marked out may be proved as directed by 31 & 32 Vict. c. 45, s. 42 (ante, p. 479). As to the proof of the property in the oysters and the place from which they have been stolen when the theft has been from one of two or more contiguous beds belonging to different proprietors, but it is not known from which of such beds they have been stolen, see 31 & 32 Vict. c. 45, s. 55 (ante, p. 480).

Indictment for using a Dredge, etc., in the Oyster Fishery of another.

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—within the limits of a certain oyster-bed ("any oyster-bed, laying, or fishery") called ——, the property of J. N., and sufficiently [marked out and] known as the property of the said J. N., unlawfully and wilfully did use a certain dredge ("any dredge, net, instrument, or engine whatsoever") for the purpose of then and there taking oysters ("oysters or oyster-brood"); against the form [as ante, p. 465]. See the last precedent.

Misdemeanor: punishable by imprisonment not exceeding three months, with or without hard labour.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 26. The offender may also, in addition to or in lieu of this punishment, be fined, and required to enter into his own recognizances and to find sureties, both or either, for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 431).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant used a dredge, etc., within the limits of the oyster-bed, etc., of J. N., as stated in the indictment; and that such oyster-bed, etc., was at the time the property of J. N., and was sufficiently [marked out and] known as such. That it was so marked out may be proved as directed by 31 & 32 Vict. c. 45, s. 42 (ante, p. 479). The purpose is to be inferred from the act, and it is immaterial whether the defendant actually took any oysters or oyster-brood or not. The statute does not apply to persons catching or fishing for any floating fish within the limits of an oyster fishery with any net, instrument or engine adapted for taking floating fish only. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 26.

Indictment for dragging upon the Ground of the Oyster Fishery of another. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 26.)

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—upon the ground ("ground or soil") of a certain oyster fishery ("such fishery") called ——, the property of J. N., and sufficiently [marked out and] known as the property of the said J. N., with a certain net ("any net, instrument or engine") unlawfully and wilfully did drag; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

Misdemeanor: see the last precedent. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 26.

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant dragged with a net, etc., upon the ground of the oyster-bed, etc., as stated in the indictment; and that such oyster-bed, etc., was at the time the property of J. N., and was sufficiently [marked out and] known as such. That it was so marked out may be proved as directed by 31 & 32 Vict. c. 45, s. 42 (ante, p. 479). The statute does not apply to persons catching or fishing for any floating fish within the limits of any oyster fishery, with any net, instrument, or engine adapted for taking floating fish only. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 26.

STEALING, OR SEVERING WITH INTENT TO STEAL, ORE, ETC., FROM A MINE.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 (Larceny Act, 1861), s. 38.]—Whosoever shall steal, or sever with intent to steal, the ore of any metal, or any lapis calaminaris, manganese, or mundick, or any wad, black cawke, or black lead, or any coal or cannel coal, from any mine, bed, or vein thereof respectively, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour . . . (This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 43.)

Section 39.]—Whosoever being employed in or about any mine, shall take, remove, or conceal any ore of any metal, or any lapis calaminaris, manganese, mundick, or other mineral found or being in such mine, with intent to defraud any proprietor of or any adventurer in such mine, or any workman or miner employed therein, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour . . . [This section was taken from 2 & 3 Vict. c. 58, s. 10, and meets the difficulty created by R. v. Webb, 1 Mood. C. C. 431, where it was held not to be larceny for miners employed to bring ore to the surface, and paid by the owners according to the quantity produced, to remove from the heaps of other miners ore produced by them, and add it to their own, in order to increase their wages, the ore still remaining in the possession of the owner.]

Indictment under s. 38.

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—twenty pounds' weight of copper ore, ("the ore of any metal, or any lapis calaminaris, manganese, or mundick, or any wad, black cawke, or black lead, or any coal or cannel coal,") the property of J. N., from a certain mine of copper ore ("mine, bed, or vein thereof respectively") of the said J. N., situate in the parish of ——, in the county of ——, feloniously did steal, take and carry away [or feloniously did sever, with intent the same then and there feloniously to steal, take and carry away]; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. An indictment alleging that the defendants being persons employed in a mine, in the parish of, etc., in the county of Cornwall, on, etc., at, etc., did steal certain ore, the property of the adventurers in the said mine, then and there being found, did not sufficiently show that the ore was stolen from the mine. R. v. Trevenner, 2 M. & Rob. 476. As to local description, see ante, pp. 67, 298.

Felony: imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.]—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 38. As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, Id. s. 117 (ante, p. 431).

Evidence.

Prove a larceny of the ore, etc., as directed, ante, p. 434 et seq., or if a severance with intent to steal be alleged in the indictment, prove the severance, and circumstances from which the jury may infer the intent. (See R. v. Bleasdale, 2 C. & K. 765, and ante, pp. 308, 312.) Prove, also, that the mine was at the time in the possession or occupation of J. N., and is situate as described in the indictment.

STEALING OR CUTTING TREES, ETC.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 (Larceny Act, 1861), s. 32.]—Whosoever shall steal, or shall cut, break, root up, or otherwise destroy or damage with intent to steal, the whole or any part of any tree, sapling, or shrub, or any underwood, respectively growing in any park, pleasure-ground, garden, orchard, or avenue, or in any ground adjoining or belonging to any dwelling-house, shall (in case the value of the article or articles stolen, or the amount of the injury done, shall exceed the sum of one pound) be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable to be punished as in the case of simple larceny (ante, p. 428);

And whosoever shall steal, or shall cut, break, root up, or otherwise destroy or damage with intent to steal, the whole or any part of any tree, sapling, or shrub, or any underwood, respectively growing elsewhere than in any of the situations in this section before mentioned, shall (in case the value of the article or articles stolen, or the amount of the injury done shall exceed the sum of five pounds) be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable to be punished as in the case of simple larceny. (Ante, p. 428.) [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 38.]

Indictment for stealing or cutting, etc., with intent to steal, Trees, etc., in Parks, etc., Value above £1.

Commencement. as ante, p. 433]—one oak-tree ("the whole or any part of any tree, sapling, or shrub, or any underwood"), of the value of two pounds,* the property of J. N., then growing in a certain park ("park, pleasure-ground, garden, orchard, avenue, or any ground adjoining or belonging to any dwelling-house") of the said J. N., situate in the parish of ——, in the county of ——, in the said park, feloniously did steal, take, and carry away [or feloniously did cut ("cut, break, root up, or otherwise destroy or damage") with intent the same feloniously to steal, take, and carry away]; then thereby doing injury to the said J. N., to an amount exceeding the sum of one pound, to wit, to the amount of two pounds]; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

* If the indictment be for cutting, etc., with intent to steal, omit this allegation of value.

Felony: punishment same as in simple larceny.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 32. (See ante, pp. 428, 433.)

Evidence.

Prove a larceny of the tree, as directed, ante, p. 434 et seq.; or, if the indictment allege that the defendant cut, etc., the tree with intent to steal it, prove the cutting, etc., as stated in the indictment, and circumstances from which the jury may infer the intent. (See ante, p. 283.) In the former case, the value of the tree, and in the latter, the amount of the injury done, must be proved to exceed the sum of 1*l.* But if several trees be stolen or cut at the same time, or so continuously as to form one transaction, and the value or injury done exceed that amount in the aggregate, it will be sufficient. R. v. Shepherd, L. R., 1 C. C. R., 118; 37 L. J. (M. C.) 45: 11 Cox, 119. The injury mentioned in the statute means the actual injury to the tree itself, not consequential injury resulting from the defendant's act; and where the evidence showed that the actual injury done to certain trees damaged by the defendant was less than the statutable amount, but that it would, in consequence of the damage done, be necessary to stub up and replace part of an old hedge, at an expense greater than the statutable amount, this was held insufficient. R. v. Whiteman, Dears. 353; 23 L. J. (M. C.) 120. Prove that the tree, etc., stolen or cut, etc., was at the time growing in a park, etc., belonging to or in the occupation of J. N., and situate as described in the indictment. The words "adjoining any dwelling-house" import actual contact; and therefore ground separated from a house by a narrow walk and paling, wall, or gate, is not within their meaning. R. v. Hodges, M. & M. 341.

Indictment for stealing, or cutting, etc., with intent to steal, Trees, etc., growing elsewhere, value above 5l.

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—one ash-tree ("the whole or any part of any tree, sapling, or shrub, or any underwood") of the value of six pounds,* the property of J. N., then growing in a certain close ("elsewhere than in a park, pleasure-ground, garden, orchard, avenue, or any ground adjoining or belonging to any dwelling-house") of the said J. N., situate in the parish of ——, in the county of ——, in the said close, feloniously did steal, take, and carry away [or feloniously did cut ("cut, break, root up, or otherwise damage or destroy") with intent the same feloniously to steal, take, and carry away; thereby then doing injury to the said J. N., to an amount exceeding the sum of five pounds, to wit to the amount of six pounds]; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

* If the indictment be for cutting, etc., with intent to steal, etc., omit this allegation of value.

Felony: see the last precedent.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 32 (ante, p. 483).

Evidence.

Prove a larceny of the tree, as directed, ante, pp. 434 et seq.; or, if the indictment allege that the defendant cut, etc., the tree with intent to steal it, prove the cutting, as stated in the indictment, and circumstances from which the jury may infer the intent. (See ante, pp. 303, 312.) In the former case, the value of the tree, and in the latter the amount of injury done (see supra), must be proved to exceed the value of 5*l*., but if several trees be stolen or cut at the same time, or so continuously as to form one transaction, and the value or injury done in the aggregate exceed that amount, it will be sufficient. R. v. Shepherd, L. R., 1 C. C. R. 118; 37 L. J. (M. C.) 45. Prove that the close in which the tree was stolen or cut belonged to or was in the occupation of J. N., and was situate as described in the indictment. It is not necessary to prove that the close was not a park, etc.

STEALING OR CUTTING TREES, AFTER TWO PREVIOUS CONVICTIONS, AND STEALING FENCES.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 (Larceny Act, 1861), s. 33—First offence.]—Whosoever shall steal, or shall cut, break, root up, or otherwise destroy or damage with intent to steal, the whole or any part of any tree, sapling, or shrub, or any underwood, wheresoever the same may be respectively growing, the stealing of such article or articles, or the injury done being to the amount of a shilling at the least, shall, on conviction thereof before a justice of the peace, forfeit and pay, over and above the value of the article or articles stolen, or the amount of the injury done, such sum of money, not exceeding five pounds, as to the justice shall seem meet;

Second offence.]—And whosoever, having been convicted of any such offence, either against this or any former Act of Parliament, shall afterwards commit any of the said offences in this section before mentioned, and shall be convicted thereof in like manner, shall for such second offence be committed to the common gaol or house of correction, there to be kept to hard labour for such term, not exceeding twelve months, as the convicting justice shall think fit. [A person charged with a second offence under this section can elect to be tried on indictment: see post, p. 487.]

Subsequent offence.]—And whosoever, having been twice convicted of any such offence (whether both or either of such convictions shall have taken place before or after the passing of this Act), shall afterwards commit any of the offences in this section before mentioned shall be guilty of felony, and, being convicted thereof, shall be liable to be punished in the same manner as in the case of simple larceny. (Ante, p. 428.) [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 40.]

Sect. 34—Stealing, cutting, etc., live or dead fences. First offence.]—Whosoever shall steal, or shall cut, break, or throw down with intent to steal, any part of any live or dead fence or any wooden post, pale, wire, or rail set up or used as a fence or any stile or gate or any part thereof respectively, shall on conviction before a justice of the peace forfeit and pay over and above the value of the article or articles so stolen, or the amount of injury done such sum of money not exceeding 5*l*. as to the justice shall seem meet;

Subsequent offence.]—And whosoever having been convicted of any such offence, either against this or any former Act of Parliament shall afterwards commit any of the said offences in this section before mentioned and shall be convicted thereof in like manner shall be committed to the common gaol or house of correction, there to be kept to hard labour for such term not exceeding twelve months as the convicting justice shall think fit. [A person charged with a second or subsequent offence may elect to be tried on indictment, as to which, see post, p. 487.]

Indictment. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 33.)

Middlesex, to wit: The jurors for our lord the King, upon their oath present, that J. S., on the —— day of ——, A.D. 1905, one oak sapling ("the whole or any part of any tree, sapling or shrub, or any underwood") of the value of two shillings,* the property of J. N., then growing in certain land situate in the parish of ——, in the county of —— ("wheresoever growing"), unlawfully did steal, take, and carry away, [or unlawfully did cut ("cut, break, root up, or otherwise destroy or damage"), with intent the same unlawfully to steal, take, and carry away, thereby then doing injury to the said J. Second count.]—And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present, that the said J. S. afterwards, to wit, on the —— day of —— A.D. 1905, one oak sapling, of the value of two shillings,* the property of the said J. N., then growing in certain land, situate in the said parish of ——, in the said county of ——, feloniously did steal, take and carry away [or feloniously did cut, with intent the same feloniously to steal, take, and carry away, thereby then doing injury to the said J. N., to an amount exceeding the sum of one shilling, to wit, to the amount of two shillings]; against the form of the statute in such case made and provided: And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do say, that heretofore and before the committing of the offence in this count hereinbefore mentioned, to wit, on the —— day of ——, A.D. [here set out the first conviction as in the first count]: And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further say, that heretofore, and before the committing of the offence in this count first hereinbefore mentioned, to wit, on the —— day of —— A.D. [here set out the second conviction as directed in the first count].

* If the indictment be for cutting, etc., with intent to steal, omit the allegation of value in this place.

A first and second offence against 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 33, supra, are both punishable on summary conviction (subject to the right of the accused on a second charge to elect to be tried on indictment, 42 & 43 Vict. c. 49, s. 17, ante, p. 6), but a third or subsequent offence against that section is a felony. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 116 (ante, p. 430) enacts, that, "in any indictment for any offence punishable under this Act, and committed after a previous conviction or convictions for any felony, misdemeanor, or offence or offences punishable upon summary conviction, it shall be sufficient after charging the subsequent offence, to state that the offender was at a certain time and place or at certain times and places convicted of felony, or of an indictable misdemeanor, or of an offence or offences punishable upon summary conviction (as the case may be), without otherwise describing the previous felony, misdemeanor, offence, or offences," etc. It appears clear from this enactment that it was intended that the subsequent offence should be first charged, and in both counts of the above form of indictment that course has accordingly been adopted.

It will be seen that the first count consists of three parts:—1. The charge of the subsequent offence which is charged as an offence, not as a felony. 2. The charge of the two previous summary convictions. 3. An averment commencing, "And so the jurors aforesaid," etc. The reason for charging the subsequent offence first has already been given. It is charged in the first instance as an offence only by reason of the terms of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 116 (ante, p. 430). In pursuance of this enactment, therefore, the prisoner must be first arraigned for the subsequent offence, and if he plead not guilty, the jury must first inquire and give their verdict concerning that subsequent offence. They cannot find the prisoner guilty of felonious stealing at that stage of the proceedings, for they are then ignorant of the previous conviction, and therefore, at that stage, they can only find him guilty of the offence of unlawfully stealing. If they find him guilty of the unlawful stealing, they are then to inquire of the previous convictions. If they find him guilty of the previous convictions, or if he pleads guilty to them, the ingredients are complete which make the felony, which, however, up to that time they have not expressly found. But then follows the third part of the indictment, "And so the jurors aforesaid," etc. This last part of the indictment, perhaps, need not be put to the jury in so many words, as the verdict of guilty of the subsequent offence, together with the verdict of guilty of the previous convictions, amount to a verdict of guilty of the felony, and would, as it should seem, authorize the entry of such a verdict on the record. That the omission of the word "feloniously," in the first part of the indictment, does not vitiate it, see R. v. Crighton, R. & R. 62, in which case an indictment for embezzlement was held good, in which the word "feloniously," was omitted before the word "embezzled," in the first part of the indictment, which, however, concluded—and so the jurors say that the prisoner did "feloniously embezzle, steal, take, and carry away," etc. Sect. 116 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, is analogous to s. 37 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99 (the Coinage Offences Act, 1861), and the mode of proceeding at the trial above suggested was approved in R. v. Martin, L. R., 1 C. C. R. 214; 39 L. J. (M. C.) 31 (C. C. R.), where the prisoner was indicted under s. 12 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, for being unlawfully in possession of counterfeit coin, after having been convicted of unlawfully uttering counterfeit coin. The court held that as s. 37 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99 regulated the mode of proceeding at the trial, the prisoner must first be arraigned upon the subsequent offence, and evidence respecting the subsequent offence must first be submitted to the jury, and the charge of the previous conviction must not be inquired into until after the verdict on the charge of the subsequent offence.

The second count varies from the first in charging the subsequent offence in the first instance as a felony.

As to setting out the previous convictions in full in the indictment, see ante, p. 472.

Felony: punishable as simple larceny. (See ante, p. 428.)—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 33.

The right to prosecute is not limited to the owner of the injured property or a person aggrieved by the injury. Tarry v. Newman, 15 M. & W. 645: Smith v. Dear [1903] 67 J. P. Rep. 244; 88 L. T. 664.

Evidence.

Prove the larceny of the sapling, as directed ante, pp. 434 et seq.; or, if the defendant be charged with cutting, etc., the sapling with intent to steal it, the cutting, as stated in the indictment, and circumstances from which the jury may imply the intent. (See ante, p. 312.) Prove, also, that the sapling was growing on land belonging to or in the occupation of J. N., and that, in the first case, the value, and, in the second, the amount of the injury done (see ante, p. 483) exceeds one shilling. If the defendant pleads guilty, or is found guilty, of the subsequent offence, prove the two former convictions in manner directed by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 116, ante, p. 430, and the identity of the defendant. The course of proceedings at the trial as to the arraignment, etc. (as to which see ante, pp. 185, 486), is also regulated by the last-named section.

STEALING OR DESTROYING PLANTS, ETC., IN GARDENS, ETC.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 (Larceny Act, 1861), s. 36—First offence.]—Whosoever shall steal, or shall destroy or damage with intent to steal, any plant, root, fruit, or vegetable production growing in any garden, orchard, pleasure-ground, nursery-ground, hothouse, greenhouse, or conservatory, shall, on conviction thereof before a justice of the peace, at the discretion of the justice, either be committed to the common gaol or house of correction, there to be imprisoned only, or to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour for any term not exceeding six months, or else shall forfeit and pay, over and above the value of the article or articles so stolen, or the amount of the injury done, such sum of money, not exceeding twenty pounds, as to the justice shall seem meet [the defendant may elect to be tried on indictment: see note, post, p. 490];

Subsequent offence.]—And whosoever having been convicted of any such offence, either against this or any former Act of Parliament, shall afterwards commit any of the offences in this section before mentioned, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable to be punished in the same manner as in the case of simple larceny. [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 42, with the additions italicized.]

Indictment for a Subsequent Offence.

Middlesex, to wit: The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present, that J. S., on the —— day of ——, A.D. 1905, twenty pounds' weight of grapes ("plant, root, fruit, or vegetable production"), the property of J. N., then growing in a certain garden ("garden, orchard, pleasure-ground, nursery-ground, hothouse, greenhouse, or conservatory") of the said J. N., situate in the parish of ——, in the county of ——, unlawfully did steal, take, and carry away, [or unlawfully did damage ("destroy or damage"), with intent the same then and there unlawfully to steal, take, and carry away]; against the form of the statute in such case made and provided: And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do say, that heretofore, and before the committing of the offence hereinbefore mentioned, to wit, on the —— day of —— A.D. 1902, at —— in the county of ——, the said J. S. was duly convicted before J. P., Esq., and the Rev. O. R., clerk, two of his said Majesty's justices of the peace for the said county of ——, for that he the said J. S. on [etc., as in the previous conviction, to the words]—against the form of the statute in such case made and provided; and the said J. S. was thereupon then and there adjudged for his said offence to forfeit and pay the sum of twenty pounds, over and above the amount of the injury so done as aforesaid, and the further sum of six shillings, being the amount of the said injury; and also to pay the sum of —— shillings for costs; and in default of immediate payment of the said sums, to be imprisoned in the ——, and there kept to hard labour for —— calendar months, unless the said sums should be sooner paid: And so the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do say that the said J. S. on the day and in the year first aforesaid, the said twenty pounds' weight of grapes, the property of the said J. N., then growing in the said garden of the said J. N., situate in the said parish of ——, in the said county of ——, feloniously did steal, take, and carry away [or feloniously did damage, with intent the same then and there feloniously to steal, take, and carry away]; against the form of the statute in such case made and provided.

Second count.]—And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present, that the said J. S. afterwards, to wit, on the —— day of ——, A.D. 1905, twenty pounds' weight of grapes, the property of the said J. N., then growing in a certain garden of the said J. N., situate in the said parish of ——, in the said county of ——, feloniously did steal, take, and carry away [or feloniously did damage with intent the same then and there feloniously to steal, take, and carry away]; against the form of the statute in such case made and provided: And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do say, that heretofore, and before the committing of the offence in this count hereinbefore mentioned, to wit, on the —— day of ——, A.D. 1902 [here set out the previous conviction as in the first count. As to the form of this indictment, see the note to the last precedent (ante, p. 487).

Felony: punishable as simple larceny. (See ante, p. 428.)—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 36.

Evidence.

Prove a larceny of the grapes, as directed ante, p. 434 et seq.; or, if the indictment allege that the defendant damaged the grapes with intent to steal them, the damage, as stated in the indictment, and circumstances from which the jury may infer the intent. (See ante, p. 312.) Prove, also, that at the time of the offence the grapes were growing in a garden belonging to or in the occupation of J. N., and situated as described in the indictment. If the defendant plead guilty to, or is found guilty of, the subsequent offence, prove the previous conviction in manner directed by the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 116 (ante, p. 430), and the identity of the defendant. The course of proceedings at the trial as to arraignment, etc., is regulated by the last-named section. As to this, and the reason for inserting the second count, see ante, p. 487.

The words "plant," or "vegetable production," in 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 42, did not include young trees. R. v. Hodges, M. & M. 341. Whether the ground be properly described as a garden, is a question for the jury. Id.

Subsequent offence.]—And whosoever having been convicted of any such offence, either against this or any former Act of Parliament, shall afterwards commit any of the said offences in this section before mentioned, and shall be convicted thereof in like manner, shall be committed to the common gaol or house of correction, there to be kept to hard labour for such term not exceeding six months as the convicting justice shall think fit. [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 43. By the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), s. 17 (ante, p. 6), on proceedings under the above section for a second or subsequent offence, the accused may elect to be tried on indictment, in which case the offence is treated as indictable, and the costs of prosecution are payable as in felony. The fact of his election to be indicted need not be averred. R. v. Chambers, 65 L. J. (M. C.) 214; 18 Cox, 401.]

Indictment.

An indictment for this offence can be framed on the precedent, ante, p. 489.

Evidence.

Prove the offence as directed, ante, p. 490.

Clover was held to be a cultivated root or plant within 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 43, of which 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 37, is a re-enactment. R. v. Brumby, 5 Cox, 315; 3 C. & K. 315, Williams, J.

STEALING, OR CUTTING WITH INTENT, ETC., LEAD, METAL, OR FIXTURES.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 (Larceny Act, 1861), s. 31.]—Whosoever shall steal, or shall rip, cut, sever, or break with intent to steal, any glass or wood-work belonging to any building whatsoever, or any lead, iron, copper, brass, or other metal, or any utensil or fixture, whether made of metal or other material, or of both, respectively fixed in or to any building whatsoever, or anything made of metal fixed in any land, being private property, or for a fence to any dwelling-house, garden, or area, or in any square or street, or in any place dedicated to public use or ornament, or in any burial-ground, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable to be punished as in the case of simple larceny;

And in the case of any such thing fixed in any such square, street, or place as aforesaid, it shall not be necessary to allege the same to be the property of any person. Indictment for stealing, or cutting with intent, etc., Lead, etc., affixed to Buildings, etc. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 31.)

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—sixty pounds' weight of lead ("any glass or wood-work belonging to any building whatsoever, or any lead, iron, copper, brass, or other metal, or any utensil or fixture, whether made of metal or other material, or of both"), the property of J. N., then being fixed to the dwelling-house ("any building whatsoever") of the said J. N., situate in the parish of ——, in the county of ——, feloniously did steal, take, and carry away [or feloniously did rip, cut, sever, and break ("rip, cut, sever, or break"), with intent the same feloniously to steal, take, and carry away]; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

The offence being a statutory felony and not larceny at common law, the venue can only be laid in the county in which the offence was committed. R. v. Millar, 7 C. & P. 665.

Felony: punishable as simple larceny. (See ante, pp. 428, 433.)—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 81.

Evidence.

Prove a larceny of the lead, etc., as directed ante, p. 434 et seq.; or if the indictment charge that the defendant ripped, etc., the lead, with intent to steal it, prove the ripping, etc., as stated in the indictment, and circumstances from which the jury may infer the intent. (See ante, pp. 303, 312.) Prove, also, that the house from which the lead was stolen or ripped was the dwelling-house of J. N., situate as described in the indictment. On an indictment for stealing lead from the dwelling-house of W., B. proved that he managed the property of W., who resided at Patras, that he received the rent for W. and let the house: it was held that W.'s ownership was sufficiently proved. R. v. Brummitt, L. & C. 9; 8 Cox, 413. An unfinished building intended as a cart-shed, which is boarded up on all its sides, and has a door with a lock on it, and the frame of a roof with loose gorse thrown upon it, because it is not yet thatched, is a building within the meaning of this statute. R. v. Worrall, 7 C. & P. 516. Any material variance in the description of the building, between the indictment and evidence, will be fatal, unless amended (see ante, p. 298).

An indictment for stealing a copper pipe fixed to the dwelling-house of A and B, was held not supported by proof of stealing a pipe fixed to two rooms of which A and B were separate tenants in the same house. R. v. Finch, 1 Mood. C. C. 418. Where a man (having given a false representation of himself) got into possession of a house under a treaty for a lease of it, and then stripped it of the lead, the jury being of opinion that he obtained possession of the house with intent to steal the lead, found him guilty; and he afterwards had judgment. R. v. Munday, 2 Leach, 850; 2 East, P. C. 594. An indictment for stealing lead fixed to "a certain wharf" was held to be sufficient, it being proved that the wharf was in fact a building. R. v. Rice, Bell, 87; 28 L. J. (M. C.) 64.

Upon an indictment on this section of the statute, the defendant cannot be convicted of a simple larceny. R. v. Gooch, 8 C. & P. 293; and see R. v. Millar (ante, p. 491).

Indictment for stealing, or ripping, etc., with intent, etc., Metal fixed in Land, being Private Property, or for a Fence to a Dwelling-house, etc. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 31.)

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—two hundred pounds' weight of iron ("anything made of metal"), the property of J. N., then being fixed in certain land which was then private property, to wit, in a garden ("in any land being private property") of the said J. N., situate in the parish of ——, in the county of —— [or, fixed for a fence to a dwelling-house ("dwelling-house, garden, or area") of the said J. N., situate, etc.], feloniously did steal, take, and carry away [or feloniously did rip, cut, sever, and break ("rip, cut, sever, or break"), with intent the same feloniously to steal, take, and carry away]; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

Felony: punishable as simple larceny. (See ante, pp. 428, 433.)—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 31.

Evidence.

Prove a larceny of the iron, as directed ante, p. 434 et seq.; or, if the indictment charge that the defendant ripped, etc., the iron with intent to steal it, prove the ripping, etc., and circumstances from which the jury may infer the intent. (See ante, pp. 303, 312.) Prove, also, that the iron was fixed in a garden in the possession or occupation of J. N.; that the garden was private property, and is situate as described in the indictment; or, if the indictment be for stealing, or ripping, etc., with intent to steal, iron fixed for a fence to a dwelling-house, etc., prove that the iron was fixed as stated in the indictment; that the dwelling-house was at the time in the possession or occupation of J. N., and is situate as described in the indictment. The defendant cannot be convicted of simple larceny. R. v. Gooch (ante, p. 492).

Indictment for stealing, or ripping, etc., with intent to steal Metal fixed in a Square, etc. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 31.)

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—ten iron rails, and twenty-five pounds' weight of iron ("anything made of metal"), then being fixed in a certain square called Grosvenor Square, situate in the parish of ——, in the county of —— ("in any square or street, or in any place dedicated to public use or ornament, or in any burial-ground"), feloniously did steal, take, and carry away [or, feloniously did rip, cut, sever, and break ("rip, cut, sever, or break") with intent the same feloniously to steal, take, and carry away]; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. It is not necessary in the indictment to allege the thing stolen, etc., to be the property of any person. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 31.

Felony: punishable as simple larceny. (See ante, p. 428.)—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 31.

Evidence.

Prove a larceny of the rails, as directed ante, p. 434 et seq.; or, if the indictment charge the defendant with ripping, etc., the rails with intent to steal them, prove the ripping, etc., and circumstances from which the jury may infer the intent. (See ante, pp. 303, 312.) Prove, also, that the rails were fixed in the square, as mentioned in the indictment, and that the square is situate as is there described. It is not necessary to prove that the rails were the property of any person. The defendant cannot be convicted of simple larceny. R. v. Gooch (ante, p. 492).

STEALING, REMOVING, OBLITERATING, ETC., RECORDS, ETC.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 (Larceny Act, 1861), s. 30.]—Whosoever shall steal, or shall for any fraudulent purpose take from its place of deposit for the time being, or from any person having the lawful custody thereof, or shall unlawfully and maliciously cancel, obliterate, injure, or destroy the whole or any part of any record, writ, return, panel, process, interrogatory, deposition, affidavit, rule, order, or warrant of attorney, or of any original document whatsoever of or belonging to any court of record, or relating to any matter, civil or criminal, begun, depending, or terminated in any such court, or of any bill, petition, answer, interrogatory, deposition, affidavit, order or decree, or of any original document whatsoever of or belonging to any court of equity, or relating to any cause or matter begun, depending, or terminated in any such court, or of any original document in anywise relating to the business of any office or employment under [his] Majesty, and being or remaining in any office appertaining to any court of justice or in any of [his] Majesty's castles, palaces, or houses, or in any government or public office, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude . . . ; and it shall not in any indictment for such offence be necessary to allege that the article, in respect of which the offence is committed, is the property of any person. [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 21, with the additions italicized.]

Indictment for stealing a Record, etc. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 30.)

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—a certain record (writ, etc., or other original document) of (of or belonging to) a certain Court of Record, to wit a (describe record) of the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice, feloniously did steal, take, and carry away; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. It is not necessary to allege that the record, etc., is the property of any person. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 30.

By the R. S. C., 1883, Order LXI., Rule 8, it is no longer necessary to enrol any judgment or order of the High Court, and in the case of modern records the document should be described according to the name by which it is most commonly known, and so as to identify the particular record.

Felony: penal servitude for not less than three years and not exceeding five years, or imprisonment for not more than two years, with or without hard labour. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 30; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances, and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 431).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions.—5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove a larceny of the record, etc., described in the indictment, as directed, ante, p. 434 et seq. It is an indictable offence at common law, to steal the parchment upon which a record, not concerning the realty, is written. R. v. Walker, 1 Mood. C. C. 155. A warrant of execution on a judgment in the county court had issued against the prisoner, under which a levy had been made by the high bailiff, and the warrant was handed to the under-bailiff, who was then left in possession of the prisoner's goods. The prisoner afterwards forcibly took the warrant from the under-bailiff, kept it, and then ordered him away as having no longer authority to remain there, and on his refusal to leave forcibly turned him out of the house in which the goods were. The prisoner was convicted upon an indictment framed on 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s, 30, and charging in the first count a stealing of the warrant of execution, and in the second a taking of the same for a fraudulent purpose from a person having the lawful custody thereof. It was held that the facts above mentioned did not afford any evidence of a larceny of the warrant, and that therefore the conviction on the first count could not be supported, but that they were sufficient to justify the conviction on the second count. R. v. Bailey, L. R., 1 C. C. R. 347; 41 L. J. (M. C.) 61.

Indictment for taking a Record, etc., from its Place of Deposit.
(24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 30.)

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—a certain record of (of or belonging to) a certain Court of Record, to wit a (describe record) of the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice, from its place of deposit for the time being, to wit, from the central office of the said court [or, from one J. N. then having the lawful custody of the same], feloniously and for a fraudulent purpose did take; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. If possible, add a second count, specifying the fraudulent purpose. (See post, p. 496.)

Felony: punishment and court of trial (see the last precedent).

Evidence.

Prove that the record, etc., described in the indictment was deposited in the central office of the High Court, or in the record office, or other place mentioned in the indictment, and that such was its proper place of deposit for the time being; or, that the person from whose custody the record, etc., is charged in the indictment to have been taken, was by law entitled to have, and in fact had, possession of it at the time. That the defendant took the record, etc., from the place or person mentioned in the indictment, which may be proved either by positive or by circumstantial evidence. (See ante, p. 339.) And that he took it for a fraudulent purpose, which, in most cases, can only be matter of inference from circumstances, and is not capable of direct proof. The mere taking is evidence from which fraud may fairly be presumed, unless it be satisfactorily explained by the defendant. As to what facts will support a conviction for taking the process of a court for a fraudulent purpose from a person having the lawful custody thereof, see R. v. Bailey, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 347; 41 L. J. (M. C.) 61 (ante, p. 494).

Indictment for cancelling, obliterating, injuring, or destroying a Record, etc. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 30.)

Commencement as ante, p. 433.]—A certain record of (of or belonging to) a certain Court of Record, to wit, a (describe record) of the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice (see supra), feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously did obliterate ("cancel, obliterate, injure, or destroy"), against the form [as ante, p. 465].

Felony: punishment and place of trial (see the precedent ante, p. 494).

Evidence.

Prove the obliteration, injury, or destruction of the record, etc., by the defendant, as stated in the indictment. Prove that it was done maliciously, which may be inferred, if it be proved to have been done wilfully: see post, p. 651.

STEALING, DESTROYING, CONCEALING WILLS, ETC.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 (Larceny Act, 1861), s. 29.]—Whosoever shall, either during the life of the testator, or after his death, steal, or for any fraudulent purpose destroy, cancel, obliterate, or conceal, the whole or any part of any will, codicil, or other testamentary instrument, whether the same shall relate to real or personal estate, or to both, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for life. . . .

And it shall not in any indictment for such offence be necessary to allege, that such will, codicil, or other instrument, is the property of any person:

Provided that nothing in this or the last preceding section (see post, p. 497) mentioned, nor any proceeding, conviction, or judgment to be had or taken thereupon, shall prevent, lessen, or impeach any remedy at law or in equity, which any party aggrieved by any such offence might or would have had if this Act had not been passed; but no conviction of any such offender shall be received in evidence in any action at law or suit in equity against him;

And no person shall be liable to be convicted of any of the felonies in this and the last preceding section mentioned (post, p. 497) by any evidence whatever, in respect of any act done by him, if he shall at any time previously to his being charged with such offence, have first disclosed such act on oath, in consequence of any compulsory process of any court of law or equity in any action, suit, or proceeding which shall have been bonâ fide instituted by any party aggrieved; or if he shall have first disclosed the same in any compulsory examination or deposition before any court upon the hearing of any matter in bankruptcy or insolvency. [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, ss. 23, 24, with the alterations indicated in italics. The word "first" was inserted to get rid of the doubt expressed in R. v. Skeen, Bell, 97, post, p. 497.]

Indictment.

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—a certain will and testamentary instrument of one J. N., feloniously did steal, take, and carry away [or, feloniously, and for a fraudulent purpose, did cancel, destroy, and obliterate, or did conceal]; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. Where the indictment is for destroying or concealing a will, etc., add another count specifying the fraudulent purpose, if it can be done with certainty. In R. v. Morris, 9 C. & P. 89, Alderson, B., intimated an opinion that such statement was necessary to the validity of the indictment. It is not necessary to allege that the will, etc., is the property of any person. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 29.

Felony: penal servitude for life, or for not less than three years, or imprisonment for not more than two years, with or without hard labour.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 29; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances, and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 431).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions.—5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove a larceny of the will, etc., as directed ante, p. 434 et seq.; or, if the indictment be for destroying or concealing a will, etc., prove the destruction or concealment by the defendant as stated in the indictment, and also the fraudulent purpose for which he did it. The fraudulent purpose can, in most cases, be only matter of inference not capable of direct proof (see R. v. Morris, 9 C. & P. 89); but the mere destruction or concealment, unexplained by the defendant, is evidence from which fraud may fairly be presumed. It is immaterial whether the will, etc., be stolen during the life or after the death of the testator, or whether it relate to real or personal estate, or to both.

No person can be convicted of this offence by any evidence whatever, in respect of any act done by him, if at any time previously to his being charged with the offence he shall "have first disclosed such act on oath, in consequence of any compulsory process of any court of law or equity, in any action, suit, or proceeding which shall have been bonâ fide instituted by any party aggrieved: or if he shall have first disclosed the same in any examination or deposition before any court upon the hearing of any matter in bankruptcy or insolvency." The words of 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 23 (rep.), were different from the present, in not confining the protection to the case where the defendant shall have first disclosed the act on oath in consequence of the compulsory process of any court, etc., or in any examination or deposition in bankruptcy; and where a defendant, indicted for having fraudulently transferred for his own benefit a bill of lading intrusted to him as a broker, under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39 (rep.), which contained a proviso similar in its term to the last branch of the proviso in 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 23 (rep.) had, after he was charged with the offence before a magistrate, upon which occasion depositions were taken containing full evidence to support the charge, but before he was indicted, made, in his examination in the court of bankruptcy, a statement which was substantially an admission of the facts stated in such depositions, the judges were divided on the question whether the defendant was protected by the proviso: the majority holding that he was not, for that the disclosure intended by the statute was a statement of that which was before unknown or incapable of proof, or which, at all events he had reason to believe was so. R. v. Skeen, Bell, 97; 28 L. J. (M. C.) 91. This difficulty was avoided by the language of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 29 (ante, p. 495), which limits the protection to the case where the party shall, previously to his being charged with (not indicted for) the offence, have first disclosed the act on oath, etc. Evidence of A. that B. had told him that C. had committed an offence, is inadmissible as against C. as evidence of the knowledge of B. as to the fact of C. having committed the offence; and it was therefore inadmissible as evidence that an offence, disclosed by C. a bankrupt, in his examination, had been disclosed previously to such examination, so as to disentitle C. to the protection of the proviso to 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 85 (post, p. 578); R. v. Gunnell, 16 Cox, 154 (C. C. R.), in which case the meaning of the words "first disclosure" was fully considered. The proviso discussed in R. v. Gunnell, which was in identical terms with that of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 29, was repealed by 53 & 54 Vict. c. 71, s. 29: see post, pp. 579, 581; but the latter Act has not affected section 29 of the Larceny Act, and R. v. Gunnell seems to be still a guide to the meaning of that section.

STEALING DOCUMENTS OF TITLE TO REAL ESTATE.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 (Larceny Act, 1861), s. 1.—Definition of Document of Title to Lands.]—(Ante, p. 427.)

Sect. 28.]—Whosoever shall steal, or shall for any fraudulent purpose destroy, cancel, obliterate or conceal, the whole or any part of any document of title to lands, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude . . . ;

And in any indictment for any such offence relating to any document of title to lands, it shall be sufficient to allege such document to be or to contain evidence of the title or of part of the title of the person or of some one of the persons having an interest, whether vested or contingent, legal or equitable, in the real estate to which the same relates, and to mention such real estate, or some part thereof. [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 23, with the alterations indicated in italics. See Greaves Criminal Law Consolidation Acts (2nd ed.), p. 123.]

Sect. 29.]—Ante, p. 495.

Indictment.

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—a certain deed, the property of J. N., being [or, containing] evidence of the title [or, of part of the title] of the said J. N. to a certain real estate [or, to part of a certain real estate] called Whiteacre, in which said real estate the said J. N. then had, and still hath, an interest, feloniously did steal, take and carry away (or feloniously and unlawfully, and for a fraudulent purpose did destroy [destroy, cancel, obliterate or conceal]); against the form [as ante, p. 465]. Add a second count, describing the nature of the instrument more particularly thus:—a certain [other] deed, being a deed of release between A. B. of the one part, and C. D. of the other part, the property of J. N., being evidence, etc. And where the indictment is for destroying, etc., the document, add a count specifying the fraudulent purpose, if it can be done; see ante, p. 496. It is sufficient to allege the document stolen to be or to contain evidence of the title, or of part of the title, of the person, or of some one of the persons, having an interest, whether vested or contingent, legal or equitable, in the real estate to which the same relates; and to mention such real estate, or some part thereof.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 28.

Mortgage deeds, being subsisting securities for money, are choses in action, and cannot be described in an indictment as "goods and chattels." R. v. Powell, 2 Den. 403; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 78.

Felony: penal servitude for not less than three years and not exceeding five years, or imprisonment for not more than two years, with or without hard labour—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 28; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 431).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove a larceny of the deed, as directed ante, p. 434, et seq. Prove also, that it is, or contains, evidence of the title or part of the title of J. N. to the real estate mentioned in the indictment, or part of it, which may be done by producing the instrument, or giving secondary evidence of it (see ante, pp. 315, 316, 380), and by showing how J. N. claims the estate. Prove, also, that at the time of the larceny J. N. had an interest (whether vested or contingent, legal or equitable, is sufficient) in the real estate, of his title to which the deed is evidence.

No person can be convicted of this offence by any evidence whatever in respect of any act done by him, if at any time previously to its being charged with the offence he shall "have first disclosed such act on oath, in consequence of any compulsory process of any court of law or equity, in any action, suit or proceeding which shall have been bonâ fide instituted by any party aggrieved, or if he shall have first disclosed the same in any compulsory examination or deposition before any court upon the hearing of any matter in bankruptcy or insolvency." 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 29 (see ante, p. 495).

CONCEALMENT OF INSTRUMENT OF TITLE OR FALSIFICATION OF PEDIGREE BY VENDOR OR MORTGAGOR, OR HIS SOLICITOR OR AGENT.

Statute.

22 & 23 Vict. c. 35 (Law of Property Amendment Act, 1859), s. 24.]—Any seller or mortgagor of land, or of any chattels, real or personal, or choses in action conveyed or assigned to a purchaser [or mortgagee, see 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 8, infra], or the solicitor or agent of any such seller or mortgagor, who shall, after the passing of this Act (Aug. 13, 1859) conceal any settlement, deed, will, or other instrument material to the title, or any incumbrance from the purchaser [or mortgagee, see 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 8, infra], or falsify any pedigree upon which the title does or may depend, in order to induce him to accept the title offered or produced to him, with intent in any of such cases to defraud, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being found guilty shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to suffer such punishment by fine or imprisonment for any time not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour or by both, as the court shall award, and shall also be liable to an action for damages at the suit of the purchaser or mortgagee, or those claiming under the purchaser or mortgagee, for any loss sustained by them, or either or any of them, in consequence of the settlement, deed, will, or other instrument or incumbrance so concealed, or of any claim made by any person under such pedigree, but whose right was concealed by the falsification of such pedigree; and in estimating such damages, where the estate shall be recovered from such purchaser or mortgagee, or from those claiming under the purchaser or mortgagee, regard shall be had to any expenditure by them or either or any of them in improvements on the land; but no prosecution for any offence included in this section against any seller or mortgagor, or any solicitor or agent, shall be commenced without the sanction of [his] Majesty's attorney-general, or in case that office be vacant, of [his] Majesty's solicitor-general; and no such sanction shall be given without such previous notice of the application for leave to prosecute to the person intended to be prosecuted as the attorney-general or the solicitor-general (as the case may be) shall direct.

Sect. 25.—Interpretation.]—In the construction of the previous provisions in this Act

The term "land" shall be taken to include all tenements and hereditaments, and any part or share of or estate or interest in any tenements or hereditaments, of what tenure or kind soever; and

The term "mortgage" shall be taken to include every instrument by virtue whereof land is in any manner conveyed, assigned, pledged, or charged as security for the repayment of money or money's worth lent, and to be re-conveyed, re-assigned, or released on satisfaction of the debt; and

The term "mortgagor" shall be taken to include every person by whom such conveyance, assignment, pledge, or charge as aforesaid shall be made; and

The term "mortgagee" shall be taken to include every person to whom or in whose favour any such conveyance, assignment, pledge, or charge as aforesaid is made or transferred.

23 & 24 Vict. c. 38 (Law of Property Amendment Act, 1860), s. 8.]—The section 24 in the Act 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35 (supra), shall be read and construed as if the words "or mortgagee" had followed the word "purchaser" in every place where the latter word is introduced in the said section.

STEALING VALUABLE SECURITIES.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 (Larceny Act, 1861), s. 27.]—Whosoever shall steal, or shall for any fraudulent purpose destroy, cancel, or obliterate the whole or any part of any valuable security, other than a document of title to lands (see ante, p. 427), shall be guilty of felony, of the same nature and in the same degree, and punishable in the same manner, as if he had stolen any chattel of like value with the share, interest or deposit to which the security so stolen may relate, or with the money due on the security so stolen, or secured thereby and remaining unsatisfied, or with the value of the goods or other valuable thing represented, mentioned or referred to in or by the security. [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 5, with addition of the words italicized.]

Definition of valuable security.]—Sect. 1, ante, p. 427.

Definition of document of title to goods.]—Ante, p. 426.

Indictment.

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—a certain valuable security, other than a document of title to lands, to wit, one bill of exchange for the payment of ten pounds, the property of J. N. [the said sum of ten pounds secured and payable by and upon the said bill of exchange being then due and unsatisfied to the said J. N.], feloniously did steal, take, and carry away; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. As to the description of the bill or other security, see ante, pp. 74, 75. As the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 27, limits the term "valuable security" to securities "other than a document of title to lands," it is material, in an indictment under it, to describe the security so as to show that it is within the section. R. v. Lowrie, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 61; 36 L. J. (M. C.) 24. If the instrument be for any reason void in law, the defendant may be convicted on a count charging him with stealing a piece of paper. R. v. Perry, 1 Den. 69; 1 C. & K. 725.

Felony of the same nature, and in the same degree, and punishable in the same manner, as if the defendant had stolen any chattel of like value with the share, interest, or deposit to which the security stolen may relate, or with the money due on the security so stolen, or secured thereby and remaining unsatisfied, or with the value of the goods or other valuable thing represented, mentioned, or referred to in or by the security. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 27 (supra).

Evidence.

Prove a larceny of the bill, etc., as directed, ante, p. 434, et seq. The defendant, a stock-broker, received from the prosecutor a cheque upon his banker, to purchase Exchequer bills for him; the defendant cashed the cheque and absconded with the money. Upon an indictment for stealing the cheque and the proceeds of it, it was held to be no larceny, although the jury found that, before he received the cheque, the defendant had formed the intention of converting the money to his own use; not of the cheque, because the defendant had used no fraud or contrivance to induce the prosecutor to give it to him; and because being the prosecutor's own cheque, and of no value in his hands, it could not be called his goods and chattels; nor of the proceeds of the cheque, because the prosecutor never had possession of them, except by the hands of the defendant. R. v. Walsh, R. & R. 215. But where the prosecutors gave to the defendant, who was occasionally employed as their clerk, a cheque payable to a creditor, to be delivered by him to the creditor, and he appropriated it to his own use, it was held by the judges to be a larceny of the cheque. R. v. Metcalf, 1 Mood. C. C. 433: R. v. Heath, 2 Mood. C. C. 33.

The bill or other security must be of the description specified in the statute. R. v. Lowrie, ubi supra. Where the defendant was indicted under 15 G. 2, c. 13, s. 12 (rep.) for stealing certain bills, commonly called Exchequer bills, and it appeared in evidence that the person who signed them on the part of the Government was not legally authorized to do so, it was held that they were not good Exchequer bills. R. v. Aslett, 2 Leach, 954. But on a subsequent trial of the same person, the documents were held to be "valuable effects or securities" within the said statute. Id. 958, 974.

In cases where the prosecutor has been compelled by duress or induced by fraud to sign a "valuable security," difficulties formerly arose in proving in support of an indictment for larceny that the property or possession of the instrument in question was in the prosecutor. These cases (R. v. Phipoe, 2 Leach, 673: R. v. Edwards, 6 C. & P. 515, 521: R. v. Smith, 2 Den. 449; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 111) are now provided for by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, ss. 48 and 90, which made it a criminal offence for a person by threats (s. 48, post, p. 522) or false pretences (s. 90, post, p. 594) to induce another to affix his name to any paper "in order that the same may be afterwards made or converted into or used or dealt with as a valuable security."

In consequence of an advertisement, A. applied to B. to raise money for him, B. promised to procure 5000*l.*, and produced ten blank 6*s.* stamps, across which A. wrote an acceptance, and B. took them up without saying anything, and afterwards filled up the stamps for 500*l.* each, and put them into circulation on these facts. Littledale, J., Bolland, B., and Bosanquet, J., held that the stamps so filled up were not bills of exchange, orders for the payment of money, or securities for money, within the meaning of 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 5 (rep.); and that, as the prosecutor never had any possession of the papers so as to enable him to maintain trespass for them, there was no taking of them such as to constitute larceny. R. v. Minter Hart, 6 C. & P. 106. But a document which was a complete bill of exchange in all respects, except that it wanted the drawer's signature, was held to be, when it had reached the hands of the intended drawer, a "security for the payment of money," within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 75 (rep.): R. v. Bowerman [1891] 1 Q. B. 112; 60 L. J. (M. C.) 13; and therefore would seem to be so within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 1. Where country bank-notes, paid by the agent in London, were sent by him to the bankers in the country to be re-issued, and were stolen by the defendant, who was indicted for stealing the notes, and also for stealing the paper and stamps, this was held to be a larceny of the paper and stamps; but the judges seem to have been of opinion that the notes were not within 2 G. 2, c. 25, s. 3 (rep.), because it could not be said that the money secured thereby was due and unsatisfied. R. v. Clark, R. & R. 181; 2 Leach, 1036. See R. v. Perry, 1 Den. 69; 1 C. & K. 725 (ante, p. 501). So, where the defendant was indicted for receiving certain pieces of stamped paper, the goods and chattels of the prosecutor, and it appeared that the notes had been paid in London, and were in the possession of a partner of the firm, who was taking them to the country to be re-issued, when they were stolen, it was held that they were properly described in the indictment as goods and chattels; but some of the judges doubted whether they were valuable securities within the meaning of 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 5 (rep.). R. v. Vyse, 1 Mood. C. C. 218. Documents which purported to be certificates entitling the holder to shares, and to receive dividends in a foreign railway company, and which passed by delivery like bank-notes, and were treated and dealt with on the London stock exchange as railway shares, were held to be valuable securities within that statute. R. v. Smith, Dears. 561; 25 L. J. (M. C.) 31. The halves of notes, if stolen, may be described as goods and chattels. R. v. Mead, 4 C. & P. 535. It would seem, however, that they may also be described as parts of a valuable security, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 27 (ante, p. 500). The notes themselves may be described as money: 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 18 (ante, p. 54). Where upon an indictment on 7 G. 3, c. s. (rep.), which made it felony for persons employed in the post office to secrete any letter, etc., containing any note, etc., it appeared that the note had been paid to the holder, and had not been re-issued, the judges were of opinion that such notes retained the character and fell within the description of promissory notes, and were, as promissory notes, valuable to the owners of them. R. v. Ranson, R. & R. 232; 2 Leach, 1090, 1093. A cheque on a banker, written on unstamped paper, payable to D. F. J., and not made payable to bearer, was held not to be a valuable security within the meaning of the statute. R. v. Yates, 1 Mood. C. C. 170. A cheque on a banker may be described as "a valuable security, to wit, a cheque of the value of," etc., without stating the drawee to be a banker. R. v. Heath, 2 Mood. C. C. 33. It is not necessary that a bill should be indorsed by the payee at the time it is stolen, so as to be in a negotiable state. Anon., 2 East, P. C. 598. But in R. v. Pooley, R. & R. 12: 2 Leach, 887, an unstamped draft was held to be of no value and not to be a bill or draft within 7 G. 3, c. 50, s. 1 (rep.).

Money orders—Postal orders.]—The money orders issued by the post office are warrants and orders for the payment of money within the statute; and it is no objection that they are unstamped, the practice of issuing them without a stamp having existed before, and been legalized by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 96. R. v. Gilchrist, 2 Mood. C. C. 233; C. & Mar. 224. See also 43 & 44 Vict. c. 33, s. 4, sub-s. 4 (ante, p. 432), as to postal orders.

A pawnbroker's duplicate was held to be a warrant for the delivery of goods, within 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 5 (rep.). R. v. Morrison, Bell, 158; 28 L. J. (M. C.) 210. A written agreement to pay money for a sufficient consideration appearing on the face thereof is a valuable security within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 1 (ante, p. 427). R. v. John, 13 Cox, 100, Brett, J.

By 16 & 17 Vict. c. 2, the Bank of England may impress upon their notes, etc., by machinery, the names of their cashiers, etc.; and notes so impressed are to be deemed and taken to be, and may be described in indictments, as bank-notes, etc., in the same manner as if they had been subscribed in the handwriting of the cashiers, etc.

Sect. 20—"Postal packet," meaning of the term.]—In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires, the expression "postal packet" has the same meaning as in the Post Office Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 22, s. 10, infra), as amended by this Act, inclusive of such postal packets as are defined by regulations of the Treasury to be parcels, and includes a telegram.

Sect. 21—Property in telegraphic messages, how laid—Form of indictment.]—In every case where an offence shall be committed in respect of a telegraphic message sent by or intrusted to the postmaster-general, it shall be lawful and sufficient, in the indictment or criminal letters to be preferred against the offender, to lay the property of such telegraphic message in his Majesty's postmaster-general, without specifying any further or other name, addition, or description whatsoever, and it shall not be necessary in the indictment or criminal letters to allege or to prove upon the trial or otherwise that the telegraphic message was of any value; and in any indictment to be preferred against any person employed under the post office, for any offence committed under this Act, it shall be lawful and sufficient to state and allege that such offender was employed under the post office at the time of the committing of such offence, without stating further the nature or particulars of his employment.

Sect. 24—Telegraph Acts to be Post Office Acts.]—The Telegraph Act, 1868, and this Act shall be "Post Office Acts," and the provisions contained therein respectively shall be "post-office laws," within the meaning of the "Post Office (Offences) Act, 1837 (7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36). [See s. 47 of that Act, ante, p. 506.]

47 & 48 Vict. c. 76 (Post Office (Protection) Act, 1884), s. 11—Improper disclosure of telegrams.]—If any person being in the employment of a telegraph company as defined by this section—improperly divulges to any person the purport of any telegram; such person shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and be liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding 20*l.*, and on conviction on indictment to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a term not exceeding one year, or to a fine not exceeding 200*l.*

For the purposes of this section the expression "telegram" means a written or printed message or communication sent to or delivered at a post office, or the office of a telegraph company, for transmission by telegraph, or delivered by the post office or a telegraph company as a message or communication transmitted by telegraph.

The expression "telegraph company" means any company, corporation, or persons carrying on the business of sending telegrams for the public under whatever authority or in whatever manner such company, corporation, or persons may act or be constituted. The expression "telegraph" has the same meaning as in the Telegraph Act, 1869, and the Acts amending the same.

Indictment against an Officer of the Post Office for opening or delaying Letters (7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36 (Post Office (Offences) Act, 1837), s. 25).

Central Criminal Court, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present, that J. S., on the first day of June, in the year of our Lord ——, at the parish of ——, in the county of ——, and within the jurisdiction of the said court, being then a person employed by and under the post office of the United Kingdom, did unlawfully and contrary to his duty open ("open or procure or suffer to be opened") [or unlawfully and wilfully detain ("detain or delay, or procure or suffer to be detained or delayed")] a post letter, the property of the postmaster-general; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. The property may be laid in the "postmaster-general," and it is not necessary to allege or prove any value, or to state the nature of the defendant's employment. 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 49. It does not seem to be necessary to negative the exceptions contained in the proviso, for the proviso is distinct and the prohibition general. (See ante, pp. 80, 303.)

As to the venue, see ante, p. 50, 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 37, ante, p. 504.

Misdemeanor: fine, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36, ss. 25, 42. (See ante, pp. 237-240.)

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant was at the time of the commission of the offence a person employed by or under the post office of the United Kingdom. For this purpose evidence of his acting as such is sufficient, without proving his appointment. R. v. Evan Rees, 6 C. & P. 606. See R. v. Borrett, 6 C. & P. 124: R. v. Townsend, C. & Mar. 178. Where the defendant, a letter carrier from C. to T., had brought the C. letter bag, and safely delivered it to the postmaster at T., whose duty it was to sort the letters in time to make up the bags for the mails, the defendant's duty as a letter carrier being complete for the delivery of the letters to the postmaster; but the defendant was afterwards requested by the postmaster to assist him in the sorting, and consented to do so, and in the course of doing so stole a letter; it was held that while so engaged in sorting the letters he was a person employed under the post office, within the statute. R. v. Reason, Dears. 226; 23 L. J. (M. C.) 11. See R. v. Glass, 2 C. & K. 395. Then prove that the defendant opened the letter, or delayed it, according to the allegation in the indictment. The defendant may prove, in answer to the charge, any of the circumstances specified in the proviso, and which would authorize him to open or detain the letter.

Indictment against an Officer of the Post Office for stealing or embezzling Letters. (7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36 (Post Office (Offences) Act, 1837), s. 26).

Commencement as in the last precedent]—feloniously did steal, take, and carry away ("embezzle, secrete, or destroy")] one post letter, the property of the postmaster-general, containing therein a certain valuable security, to wit, a bill of exchange ("any chattel, or money, or valuable security") for the payment of ten pounds,* the property of the postmaster-general; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

* This allegation may be omitted, if the letter did not contain any chattel, money, or valuable security. The property may be laid in the "postmaster-general," and it is not necessary to allege or prove any value, or to state the nature of the defendant's employment. 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 40. As to the venue, see ante, p. 50; and 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 37 (ante, p. 504). A count for embezzling or secreting letters need not aver any purpose or intent. R. v. Wynn, 1 Den. 365, 2 C. & K. 859; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 51. [As to form of indictment for embezzlement, see post, p. 559].

Felony: if the letter contain any chattel, money, or valuable security, penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36, ss. 26, 41; with or without hard labour, 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36, ss. 41, 42; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1 (ante, p. 235).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

If the letter do not contain any chattel, money, or valuable security, penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36, ss. 25, 42; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1 (ante, p. 235).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant was at the time he committed the offence employed under the post office. See R. v. Evan Rees, 6 C. & P. 606, ante, p. 510; R. v. Reason, Dears. 226; 23 L. J. (M. C.) 11 (ante, p. 510); R. v. Milner, 4 Cox, 275; R. v. Simpson, 4 Cox, 276. It seems not to be necessary to prove his appointment if it can be proved that he acted as an employee of the post office. R. v. Borrett [1833] 6 C. & P. 124, 1 Taylor, Ev. (9th ed.), p. 148 (and see ante, p. 344). Then prove that he stole the letter, with its contents (see ante, p. 434, et seq.); or that he embezzled, secreted, or destroyed it. It is not necessary to prove that the letter or valuable security was of any value. 7 W. 4 and 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 40 (ante, p. 505). Prove that the letter was posted by calling the person who posted it, and producing the receipt or certificate, if any, given by the postal authorities of posting, or registration, or delivery (38 & 39 Vict. c. 22, s. 3; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 46, s. 4), or by producing the letter bearing a post-mark; which semble is primâ facie evidence of posting. R. v. Plumer, R. & R. 264; 15 R. R. 741: Woodcock v. Houldsworth, 16 M. & W. 124: Roscoe, Nisi Prius Ev. (17th ed.), 123, 218: 1 Taylor, Ev. (9th ed.), pp. 158, 159: R. v. Johnson, 7 East, 65. Any letter posted in the ordinary way, whatever be its address or object, is a post letter within the statute; Young v. R., 1 Den. 194; 2 C. & K. 466; therefore, where a fictitious letter is sent, with money in it, to try the honesty of the defendant, the stealing of it is within the statute, Id.; overruling R. v. Gardner, 1 C. & K. 628. But the secreting, by a letter carrier, of a letter written by an inspector of the post office, for the purpose of trying the defendant's honesty, was held not to be a stealing of a post letter within the statute; it was held, however, that he might be convicted of simple larceny, in stealing a sovereign enclosed by the inspector in such letter, the sovereign being one of those which are occasionally found on the floor of the post office, having dropped out of letters, and which are carried to a fund which is under the direction of the postmaster-general; and that such sovereign might be described as the property of the postmaster-general. R. v. Rathbone, 2 Mood. C. C. 242; C. & Mar. 220. So where, suspicions being entertained against the defendant, who was a subsorter in the General Post Office, the authorities there made up a letter, and enclosed coin in it, and put upon it the usual postage stamp; and an inspector delivered it in, at the window in the outer hall, to another inspector, who handed it to a third, who, after locking it up for the night, handed it to a sorter, who placed it amongst the letters which it was the prisoner's duty to sort, and the prisoner stole the letter and the money;—the ordinary course of posting a letter at the outer hall of the General Post Office being by placing it in the receiving-box; it was held that the prisoner was not rightly convicted of stealing a post letter containing money, and that the conviction must be confined to the count for simple larceny. R. v. Shepherd, Dears. 606; 25 L. J. (M. C.) 52. Where a servant who was sent with a letter and a penny to pay the postage, finding the door of the receiving-house shut, put the penny inside the letter, fastened it by means of a pin, and then put the letter in the unpaid letter-box: it was held that a messenger in the post office, who stole this letter with the penny in it, might be convicted of stealing a post letter containing money, though the money was not put in for the purpose of being conveyed by post to the person to whom the letter was addressed. R. v. Mence, C. & Mar. 234. Where a letter containing a bank-note was received by the postmistress for registration and not registered (though the fee had been paid), but placed by her under a glass case to which the prisoner (an officer of the post office) had access, the letter was held to be a post letter within 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 47 (ante, p. 506). R. v. Rogers, 5 Cox, 293, Cresswell, J. But where, the post office being at an inn, the person sent to put a letter, containing bank-notes, into the post, took it to the inn, with money to prepay the postage, and laid the letter and the money on it, upon a table in the lobby of the inn, in which the letter box was, and pointed out the letter to the female servant at the inn (not authorized to receive letters), who said "she would give it to them;" and she stole the letter and its contents: it was held that this was not a post letter within the 27th or 28th section of the statute, and the defendant could be convicted only of larceny. R. v. Harley, 1 C. & K. 89. An unsealed letter, delivered by the postmistress at G. to the defendant, the letter-carrier between that place and L., with the directions to obtain at the post office at L. a money order for one pound, and after enclosing it in the letter, to post the letter at L., was held to be, while in the defendant's hands, a post letter, and the defendant to be a person employed under the post office, so as that he might be convicted under this section. R. v. Bickerstaff, 2 C. & K. 761. Where the defendant, a person employed in the post office, having committed a mistake in the sorting of the letters, put some post letters down a water-closet, in order to avoid the supposed penalty attached to such a mistake, this was held to be not only a secreting but a larceny of the letters. R. v. Wynn, 1 Den. 365; 2 C. & K. 859; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 51. It was the duty of a letter carrier, on returning from his round, to bring back to the post office any letters which he had failed to deliver. A letter containing money having been given to him with other letters to deliver; on his return from his round, he brought back to the office the pouch, containing some letters which he had failed to deliver, but said nothing about the money-letter. Subsequently on enquiry being made of him, he produced the money-letter from his pocket; upon these facts it was held that he was rightly convicted of stealing the letter. R. v. Poynton, L. & C. 247; 32 L. J. (M. C.) 29.

Indictment for stealing Money, etc., out of Letters. 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36 (Post Office (Offences) Act, 1837), s. 27. (Ante, p. 503.)

Commencement as ante, p. 505]—a certain valuable security, to wit, one bill of exchange for the payment of ten pounds ("any chattel, money, or valuable security") the property of the postmaster-general, from and out of a post letter feloniously did steal, take, and carry away; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. The property may be laid in the "postmaster-general" and it is not necessary to allege or prove the security to be of any value. 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 40 (ante, p. 505). As to the venue, see ante, p. 50, and 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 37, ante, p. 504.

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36, ss. 27, 41, 42; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1. (Ante, p. 235).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove a larceny of the chattel, money, or valuable security out of the letter, either directly or by circumstances from which it may be inferred. The mere larceny of money, etc., from a letter will not suffice to bring the case within this statute, for a post letter means a letter or packet transmitted by the post, and it is only a post letter from the time of its being delivered to a post office to the time of its being delivered to the person to whom it is addressed. See R. v. Rathbone (ante, p. 511): R. v. Young (ante, p. 511). A delivery to a letter carrier, or other person authorized to receive letters for the post, is a delivery to the post office; and a delivery at the house or office of the person to whom the letter is addressed or to him, or his servant or agent, or other person considered to be authorized to receive the letter according to the usual manner of delivering that person's letters, is a delivery to the person addressed. 47 & 48 Vict. c. 76, s. 19 (ante, p. 507). The words of the statute, "every person," include those employed by the post office as well as others. See R. v. Brown, R. & R. 32, n.; overruling R. v. Skutt, 1 Leach, 106; 2 Leach, 904; and R. v. Pooley, R. & R. 31; and see R. v. Salisbury, 5 C. & P. 155.

Indictment for stealing, etc., Letters, etc., 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36 (Post Office (Offences) Act, 1837), s. 28 (ante, p. 503).

Commencement as ante, p. 509]—feloniously did steal, take, and carry away one post letter ("a post-letter bag or post letter"), the property of the postmaster-general, from a post-letter bag ("a post-letter bag, or a post office, or an officer of the post office or a mail"); against the form [as ante, p. 465]. The property may be laid in the "postmaster-general," and it is not necessary to allege or prove any value. As to the venue, see ante, pp. 50, 504. An indictment for stealing letters out of a post-office packet may easily be framed from the above precedent. 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 29.

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36, ss. 28, 41, 42 (ante, pp. 503, 505): 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1 (ante, p. 235).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove the larceny of the letter as directed ante, p. 434 et seq. The taking away and destroying of a post letter in order to suppress inquiries supposed by the defendant to be made in it about her character, was held to be a larceny of the letter. R. v. Jones, 1 Den. 188; 2 C. & K. 236. A person who with intent to deprive another to whom a letter is addressed of such letter and to commit a fraud, induces a servant of the post office to intercept and hand over such letter, which is in course of transmission by post, is either guilty of larceny as a principal felon, or is accessory before the fact of the larceny committed by the servant of the post office, and in either view can be convicted on an indictment charging him with larceny of the letter. R. v. James, 24 Q. B. D. 439; 59 L. J. (M. C.) 96. Where the defendant obtained the mail bags from the post office, pretending that he was the mail guard, and then ran away with them; the jury being of opinion that he got possession of them with intent to steal them, found him guilty; and the judges held the conviction to be right. R. v. Pearce, 2 East, P. C. 603, 673. In this case the property did not pass, for the postmaster had no property in the mail bags to part with. 2 East, P. C. 673. Taking the mail bags off the horse during the momentary absence of the person employed to carry them, was held to be a taking from his possession, within the meaning of the repealed statute 52 G. 3, c. 14, s. 3. R. v. Robinson, 2 Stark. (N. P.) 485.

Where a letter intended to be delivered in Brighton and addressed to Mrs. Fisher, 29, Gloucester St., was delivered at 29, Gloucester St., Lambeth, where the prisoner lodged, and the prisoner who was known to some persons as Fisher opened the letter and cashed a cheque contained in it, it was held that he could not be convicted of larceny of the cheque. R. v. Fish [1900] 64 J. P. 137, Bosanquet, Common Serjeant, on the ground that there was no evidence of animus furandi when the prisoner received the cheque. R. v. Mucklow, 1 Mood. C. C. 160, and R. v. Davies, Dears. 640: 25 L. J. (M. C.) 91 (C. C. R.), were cited and followed. In such a case the indictment should be framed under 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 31, (ante, p. 503).

The definition of a post letter is given in 48 & 47 Vict. c. 76, s. 19 (ante, p. 507). For the definition of the terms "letter," "packet," "mail," "mail bag," "officer of the post office," "post-letter bag," etc., see 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 47 (ante, p. 506); 47 & 48 Vict. c. 76, s. 19 (ante, p. 507): 52 & 53 Vict. c. 63, s. 12 (ante, p. 507).

Indictment for stopping Mails, with intent to rob, etc. 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36 (Post Office (Offences) Act, 1837), s. 28 (ante, p. 503).

Commencement as ante, p. 509]—a certain mail for the conveyance of post letters, feloniously did stop, with intent the same feloniously to search ("rob or search"); against the form [as ante, p. 465]. As to the venue, see ante, p. 50, and 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 37 (ante, p. 504).

Felony: see the last precedent.

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions: 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant stopped the mail, and prove the intent by circumstances from which it may be inferred. If the defendant actually robbed or searched the mail, his original intent so to do will be put beyond doubt.

Indictment for retaining Letters after Delivery. 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36 (Post Office (Offences) Act, 1837), s. 31 (ante, p. 503).

Commencement as ante, p. 509]—unlawfully and fraudulently did retain ("shall fraudulently retain or wilfully secrete, or keep or detain, or being required to deliver up by any officer of the post office, shall neglect or refuse to deliver up") a certain post letter the property of the postmaster-general, which ought to have been delivered to a certain other person, to wit, one J. N. ("or a post letter or a post-letter bag, which shall have been sent"); against the form [as ante, p. 465]. The property may be laid in the post-master-general, 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36, s, 40 (ante, p. 505). As to the venue, see ante, pp. 50, 504.

Misdemeanor: fine and imprisonment, 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 31; with or without hard labour. Id. s. 42.

Evidence.

Prove that the letter ought to have been delivered to J. N.; that it was delivered to the defendant, and was retained by him, as stated in the indictment. See R. v. Fish, 64 J. P. 137 (supra). If the defendant secretes, or keeps, or detains the letter after request to deliver it up by an officer of the post office, it may be presumed that he does so wilfully, unless, at the time of the refusal to deliver it up, he gives some bonâ fide excuse for so doing. To make out a fraudulent retainer, however, it must be shown, from the contents of the letter or other circumstances, that the defendant well knew the letter was not intended for him. It will be no defence that the letter or letter bag was found by the defendant, or any other person. 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 31 (ante, p. 504).

Indictment for endeavouring to procure the commission of offences against the Post Office. 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36 (Post Office (Offences) Act, 1837), s. 36 (ante, p. 504).

Commencement as ante, p. 509]—unlawfully did solicit ("solicit or endeavour to procure") one J. S., then being a person employed by and under the post office of the United Kingdom, unlawfully and contrary to his duty to open a post letter, the property of the postmaster-general; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. From this and the foregoing precedents an indictment may easily be framed for procuring the commission of any "felony or misdemeanor, punishable by the post-office Acts." As to the venue, see ante, pp. 50, 504.

Misdemeanor: imprisonment not exceeding two years, 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 36, with or without hard labour. Id. s. 42.

At common law, and apart from the statute, the offence is a misdemeanor (see ante, p. 3): but hard labour could not be imposed. See ante, pp. 237, 238.

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant solicited or endeavoured to procure the commission of the offence stated. It is immaterial whether the offence was completed or not.

STEALING FROM A WRECK.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 (Larceny Act, 1861), s. 64.]—Whosoever shall plunder or steal any part of any ship or vessel which shall be in distress, or wrecked, stranded, or cast on shore, or any goods, merchandise, or articles of any kind belonging to such ship or vessel, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding fourteen years. . . .

And the offender may be indicted and tried either in the county or place in which the offence shall have been committed or in any county or place next adjoining. [This section is framed from 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 18, and 7 W. & 1 Vict. c. 87, s. 8.]

Indictment.

Sussex, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present, that, on the first day of June, in the year of our Lord ——, a certain ship ("any ship or vessel"), the property of a person or persons to the jurors aforesaid unknown, was stranded ("in distress, or wrecked, stranded or cast on shore"), and that J. S., on the day and year aforesaid, ten pieces of oak plank ("any part of any ship, etc."), being parts of the said ship [or, twenty pounds weight of cotton ("any goods, merchandise or articles of any kind"), of the goods and merchandise of a person or persons to the jurors aforesaid unknown, belonging to the said ship], so then stranded as aforesaid, feloniously did plunder, steal, take, and carry away; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. You may add a second count, stating the ship to have been "in distress"; a third count, stating the ship to have been "wrecked"; and a fourth count, stating the ship to have been "cast on shore." If the name of the ship be known, it should be stated in the indictment; and if the name of the owner be known, the ship should be described as his property. As to the venue, see s. 64, ante, p. 515.

Felony: penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement (such confinement not exceeding one month at any one time, nor three months in any one year, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 119, ante, p. 432)—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 64; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and to find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 431).

Evidence.

Prove that the ship or vessel in question was stranded or cast on shore, etc., as described in the indictment; if the name of the owner of the ship be stated, prove that she was his property; and prove the larceny of the goods as directed, ante, p. 434 et seq., whilst she was stranded and cast on shore; that the goods were part of or belonging to the ship, as stated in the indictment; and if the name of the owner of the goods be stated, prove them to be his property.

LARCENY BY TENANTS OR LODGERS.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 (Larceny Act, 1861), s. 74.]—Whosoever shall steal any chattel or fixture let to be used by him or her in or with any house or lodging, whether the contract shall have been entered into by him or her or by her husband, or by any person on behalf of him or her or her husband, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour . . . and, if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping; and in case the value of such chattel or fixture shall exceed the sum of five pounds, shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding seven years . . . or to be imprisoned . . . and, if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping:

And in every case of stealing any chattel in this section mentioned, it shall be lawful to prefer an indictment in the common form as for larceny,

And in every case of stealing any fixture in this section mentioned, to prefer an indictment in the same form as if the offender were not a tenant or lodger: and in either case to lay the property in the owner or person letting to hire. [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 45.]

Indictment.

The indictment for stealing a chattel will be in the form ante, p. 433, and for stealing a fixture, in the form ante, p. 491. The article stolen must be described as the property of the landlord; and in the latter case the dwelling house or lodging must, according to the circumstances, be described as the dwelling-house of the defendant, or of the landlord, as in burglary.

Felony: imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and, if a male under sixteen, with or without whipping (Id.):—or if the value of the chattel or fixture exceed 5l., penal servitude for not exceeding seven and not less than three years, or imprisonment, etc., as above.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 74; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 431).

Evidence.

Prove a larceny of the chattel mentioned in the indictment, as directed ante, p. 434 et seq.; or, if the indictment alleged that the defendant stole a fixture, prove the allegations of that indictment, as directed ante, pp. 491, 492. Independently of the statute, the contract of letting, and that the goods were in his possession under that contract, would be matter of defence for the defendant; but as that circumstance would now be no defence, it is immaterial whether the contract of letting be proved or not.

STEALING SILK, ETC., IN THE PROCESS OF MANUFACTURE.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 (Larceny Act, 1861), s. 62.]—Whosoever shall steal, to the value of ten shillings, any woollen, linen, hempen, or cotton yarn, or any goods or article of silk, woollen, linen, cotton, alpaca, or mohair, or of any one or more of those materials mixed with each other, or mixed with any other material, whilst laid, placed, or exposed during any stage, process or progress of manufacture, in any building, field or other place, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, . . . to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding fourteen years, . . . [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 15, with the additions italicized.]

Indictment.

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—thirty yards of linen cloth, of the value of twenty shillings ("to the value of ten shillings"), of the goods and chattels of J. N., in a certain building ("building, field, or other place") of the said J. N., situate in the parish of ——, in the county of ——, feloniously did steal, take, and carry away, whilst the same were laid, placed and exposed in the said building, during a certain stage, process and progress of manufacture; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. Other counts may be added, stating the particular process and progress of manufacture in which the goods where when stolen.

Felony: penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor not less than three years, or imprisonment for not more than two years, with or without hard labour: 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 62; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 431).

As to summary proceedings for the embezzlement of materials or tools by persons employed in such manufactures, see 6 & 7 Vict. c. 40, ss. 2, 3, 11.

Evidence.

Prove the larceny as directed, ante, pp. 434 et seq., except that an actual and not merely a constructive taking must be proved; prove the value of the goods taken to be ten shillings at the least; then prove that they were stolen from the building, field, or other place mentioned in the indictment, situate as described; and, lastly, prove that when stolen the goods were placed, laid, or exposed in the building, etc., described, in a certain stage, process, or progress of manufacture.

Where, upon an indictment on 18 G. 2, c. 27 (rep.), for stealing yarn from a bleaching-ground, it appeared in evidence that the yarn, at the time it was stolen, was in heaps, for the purpose of being carried into the house, and not spread out for bleaching, Thompson, B., held that the case was not within the statute. R. v. Hugill, 2 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 403. So, where the indictment was for stealing calico, placed to be printed and dried in a certain building, it was held that, in order to support a capital charge, it was necessary to prove that the building from which the calico was stolen was used either for drying or printing calico: R. v. Dixon, R. & R. 53; but it should be observed, that the repealed statute (18 G. 2, c. 27) mentioned particularly a building, etc., made use of by any calico printer, etc., "for printing, whitening, bowking, bleaching, or dyeing." Goods remain in a "stage, process, or progress of manufacture," within the meaning of 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 30, s. 3 (rep.), and therefore also within this statute, though the texture be complete, if they be not yet brought into a condition for sale. R. v. Woodhead, 1 M. & Rob. 549.

If you prove the larceny, but fail to prove the other circumstances, so as to bring the case within the statute, the defendant may be found guilty of simple larceny.

STEALING FROM VESSELS IN DOCKS OR FROM DOCKS, ETC.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 (Larceny Act, 1861), s. 63.]—Whosoever shall steal any goods or merchandise in any vessel, barge, or boat of any description whatsoever, in any haven, or in any port of entry or discharge, or upon any navigable river or canal, or in any creek or basin belonging to or communicating with any such haven, port, river, or canal, or shall steal any goods or merchandise from any dock, wharf, or quay adjacent to any such haven, port, river, canal, creek or basin, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding fourteen years. . . . This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 17, with the additions in italics.]

Commencement as ante, p. 433.]—twenty pounds weight of indigo ("any goods or merchandise") of the goods and merchandise of J. N.,

then being in a certain ship called the Rattler, ["vessel, barge, or boat, of any description whatsoever,") upon the navigable river Thames, ("in any haven, or in any port of entry or discharge, or upon any navigable river or canal, or in any creek or basin belonging to or communicating with any such haven, port, river, or canal,") in the said ship feloniously did steal, take, and carry away; against the form [as ante, p. 465.]

Felony : penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or imprisonment for not more than two years, with or without hard labour—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 63; 54 & 55 Vict. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 431).

Evidence.

Prove a larceny as directed, ante, pp. 434 et seq., except that you must prove an actual and not merely a constructive taking. The words "goods, wares, and merchandise, in 24 G. 2, c. 45 (rep.), were held to extend to such goods, etc., only as are usually lodged in vessels, or on wharves and quays, R. v. Grimes, Fost, 79, n.; 2 East, P. C. 647: R. v. Leigh, 1 Leach, 52. The same may be said of the present statute, by reason of the substitution of the words "goods and merchandise" for the words "chattel, money, or valuable security," which are used in other parts of the Act. The luggage of a passenger going by a steam-boat was held within 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 17 (rep.). R. v. Wright, 7 C. & P. 159. Prove that the goods, etc., were at the time in the ship described in the indictment. The words of the statute are "in any vessel," etc.; and it is therefore immaterial whether the defendant succeeded in taking the goods from the ship or not, if there was a sufficient asportation in the ship to constitute larceny. A man cannot be guilty of this offence in his own ship. R. v. Madox, R. & R. 92. Lastly, prove that the ship was at the time upon the river, etc., mentioned in the indictment. This is matter of local description, and a variance in this respect between the statement and proof will be fatal unless amended. Where it was laid to be committed in a barge on the river Thames, and proved to have been committed in a barge lying aground on the bank of one of the creeks of the river, namely, Limehouse-dock, it was held to be a fatal variance. R. v. Pike, 1 Leach 317: 2 East, P. C. 647.

If you prove a larceny, but fail in proving the other circumstances requisite to bring the case within the statute, the defendant may be convicted of simple larceny.

Indictment for stealing from a Dock, &c. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 63.)

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—twenty pounds weight of indigo ("any goods or merchandise") of the goods and merchandise of J. N., then being in and upon a certain dock ("dock, wharf, or quay") adjacent to a certain navigable river called the Thames ("adjacent to any haven, port, etc.: see the last precedent), from the said dock feloniously did steal, take, and carry away; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

Felony, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 63. See the last precedent.

Evidence.

Prove the larceny as directed, ante, p. 434 et seq., except that there must be an actual and not merely a constructive taking. The goods must be such as are usually deposited upon dock, etc., for shipment, safe custody, or the like, Prove that the goods were taken from the dock, etc.; for which purpose a mere removal, such as would be sufficient to constitute simple larceny, will not suffice, for the words of the statute are, "from any dock," etc., to satisfy that there must be an actual removal from the dock, etc., in the same manner as upon an indictment for stealing from the person (infra). Lastly, prove that the dock, etc., from which the goods were taken, is adjacent to the navigable river, etc. This, as we have seen in the last case, is a matter of local description, and must be proved strictly as laid.

If you prove the larceny, but fail in proving any of the other circumstances necessary to bring the case within the statute, the defendant may be convicted of simple larceny.

That, in the case of an offender whose age does not exceed sixteen years, the number of strokes at each such whipping do not exceed twenty-five, and the instrument used shall be a birch rod: 2. That, in the case of any other male offender, the number of strokes do not exceed fifty at each such whipping: 3. That in each case the court in its sentence shall specify the number of strokes to be inflicted and the instrument to be used. Provided that in no case shall such whipping take place after the expiration of six months from the passing of the sentence: provided also, that every such whipping to be inflicted on any person sentenced to penal servitude shall be inflicted on him before he shall be removed to a convict prison, with a view to his undergoing his sentence of penal servitude.

And the abominable crime of buggery, committed either with mankind or with beast, and every assault with intent to commit the said abominable crime, and every attempt or endeavour to commit the said abominable crime, and every solicitation, persuasion, promise, or threat offered or made to any person whereby to move or induce such person to commit or permit the said abominable crime, shall be deemed to be an infamous crime within the meaning of this Act. Indictment for Robbery. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 40, ante, p. 520.)

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—in and upon one J. N. feloniously did make an assault, and him the said J. N. in bodily fear and danger of his life then feloniously did put, and the moneys of the said J. N., to the amount of ten pounds, from the person and against the will of the said J. N., then feloniously and violently did steal, take and carry away; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. The indictment may charge the defendant with having assaulted several persons, and stolen different sums from each, if the whole was one transaction. R. v. Giddins, C. & Mar. 634. The word "violently" is not essential if the statements in the indictment show violence to have been used. R. v. Smith, 2 East, P. C. 783, 784.

Felony: penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour: 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 40; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 431).

Evidence.

Robbery consists in the felonious and forcible taking from the person of another, or in his presence against his will, of any money or goods to any value, by violence, or putting him in fear. 4 Bl. Com. 243; 1 Hawk. c. 34. See R. v. Reane, 2 Leach, 616: 2 East, P. C. 734: R. v. Edwards, 1 Cox, 32. And in order to maintain this indictment, you must prove a larceny, and prove it to have been committed under the circumstances which, together with it, constitute the offence of robbery, and which we shall now consider under the following heads:—

In bodily fear, etc.]—The prosecutor must either prove that he was actually in bodily fear, from the defendant's actions, at the time of the robbery, or he must prove circumstances from which the court and jury may presume such a degree of apprehension of danger as would induce the prosecutor to part with his property; Fost. 128; and in this latter case, if the circumstances thus proved be such as are calculated to create such a fear, the court will not pursue the inquiry further, and examine whether the fear actually existed. Therefore, if a man knocks another down, and steals from him his property whilst he is insensible on the ground, this is robbery. Fost. 128. A stage-coach having frequently been robbed on a particular road, J. N. went in it for the purpose of apprehending the robber; the robber met the coach, presented a pistol and demanded money of the passengers; J. N. delivered his money but immediately afterwards jumped out of the coach, and with the assistance of others, secured the robber; and this was held to be robbery. Norden's case, Fost. 129. Where the defendant tore a lady's ear through, in snatching an earring from it, the judges held it to be robbery, R. v. Lapier, 1 Leach, 320; 2 East, P. C. 557, 708. So, where the prisoner tore some hair from a lady's head in snatching a diamond pin from it, the pin having a corkscrew stalk, and being twisted very much in her hair, this was held to be robbery. R. v. Moore, 1 Leach, 335. Where the defendant laid hold of the seals and chain of the prosecutor's watch, and pulled the watch out of his fob, but the watch, being secured by a steel chain which went round the prosecutor's neck, the defendant could not take it until, by pulling and two or three jerks, he broke the chain, and then ran off with the watch, this was held to be robbery. R. v. Mason, R. & R. 419. So, if there be a struggle for the property, and it be wrested from the prosecutor by superior force, it will be robbery. R. v. Davies, 2 East, P. C. 709. But merely snatching property from a person unawares and running away with it, will not be robbery. R. v. Steward, 2 East, P. C. 702: R. v. Horner, Id. 703: R. v. Baker, 1 Leach, 290: R. v. Robins, Id., n.: R. v. Macauley, Id. 287: R. v. Walls, 2 C. & K. 214, because fear cannot in fact be presumed in such a case. Where the prisoner caught hold of the prosecutor's watch chain, and jerked his watch from his pocket with considerable force, upon which a scuffle ensued, and the prisoner was secured, Garrow, B., held that the force used to obtain the watch did not make the offence amount to robbery, nor did the force used afterwards in the scuffle; for the force necessary to constitute robbery must be either immediately before or at the time of the larceny, and not after it. R. v. Gnosil, 1 C. & P. 304. The rule, therefore, appears to be well established, that no sudden taking or snatching of property unawares from a person is sufficient to constitute robbery unless some injury be done to the person, or there be a previous struggle for the possession of the property, or some force used to obtain it.

If a man take another's child, and threaten to destroy him unless the other give him money, this is robbery. Per Eyre, C. J., in R. v. Reane, 2 East, P. C. 735, 736; and see R. v. Donnally, Id. 715, 718; 1 Leach, 193. So, where the defendant, at the head of a mob, came to the prosecutor's house and demanded money, threatening to destroy the house unless the money were given, the prosecutor thereupon gave him 5*s.*, but he insisted on more, and the prosecutor, being terrified, gave him 5*s.* more; the defendant and the mob then took bread, cheese, and cider from the prosecutor's house, without his permission, and departed; this was held to be a robbery. R. v. Simons, 2 East, P. C. 731: R. v. Brown, Id. So, where during some riots at Birmingham, the defendant threatened the prosecutor that unless he would give him a certain sum of money he should return with the mob and destroy his house, and the prosecutor, under the impression of this threat, gave him the money, this was holden by the judges to be robbery. R. v. Astley, 2 East, P. C. 729. So where, in the riots of 1780, a mob, headed by the defendant, came to the prosecutor's house and demanded half-a-crown, which the prosecutor, from terror of the mob, gave, this was held to be robbery, although no threats were uttered. R. v. Taplin, 2 East, P. C. 712.

Upon an indictment for robbery, it appeared that a mob came to the house of the prosecutor, and with the mob the prisoners, who advised the prosecutor to give them something to get rid of them and prevent mischief, by which means they obtained money from the prosecutor; and Parke, J. (after consulting Vaughan, B., and Alderson, B.), admitted evidence of the acts of the mob at other places before and after on the same day, to show that the advice of the prisoners was not bonâ fide, but in reality a mere mode of robbing the prosecutor. R. v. Winkworth, 4 C. & P. 444.

Obtaining money under a threat of charging the prosecutor with an unnatural crime had in many cases been held to be robbery; R. v. Jones, 1 Leach, 139; 2 East, P. C. 714: R. v. Donnally, 1 Leach, 193; 2 East, P. C. 715: R. v. Cannon, R. & R. 146: R. v. Gardner, 1 C. & P. 479; even where it appeared that the prosecutor parted with his money from a fear merely of losing his character or situation by such an imputation; R. v. Hickman, 1 Leach, 278; 2 East, P. C. 728: R. v. Egerton, R. & R. 375: R. v. Elmstead, 2 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 106. It was held that the property must be at once parted with in consequence of fear due to the threat. R. v. Fuller, R. & R. 308: R. v. Jackson, 1 Leach, 193, n.; 2 Id., 618, n. This form of robbery is now punishable under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 47 (ante, p. 522.) But it would seem that where by such accusation or threat any property is actually obtained, the offender may still be indicted for robbery. See R. v. Stringer, 2 Mood. C. C. 261; 1 C. & K. 188; doubting the earlier case of R. v. Henry, 2 Mood. C. C. 118. Where the property is parted with by threats to accuse, other than those specified in the statute, the indictment may also be for robbery, if the party was put in fear, and parted with his property in consequence. R. v. Norton, 8 C. & P. 671. See post, p. 536, for an indictment on the above section.

Where the prosecutrix was threatened by some persons at a mock auction to be sent to Bow-street, and from thence to Newgate, unless she paid for some article they pretended was knocked down to her, although she never bid for it; and they accordingly called in a pretended constable, who told her that unless she gave him a shilling she must go with him: and she gave him a shilling accordingly, not from any apprehension of personal danger, but from a fear of being taken to prison; the judges held that the circumstances of the case were not sufficient to constitute the offence of robbery; it was nothing more than a simple duress. R. v. Knewland, 2 Leach, 721: R. v. Wood, 2 East, P. C. 732. It would seem, however, that a similar state of facts would sustain an indictment under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 45 (ante, p. 521); R. v. Robertson, L. & C. 483; 34 L. J. (M. C.) 35, post, and that it would also sustain an indictment for simple larceny. R. v. MacGrath, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 205; 39 L. J. (M. C.) 7: R. v. Lovell, 8 Q. B. D. 185; 50 L. J. (M. C.) 91; ante, p. 456. Where the defendant, with an intent to take money from a prisoner who was under his charge for an assault, handcuffed her to another prisoner, kicked and beat her while thus handcuffed, put her into a hackney-coach for the purpose of carrying her to prison, and then took four shillings from her pocket for the purpose of paying the coach hire; the jury, finding that the defendant had previously the intent of getting from the prosecutrix whatever money she had, and that he used all this violence for the purpose of carrying his intent into execution, the judges held that this was robbery. R. v. Gascoigne, 2 East, P. C. 709. Even in a case where it appeared that the defendant attempted to commit a rape upon the prosecutrix, and she, without any demand upon him, gave him some money to desist, which he put into his pocket, and then continued his attempt until he was interrupted; this was held by the judges to be robbery. R. v. Blackham, 2 East, P. C. 711.

And it is of no importance under what pretence the robber obtains the money, etc., if the prosecutor be forced to deliver it from actual fear, or under circumstances from which the court can presume it. As, for instance, if a man with a sword drawn ask alms of me, and I give it him, through mistrust and apprehension of violence, it is as much a robbery as if he had demanded money in the ordinary way. 4 Bl. Com. 242. So, if thieves come to rob A., and finding little upon him, enforce him by menace to swear to bring them a greater sum, which he does accordingly, this is robbery, if, at the time he delivered the money, the fear of the menace continue to operate upon him. Fitz. Cor. Pl. 464: 1 Hale, 532. Where the defendant, at the head of a riotous mob, stopped a cart laden with cheeses, insisting upon seizing them for want of a permit; after some altercation he went with the driver, under pretence of going before a magistrate, and during their absence the mob pillaged the cart; this was held to be a robbery. Merriman v. Hundred of Chippenham, 2 East, P. C. 709. So, where the defendant took goods from the prosecutrix of the value of eight shillings, and by force and threats compelled her to take one shilling, under pretence of payment for them; this was held to be robbery. R. v. Simons, 2 East, P. C. 712; and see R. v. Spencer, Id.

The fear must precede the taking. For, if a man privately steal money from the person of another, and afterwards keep it by putting him in fear, this is no robbery, for the fear is subsequent to the taking. R. v. Harman, 1 Hale, 534; 1 Hawk. c. 34, s. 7; see R. v. Gnosil, 1 C. & P. 304 (ante, p. 524).

One gold watch, etc.]—The property taken must be such as may be the subject of larceny (see ante, p. 436), and must be proved to be the absolute or special property of the person named in the indictment. (See ante, pp. 58, 440.) Where a servant who was sent by his master to receive money was robbed of the money on his return home, Alderson, B., doubted whether it could be properly described as the money of the master, and discharged the jury, that another indictment might be preferred. R. v. Rudick, 8 C. & P. 237 (see ante, p. 59). The value is immaterial. 1 Hale, 532. But the goods must be of some value to the party robbed; and, therefore, where the defendant compelled the prosecutor, by threats, to sign a promissory note for a sum of money, it was held by the judges not to be a robbery, because the note was of no value to the prosecutor. R. v. Phipoe, 2 Leach, 673; 2 East, P. C. 599: and see R. v. Edwards, 6 C. & P. 515, 521: and R. v. Smith, 2 Den. 449; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 111. Under such circumstances, however, the defendant might now be indicted by the felony described in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 48 (ante, p. 522.) In R. v. Bingley, 5 C. & P. 602, the prisoner attacked the prosecutor, and took from him a piece of paper, containing a memorandum of money that a person owed him, and Gurney, B., held it sufficient to constitute robbery.

From the person, etc.]—The goods must be proved to have been taken either from the person of the prosecutor or in his presence. See R. v. Francis, 2 Str. 1015: 2 East, P. C. 708: R. v. Grey, 2 East, P. C. 708: R. v. Hamilton, 8 C. & P. 49. If a thief put a man in fear, and then in his presence drive away his cattle, it is robbery. 1 Hale, 533. So, if a man, assaulted by a robber, throw his purse into a bush, or flying from a robber, let fall his hat, and the robber, in his presence, take up the purse or hat and carry it away; this would be robbery. Id. Upon an indictment for robbery, it appeared that the prosecutor was in company with another, who had the prosecutor's bundle, and who, upon the prosecutor being attacked with great violence by the prisoner, dropped the bundle, and ran to the prosecutor's assistance, when one of the prisoners took up the bundle, and ran off with it: Vaughan, B., is reported to have held that this was not robbery, because the bundle was not in the prosecutor's possession at the time. R. v. Fallows, 5 C. & P. 508; sed quære. See R. v. Thompson, L. & C. 225; 32 L. J. (M. C.) 53: 9 Cox, 244 (ante, p. 463).

Against the will.]—It must appear in evidence that the goods were taken against the will of the party robbed; that is, that they were either taken from him by force and violence, or delivered up by him to the defendant, under the impression of that degree of fear and apprehension which is necessary to constitute robbery. Therefore, where the party robbed concerted and connived at the robbery, and got one of his confederates to procure two strangers to commit it, for the purpose of getting a reward upon the apprehension and conviction of the strangers, the judges held that it was not a robbery, because the property was not taken against the party's will. R. v. MacDaniel, 19 St. Tr. 745; Fost. 121, 228.

Feloniously.]—The goods must appear to have been taken animo furandi, as in other cases of larceny. (See ante, p. 440.) And therefore, if a man, by force or threats, compel another to give him goods he has to sell, and give him in return money to the amount of the value of the goods, it is very doubtful whether this be robbery; 1 Hawk. c. 34, s. 14; although undoubtedly it would be, if the goods were of greater value than the money given for them. If a person, under a bonâ fide impression that the property is his own, obtain it by menace, that is a trespass, but not robbery. R. v. Hall, 3 C. & P. 409. See also R. v. Hemmings, 4 F. & F. 50, where a creditor assaulted his debtor with intent to make him pay his debt (ante, p. 440).

Violently.]—It is not necessary to prove that the goods were taken by actual violence or force; proof that they were delivered to the defendant by the party robbed, under the impression of that degree of fear and apprehension necessary to constitute robbery, will be sufficient. See ante, pp. 523–526.

Take and carry away.]—An actual taking either by force or upon delivery must be proved: that is, it must appear that the robber actually got possession of the goods. Therefore, if a robber cut a man's girdle in order to get his purse, and the purse thereby fall to the ground, and the robber run off or be apprehended before he can take it up: this would not be robbery, because the purse was never in the possession of the robber. 1 Hale, 533. But it is immaterial whether the taking were by force or upon delivery; and if by delivery, it is also immaterial whether the robber have compelled the prosecutor to it by a direct demand in the ordinary way, or upon any colourable pretence. See ante, pp. 523-526.

A carrying away must also be proved, as in other cases of larceny. (See ante, p. 463). And therefore, where the defendant, upon meeting a man carrying a bed, told him to lay it down, or he would shoot him, and the man accordingly laid down the bed, but the robber, before he could take it up so as to remove it from the place where it lay, was apprehended; the judges held that the robbery was not complete. R. v. Farrell, 1 Leach, 322, n. (b). But where the defendant snatched at a lady's earring, and succeeded in separating it from the ear, and it was afterwards found among the curls of her hair; the court held this a sufficient proof of asportation to support the indictment. R. v. Lapier, 1 Leach, 320; 2 East, P. C. 557, 708.

It may be necessary to add here, that if the property be once taken, the offence will not be purged by the robber's delivering it back to the owner. 1 Hale, 533; 1 Hawk. c. 34, s. 2; R. v. Peat, 1 Leach, 228; 2 East, P. C. 557.

On this indictment the accused can be convicted of and punished for an assault with intent to rob. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 41 (ante, p. 520).

Indictment for Robbery with Violence (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 43. ante. p. 520).

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—in and upon one J. N. feloniously did make an assault, and him the said J. N. in bodily fear and danger of his life then feloniously did put, and the moneys of the said J. N., to the amount of ten pounds, and one gold watch, of the goods and chattels of the said J. N., from the person and against the will of the said J. N., then feloniously and violently did steal, take, and carry away; and that the said J. S., immediately before he so robbed the said J. N. as aforesaid ("at the time of, or immediately before, or immediately after such robbery") the said J. N. feloniously did wound ("wound, beat, strike, or use any other personal violence to such person"); against the form [as ante, p. 465]. The particular place where the robbery was committed ought not to be stated, but if it be, and be stated incorrectly, it will be immaterial.

Felony : penal servitude for life or for any term not less than three years, or imprisonment for not more than two years, with or without hard labour. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 43; 54 & 55 Vict, c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235.) The court may also order the convict to be whipped. 26 & 27 Vict. c. 44 (ante, p. 521.) As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances, and find sureties for keeping the peace, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117, ante, p. 431.

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

The evidence to support this indictment will be the same as in ordinary cases of robbery, see ante, p. 523 et seq. But in addition you must prove that the defendant either immediately before, at the time of, or immediately after the robbery, according to the allegation, wounded, beat, etc., the prosecutor, as the case may be. As to the nature of the evidence necessary to sustain the allegation of a wounding, see post, tit. "Assaults," etc. What period of time can be comprised within the words "immediately before," or "immediately after," will be a question for the court.

If the prosecutor should fail to prove the wounding, etc., the prisoner may be convicted of the robbery, and have sentence for the minor offence accordingly. And if he should fail to prove a robbery, but should prove an assault with intent to rob, the defendant may, on this indictment, be convicted and sentenced for such assault. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 41, ante, p. 520. And wherever a robbery with aggravated circumstances, i.e. by a person armed, or by several persons together, is charged in the indictment, the jury may convict of an assault with intent to rob attended with the like aggravation, and the defendant may, upon such conviction, be sentenced to penal servitude for life, etc., under the sections of 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 87, re-enacted in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, ss. 41, 43: the assault following the nature of the robbery. R. v. Mitchell, 2 Den. 468; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 135: R. v. Greenwood, 2 C. & K. 359: R. v. Barnett, 2 C. & K. 594; 3 Cox, 482.

Indictment for Robbery by a Person armed (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 43, ante, p. 520).

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—being then armed with a certain offensive weapon and instrument, to wit, a bludgeon, in and upon one J. N. feloniously did make an assault, and him the said J. N. in bodily fear and danger of his life then feloniously did put, and a sum of money, to wit, the sum of ten pounds, and one gold watch of the goods, moneys, and chattels of the said J. N., from the person and against the will of the said J. N., then feloniously and violently did steal, take and carry away; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

Felony: 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 43. For punishment, see notes to precedent, ante, p. 528.

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

The evidence to support this indictment will be the same as in ordinary cases of robbery (see ante, p. 523 et seq.), with the additional proof that the prisoner at the time of the robbery was armed with an offensive weapon or instrument. As to what will amount to an offensive weapon or instrument, see the cases referred to under the heads Smuggling, and Poaching, post. If the offence were committed by several persons, and one of them were armed, the others being present aiding and abetting, it would seem that that would be sufficient to convict them all of the whole charge in the indictment. See R. v. Smith, R. & R. 368. The defendant may be convicted of the robbery only, or of an assault with intent to rob (ante, p. 520).

An indictment for robbery by two or more persons in company will be the same as an indictment for robbing alone (see infra), except that it should charge that the defendants together robbed the prosecutor; if one of them only be apprehended, it will charge him by name, "and a certain other person [or certain other persons] to the jurors aforesaid unknown," etc.: See R. v. Raffety, 2 Lewin, 271: R. v. Ramsden, 1 Cox, 37.

Indictment for Stealing from the Person (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 40, ante, p. 520).

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—one watch, one pocket-book, and one pocket-handkerchief ("any chattel, money, or valuable security") of the goods and chattels of J. N., from the person of the said J. N. feloniously did steal, take, and carry away; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

Felony: 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 40. See precedent, ante, p. 523.

Evidence.

Prove a larceny as directed ante, p. 434 et seq., except that an actual and not merely a constructive taking must be proved; and prove the goods to have been actually severed from the person of J. N. Where the defendant drew a book from the inside pocket of the prosecutor's coat, about an inch above the top of the pocket, but whilst the book was still about the person of prosecutor, the prosecutor suddenly put up his hand, upon which the defendant let the book drop, and it fell into the prosecutor's pocket; this was held, by a majority of the judges, not to be a sufficient asportation to warrant a conviction for stealing from the person, because from the first to the last the book remained about the person of the prosecutor; although it was sufficient to constitute a simple larceny. R. v. Thompson, 1 Mood. C. C. 78. But where the prosecutor carried his watch in his waistcoat pocket, fastened to a chain, which was passed through a button-hole of the waistcoat, and kept there by a watch-key at the other end of the chain; and the defendant took the watch out of the pocket, and forcibly drew the chain and key out of the button-hole, but the point of the key caught upon another button, and the defendant's hand being seized, the watch remained there suspended, this was held a sufficient severance. R. v. Simpson, Dears. 421; 24 L. J. (M. C.) 7. See R. v. Lapier, 1 Leach, 320, ante, p. 528. Where a man went to bed with a prostitute, having left his watch in his hat on the table, and while he was asleep she stole the watch, this was held to be a stealing in the dwelling-house, and not a stealing from the person. R. v. Hamilton, 8 C. & P. 49.

Indictment for an Assault with Intent to Rob (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 42).

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—in and upon one J. N. feloniously did make an assault, with intent the moneys, goods and chattels of the said J. N., from the person and against the will of him the said J. N., then feloniously and violently to steal, take, and carry away; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. This form of indictment was held good in R. v. Huxley, C. & Mar. 596; it need not in terms charge an intent to rob the prosecutor. On an indictment for an assault with intent to rob, the prisoner cannot be convicted of a common assault. R. v. Woodhall, 12 Cox, 240, Denman, J.: cf. R. v. King [1900] 19 N. Z. L. R. 403; and see R. v. Sandys, 1 Cox, 8.

This count cannot be added to a count for robbery: if it be, the prosecutor will be put to his election. R. v. Gough, 1 M. & Rob. 71. But the defendant may be convicted for this offence on an indictment for robbery; see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 41 (ante, p. 520).

Felony: penal servitude for not less than three years and not exceeding five years, or imprisonment for not more than two years, with or without hard labour. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 42 (ante, p. 520); 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 431).

Indictments for an assault with intent to rob, the prisoner being armed, or for an assault with intent to rob, together with one or more person or persons, may easily be framed by comparing this with the precedents for robbery under the same circumstances. (See ante, p. 528.) The punishment is the same as for such robbery. (See ante, p. 520).

Evidence.

To support this indictment, you must prove the assault, and that it was coupled with an intent to rob. See R. v. Barnett, 2 C. & K. 594; 3 Cox, 432.

In proof of the former, it is not necessary to show that the defendant committed actual violence upon J. N.; for an assault is an attempt to commit a forcible crime upon another; and therefore, if the defendant, intending to rob J. N., did anything in his presence, with reference to him, in furtherance of that intent, it will be sufficient. The evidence upon this indictment usually proves a robbery with the exception of the taking and carrying away. In R. v. Thomas, 1 Leach, 330; 1 East, P. C. 417, it was held, that an indictment which alleged the assault to have been made upon J. N., was not supported by proof that the assault was made upon the driver of the post-chaise in which J. N. was; but this indictment was framed on 7 G. 3, c. 21 (rep.), which made it felony for any person with an offensive weapon to assault any other person, with intent to rob such person; and the more general words of the present statute would probably be satisfied by an indictment charging an assault upon A. with an intent to rob B.

The intent to rob must, of course, be proved from circumstances. It is a question entirely for the jury to determine, and which they will, in general, have to presume from the circumstances attending the assault, the time and place in which it was committed, the expressions or gestures of the defendant at the time, and the like. No actual demand of money, etc., is necessary to support this indictment. R. v. Trusty, 1 East, P. C. 418: R. v. Sharwin, Id. 421. Assaulting and threatening to charge with an infamous crime, with intent thereby to extort money, was held to be an assault with intent to rob. R. v. Stringer, 2 Mood. C. C. 261; 1 C. & K. 188.

Where the defendant decoyed the prosecutor into a house, and chained him down to a seat, and there compelled him to write orders for the payment of money and for the delivery of deeds, and the paper on which he wrote remained in his hands half an hour, but he was chained all the time, this was held not to be an assault with intent to rob. R. v. Edwards, 6 C. & P. 515, 521; see R. v. Phipoe, 2 Leach, 673; 2 East, P. C. 599. Such cases as this, however, are now provided for by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 48, ante, p. 522.

Indictment for sending or delivering a Letter demanding Money, etc. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 44, ante, p. 521).

Central Criminal Court, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present, that J. S., on the first day of June, in the year of our Lord ——, at the parish of ——, in the county of ——, and within the jurisdiction of the said court, feloniously did send ("send, deliver, or utter, or directly or indirectly cause to be received") to one J. N. a certain letter ("any letter or writing") directed to the said J. N., by the name and description of Mr. J. N., demanding money ("any property, chattel, money, valuable security, or other valuable thing") from the said J. N., with menaces, and without any reasonable or probable cause, he the said J. S. then well knowing the contents of the said letter; and which said letter is as follows, that is to say [here set out the letter verbatim]; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

Second count.—And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present that the said J. S. on the day and in the year aforesaid, feloniously did utter a certain writing demanding money from the said J. N., with menaces, and without any reasonable or probable cause, he the said J. S. then well knowing the contents of the said writing; and which said writing is as follows, that is to say [here set out the writing verbatim]; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. As to the venue, see ante, p. 44.

The letter must be set out in the indictment (see R. v. Lloyd, 2 East, P. C. 1122: R. v. Hunter, 2 Leach, 624, 631; and care must be taken to set it out correctly, for a variance (unless amended) would be fatal. (See ante, pp. 75, 302.)

Mr. Greaves observes (Criminal Law Consolidation Acts (2nd ed.), p. 50; 3 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 348, n.) upon 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 16, which enacts, that whosoever shall maliciously send, deliver, or utter, or directly or indirectly cause to be received knowing the contents thereof, any letter or writing, threatening to kill or murder any person, shall be guilty of felony, etc., that the words "to any other person" were advisedly omitted, in order that every sending, delivering, uttering, or causing to be received might be included. He therefore advises that in every indictment on that and the similar clauses in the other Criminal Law Consolidation Acts (which include 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, ss. 44, 46; c. 97, s. 50; and c. 100, s. 16), a count should be inserted alleging that the defendant uttered the writing, without stating any person to whom it was uttered. Counts for uttering forged instruments never state the person to whom they were uttered, and this shows that such a count on this clause would clearly be good. See Elsworth's case, 2 East, P. C. 986. The second count in the above indictment is framed in conformity with this suggestion of Mr. Greaves.

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and, if a male under sixteen, with or without whipping (Id.)—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 44 (ante, p. 521); 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 431).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Give the letter in evidence, and prove it to have been sent or delivered by the defendant, as charged in the indictment.

Feloniously did send, etc.]—Proof that the defendant dropped the letter in a place where he knew the prosecutor would come, and that it was picked up by another person, and by him delivered to the prosecutor; R. v. Lloyd, 2 East, P. C. 1122; R. v. Wagstaff, R. & R. 398; or that the letter is in the handwriting of the defendant, and that it came to the prosecutor by the post; R. v. Heming, 2 East, P. C. 1116: and see R. v. Jepson, Id. 1115; was held (upon the repealed statutes, which did not contain the words in the present statute, "or directly or indirectly cause to be received") sufficient evidence of a sending by the defendant. So, where the prosecutor, having received such a letter, traced it to a woman who was in the habit of going errands for the prisoners in Newgate, and she proved that she received it from the defendant, then a prisoner in Newgate, to put in the post office, and the servant of the post office proved that the letter in question was brought to the office by the last witness, and forwarded in the regular course; this was held sufficient evidence, not only of the sending by the defendant, but that he also knew its contents. R. v. Girdwood, 2 East, P. C. 1120; 1 Leach, 142. And sending the letter to A. in order that he may deliver it to B., is a sending to B., if the letter is delivered by A. to B. R. v. Paddle, R. & R. 484. So, the leaving of a letter directed to A., near A.'s house, with an intention that it should not only reach A., but B. also, was held to be a sending it to B., by whom it was afterwards seen. In the case of a threatening letter not properly addressed, it is for the jury to consider whether it was meant for the actual recipient. R. v. Carruthers, 1 Cox, 138; R. v. Grimwade, 1 Den. 30; 1 C. & K. 592; 1 Cox, 85. When the only evidence of sending a threatening letter was the declaration of the defendant, that he should never had written it but for W.G., it was held insufficient. R. v. Howe, 7 C. & P. 268. A delivery of a letter was not within the earlier statutes on this subject; R. v. Hammond, 2 East, P. C. 1119; 1 Leach, 444, 447; but a delivery of it, with a knowledge of its contents (which is essential in all cases under this section, R. v. Girdwood, ubi supra), is within the express terms of the present Act.

A certain letter, etc.]—The words in this statute are "any letter or writing," and therefore the decisions upon the earlier statutes as to what constitutes a "letter" are inapplicable to the present.

A material variance between the letter set out and that produced in evidence will be fatal, unless amended. (See ante, pp. 75, 302).

In R. v. Harrie, 6 C. & P. 105, Bolland, B., ordered the letter to be deposited in the hands of the clerk of the peace, in order that the defendant's witnesses might inspect it before the trial.

Demanding money.]—"Any 'property,' chattel, money, 'valuable security,' or other valuable thing." See 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 1 (ante, p. 427). If there be any doubt, which of two or three things was demanded, it may be stated differently in different counts. Where the latter contained a request only, but intimated that, if it were not complied with, the writer would publish a certain libel then in his possession, accusing the prosecutor of murder; this was held to amount to a demand. R. v. Robinson, 2 Leach, 749; 2 East, P. C. 1110. As to threatening to publish a libel, see 6 & 7 Vict. c. 96, s. 3 (ante, p. 523). A mere request, such as asking charity or the like without imposing any conditions, would not come within the meaning of the word "demand" in the statute. Per Buller, J., in R. v. Robinson, 2 East, P. C. 1114. The "valuable security" need not be negotiable. R. v. John, 13 Cox, 100. For its definition, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 1 (ante, p. 427).

By menaces.]—The demand must be with menaces. The word menaces includes "not merely threats of injury to persons or property, but menaces which would involve injury to a third person intended to be injured, and would induce the person to whom the menaces are addressed to part with money or valuable property," such as threats to accuse of misconduct not amounting to crime. R. v. Tomlinson [1895] 1 Q. B. 706; 64 L. J. (M. C.) 97; 18 Cox, 75 (C. C. R.): cf. R. v. Miard, 1 Cox, 22: R. v. Chalmers, 10 Cox, 450 (C. C. R.): R. v. Smith, 1 Den. 510; 2 C. & K. 882; 19 L. J. (M. C.) 80; 4 Cox, 42; and see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 49 (ante, p. 522). The question of the meaning is for the jury: and it is the duty of the court not to direct as matter of law that a threat is a menace within the statute, but merely to lay down the principle on which the jury should proceed in considering whether the letter amounts to a menace within the statute. R. v. Walton, L. & C. 288: 9 Cox, 268; R. v. Tomlinson, ubi supra: R. v. Carruthers, 1 Cox, 138. The prosecutor may be asked what he thought the letter meant. R. v. Hendy, 4 Cox, 243.

Without reasonable and probable cause.]—The demand must also be without reasonable and probable cause. These words apply to the state of the prisoner's mind when making the demand. "The question is whether the party making the demand really and honestly believed that she had good and reasonable cause for so doing." R. v. Miard, 1 Cox, 22, Tindal, C.J.; and see R. v. Chalmers, 10 Cox, 450 (C. C. R.). They apply to the money demanded, and not to the accusation threatened, the truth or falsity of which is immaterial. R. v. Hamilton, 1 C. & K. 212 (under s. 47).

Indictment for demanding Property, etc., with Menaces or by Force, with Intent to steal the same. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 45, ante, p. 521.)

Commencement as ante, p. 531]—feloniously with menaces [or by force, or with menaces and by force] did demand of J. N. the money ("any property, chattel, money, valuable security, or other valuable thing") of him the said J. N., with intent the said money from the said J. N. feloniously to steal, take, and carry away; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

The property, chattel, money, valuable security, etc., demanded must be stated according to the fact. If the demand were of a specific chattel or valuable security, it may be stated thus: "a certain chattel, to wit,——," or "a certain valuable security, to wit,——." Where an indictment under 4 G. 4, c. 54, s. 5 (rep.), which did not contain the words "of any person," stated that the defendant "feloniously, by menaces, did demand the monies of the said J. N.," it was held to be insufficient, because it did not state from whom he had demanded them. R. v. Dunkley, 1 Mood. C. C. 90. See the definition of the term "property" in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 1 (ante, p. 427).

Felony: penal servitude for not less than three years and not exceeding five years, or imprisonment for not more than two years, with or without hard labour.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 45 (ante, p. 521); 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 431).

Evidence.

To support this indictment, the prosecutor must prove a demand by the defendant of the money or other thing stated in the indictment, "by menaces or force," with intent to steal it. As to what constitute menaces see ante, p. 533. It is not necessary to prove an express demand in words; the statute says, "if any person shall, with menaces or by force demand," etc.; and menaces are of two kinds—by words or by gestures; so that, if the words or gestures of the defendant at the time were plainly indicative of what he required, and tantamount in fact to a demand, it should seem to be sufficient proof of the allegation of demand in the indictment. See R. v. Jackson, 1 Leach, 269.

Where the defendant demanding a shilling, and on being refused threatened to burn up the prosecutor, and actually tried to fire one of his stacks, it was held that he had demanded money by menaces. R. v. Taylor, 1 F. & F. 511, Pollock, C.B.

If a person, with menaces, demand money of another, who does not give it him, because he has it not with him, this is a felony within the statute.

In order to bring a case within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 45, the demand, if successful, must amount to stealing, and to constitute a menace within that section it must be of such a nature as to unsettle the mind of the person upon whom it operates, and to take away from his acts that element of voluntary action which alone constitutes consent; it must therefore be left to the jury to say whether the conduct of the prisoner is such as to have had that effect on the prosecutor. R. v. Walton, L. & C. 288; 32 L. J. (M. C.) 79: 9 Cox, 268. Where a policeman, professing to act under legal authority, threatens to imprison a person on a charge not amounting to an offence in law, unless money be given him, and the person believing him gives him money, the policeman may be indicted under that section, although he might also have been indicted for stealing the money. R. v. Robertson, L. & C. 483; 34 L. J. (M. C.) 35: 10 Cox, 9.

Commencement as ante, p. 531, to the words "Mr. J. N." threatening to accuse ("accusing or threatening to accuse") him the said J. N. (or one A. B. "any other person") of a certain infamous crime as defined by the forty-sixth section of the Larceny Act, 1861, to wit, of having attempted and endeavoured to commit the abominable crime of buggery with the said J. S. ("any crime punishable by law with death, or penal servitude for not less than seven years, or of any assault with intent to commit any rape, or of any attempt or endeavour to commit any rape or of any infamous crime as hereinafter defined") with a view and intent by means of the said letter ("such letter or writing") to extort and gain ("extort or gain") money (any property, chattel, money, valuable security, or other valuable thing) from the said J. N. (or A. B. "from any person"), he the said J. S. then well knowing the contents of the said letter ("letter or writing"), and which said letter ("letter or writing") is as follows, that is to say [here set out the letter verbatim]; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

Second count.—And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present that the said J. S. on the day and in the year aforesaid, feloniously did utter a certain writing ("letter or writing"), threatening to accuse him, the said J. N. [proceed as in the first count, substituting "writing" for "letter"]. As to this second count, see the observations following the second count of the indictment, ante, p. 532.

Third and fourth counts.—And the jurors [proceed as in the first and second counts, omitting the specific description of the infamous crime]. Counts may also be added, varying such description. In R. v. Tucker, 1 Mood. C. C. 134, it was held by all the judges that an indictment under 4 G. 4, c. 54 (rep.), for sending a letter threatening to accuse a man of an infamous crime need not specify such crime, for the specific crime the defendant threatened to charge might intentionally be left in doubt: but that statute contained no definition of "infamous crime." The indictment, before 10 & 11 Vict. c. 66, s. 1 (which has been replaced by the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 46), must have alleged that the defendant threatened to accuse the person to whom the letter was sent, but the words of the present statute are "any other person." Care should be taken to set out the letter correctly. See ante, pp. 75, 302. If there be a doubt as to whether the letter sent is within s. 46, an indictment should be preferred (if the facts warrant) under s. 44 (ante, p. 521).

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment for not more than two years, with or without hard labour, and if a male under sixteen, with or without whipping (Id.).—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 46 (ante, p. 521); 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 285). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 431).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant sent, delivered, or uttered, or caused to be received, the letter, as directed, ante, p. 532. Whether the letter amounts to a threat to accuse the prosecutor of the offence mentioned, is a fact to be determined by the jury. See R. v. Girdwood, 2 East, P. C. 1120; 1 Leach, 142. If it does not appear from the letter itself of what offence the defendant threatened to accuse the prosecutor, the defendant's declaration of meaning of the letter may be given in evidence to explain it. R. v. Tucker, ubi supra. The threat need not be to accuse before a court of justice. R. v. Robinson, 2 M. & Rob. 14; 2 Lewin, 273.

The intent must also be proved, as in the last case; and in order to prove it, other letters received by the prosecutor from the defendant upon the same subject may be given in evidence, or from the previous contemporaneous or even subsequent conduct and expressions to third persons. R. v. Menage, 3 F. & F. 310; cf. R. v. Cooper, 3 Cox, 547.

Punishable with penal servitude for not less than seven years.]—See observations on evidence under s. 47, post, p. 537.

Infamous crime.]—These words are defined in s. 46. They first occur in 4 G. 4, c. 54 (rep.) (see R. v. Hickman, 1 Mood. C. C. 34); that statute repealed 30 G. 2, c. 24, which contained the words "any crime punishable with death, transportation, pillory, or other infamous punishment." As to evidence of a threat to accuse within s. 46, see the cases under s. 47, post, p. 537.

Indictment for threatening to accuse a Man of a Crime with Intent, etc. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 47, ante, p. 522).

Commencement as in the last precedent]—feloniously did threaten one J. N. to accuse ("accuse or threaten to accuse") him the said J. N. ("either the person to whom such accusation or threat shall be made, or any other person") of a certain infamous crime as defined by the forty-sixth section of the Larceny Act, 1861, to wit, of having attempted and endeavoured to commit the abominable crime of buggery with the said J. S. ("any crime punishable by law with death or penal servitude for not less than seven years, or of any assault with intent to commit any rape, or of any attempt or endeavour to commit any rape, or of any crime in and by the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 46, defined to be an infamous crime"), with a view and intent thereby then to extort and gain money ("any property, chattel, money, valuable security, or other valuable thing," see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 1, ante, p. 427) from the said J. N.; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

Second count.—And the jurors [see the observations as to the third and other counts of the indictment under s. 46, ante, p. 521]. It is not necessary to state the property in the security or money to be obtained: R. v. Tiddeman; 4 Cox, 389.

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment for not more than two years, with or without hard labour, and, if a male under sixteen, with or without whipping.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 47 (ante, p. 522); 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 431).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove the threat or accusation, and the intent. It is for the jury to decide what the defendant meant by the threatened accusation: R. v. Cooper, 3 Cox, 547: R. v. Braynell, 4 Cox, 402. It is submitted that the meaning of the words in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 46, "any crime punishable by law with penal servitude for not less than seven years" is any crime for which a sentence of seven years or more may be awarded; and therefore that where the threatened accusation is one of indecent assault upon a male person such an accusation is within the above statute, the maximum punishment for an indecent assault upon a male person being penal servitude for ten years by virtue of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 62, post, ch. ii. s. 8. Before the passing of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 it was held that where the threatened accusation was one of indecent assault (upon a male person) it was for the jury to determine whether such an accusation might not amount to an "infamous crime" within 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 8, as being "a solicitation to permit or commit such crime." R. v. Cooper, ubi supra, Cresswell, J.: cf. R. v. Braynell, ubi supra: R. v. Middleditch, 1 Den. 92; 2 Cox, 313. It is to be observed that the offence of gross indecency between male persons created by 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 11 is not within ss. 46 or 47: see R. v. Gilgannon, 53 J. P. 457.

The words "any other person" in ss. 46 and 47 render it unnecessary to consider the earlier cases as to proof of the person threatened.

The threat must be a threat to accuse, or an accusation: if J. N. be indicted, or in custody for an offence, and the defendant threaten to procure witnesses to prove the charge, this will not be a threat to accuse within the meaning of the statute. R. v. Gill, 1 Archbold's Peel's Acts, 302. But it need not be a threat to accuse before a judicial tribunal; a threat to charge before any third person is sufficient. R. v. Robinson, 2 M. & Rob. 14. And it is immaterial whether the prosecutor be innocent or guilty of the offence imputed to him; R. v. Gardner, 1 C. & P. 479; if the prisoner intended to extort money by the accusation, R. v. Richards, 11 Cox, 43. And therefore, although the prosecutor may be cross-examined as to his guilt of the offence imputed to him, with a view to shake his credit, yet no evidence will be allowed to be given, even in cross-examination, by another witness, to prove that the prosecutor was guilty of such offence. R. v. Cracknell, 10 Cox, 408. If the prisoner makes the accusation believing it to be true and without any purpose at that time to extort money thereby, and afterwards endeavours to compromise it by payment of money, he may be guilty of the offence of compounding a felony, but not of an offence under s. 47. R. v. Richards, 11 Cox, 43, Blackburn, J. The last-named case appears to be hardly reconcilable with the above cited cases of R. v. Gardner and R. v. Cracknell, but the facts in R. v. Richards were exceptional. Proof that the prisoner went to the prosecutor and threatened to accuse his son of an unnatural offence with a mare unless the prosecutor would buy the mare for 3*l.*, was held to sustain an indictment under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 47. R. v. Redman, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 12; 35 L. J. (M. C.) 89; 10 Cox, 159.

The intent must be proved as laid; a variance will be fatal, unless amended. Where the intent laid was to extort money, and the intent proved was to extort a bill of exchange, it was (before 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100) held a fatal variance. R. v. Major, 2 East, P. C. 1118; 2 Leach, 772. If the intent do not appear sufficiently from the accusation or threat itself, it must be proved by circumstances from which the jury may fairly presume it (see ante, p. 303); as by subsequent expressions of the defendant. R. v. Kain, 8 C. & P. 187. Evidence of an exactly similar act committed by the prisoner on a previous occasion has been held admissible as evidence of intent. R. v. Cooper, 3 Cox, 547, Cresswell, J., and see ante, pp. 303, 308-312.

For precedent, see R. v. John, 13 Cox, 100.

Felony: penal servitude for life, or not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 48 (ante, p. 522); 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 431).

The offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove the threats as directed (ante, p. 537), that the document was executed in consequence of the threats, etc., and that it is a valuable security within the section. A document in the following terms:—"London, July 19th, 1875.—I hereby agree to pay you 100*l.* sterling on the 27th inst. to prevent any action against me," has been held to be a valuable security within s. 48. R. v. John, 13 Cox, 100, Brett, J.

Indictment for threatening to publish a Libel, etc., with Intent to extort Money, etc. (6 & 7 Vict. c. 96, s. 3, ante, p. 523.)

Commencement as ante, p. 531]—unlawfully did threaten one J. N. to publish a certain libel of and concerning him the said J. N. [or one E. F. —if any person shall publish, or threaten to publish, any libel upon any other person, or shall directly or indirectly threaten to print or publish or shall directly or indirectly propose to abstain from printing or publishing, or shall directly or indirectly offer to prevent the printing or publishing of any matter or thing touching any other person"] with intent thereby then to extort money from the said J. N. [" with intent to extort any money or security for money, or any valuable thing, from such or any other person, or with intent to induce any person to confer or procure for any person any appointment or office of profit or trust"]; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. If it be doubtful whether the matter threatened to be published be libellous, and a count charging that the defendant " did propose to the said J. N. to abstain from printing and publishing a certain matter and thing touching the said J. N. [or one E. F.], with intent," etc.

Misdemeanor: imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding three years. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 96, s. 3 (ante, p. 523). The punishment seems not to be affected by 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1; see ante, pp. 235, 236.

Evidence.

Prove the threat by the defendant to publish libellous or other matter concerning the prosecutor. Or, if the indictment be for proposing to the prosecutor to abstain from publishing matter concerning him, prove the proposal, and the nature of the matter proposed to be suppressed. Prove the intent as directed (ante, pp. 303, 308, 312). The intent to extort money may be implied from the circumstances, and does not require an express demand of money. R. v. Coghlan, 4 F. & F. 316. But, if it appears that the object is to compel the delivery of accounts of moneys honestly believed to be due and owing, there is no evidence of the intent to extort money. Id. An intent to extort bank-notes may be given in evidence under this indictment. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 18 (ante, p. 54).

PIRACY JURE GENTIUM.

Indictment.

Yorkshire, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present, that J. S., K. S., and L. T., on the first day of August, in the year of our Lord ——, with force and arms, upon the high seas, to wit, in and on board of a certain ship, called the Windsor Castle, in a certain place upon the high seas, distant about ten leagues from Cutcheen in the East Indies, then being, in and upon certain mariners, to the jurors aforesaid unknown, in the peace of God and of our lord the King, then and there being, piratically and feloniously did make an assault, and then the said mariners in bodily fear and danger of their lives on the high seas aforesaid then and there piratically and feloniously did put, and the said ship called the Windsor Castle, and the apparel and tackle of the said ship, of the value of twelve hundred pounds, and seventy chests of opium, of the value of fourteen hundred pounds, in and on board the said ship then being, of the goods and chattels of certain subjects of our said lord the King, to the jurors aforesaid unknown, and then in the custody and possession of the mariners aforesaid, from the care, custody, and possession, and against the will of the mariners aforesaid, then, to wit, on the day and year last aforesaid, upon the high seas aforesaid, piratically, feloniously and violently did steal, take and carry away, against the peace of our lord the King, his crown and dignity. [Framed from the indictment in R. v. Kidd, 14 St. Tr. 147; and see R. v. Bonnet, 15 St. Tr. 1231. As to the venue and place of trial, see ante, p. 39.]

Piracy jure gentium is robbery within the Admiralty jurisdiction; Att.-Gen. for Hong-Kong v. Kwok a Sing (L. R. 5 P. C. 179, 200; 42 L. J. P. C. 64; 12 Cox, 565: R. v. Dawson, 13 St. Tr. 451; Holt, C.J.). Unlike piracy under municipal law, it is justiciable by the courts of every nation. In England it was justiciable only by the admiral (2 Hale, 370), until by 28 H. 8, c. 15, it was made triable according to the course of the common law, and punishable with death, and with loss of lands and goods, in the same manner as upon an attainder for robbery on land. The Offences at Sea Act, 1799 (39 G. 3, c. 37), ss. 1, 2, made all offences committed within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty punishable in the same manner as if they had been committed on land. See R. v. Curling, R. & R. 123. The Offences at Sea Act, 1820 (1 G. 4, c. 90), s. 1, extended to such offences the benefit of clergy, as if committed on land; and subjected the offences so made clergyable to the same punishment as if committed on land. And the Criminal Law Act, 1827 (7 & 8 G. 4, c. 28), s. 12, enacts that "all offences prosecuted in the High Court of Admiralty of England should, upon every first and subsequent conviction, be subject to the same punishment, whether of death or otherwise, as if such offences had been committed upon the land." See now 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 88, s. 3 (post, p. 544). The law as to piracy jure gentium and the mode of trying that offence is not altered by the Territorial Waters Jurisdiction Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 73); see s. 6. But where such offence is also an offence defined by that Act it may be tried under the Act.

The procedure as to arraignment, pleading, etc., on the trial of piracy is the same as in the case of felony. See 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 28, ss. 1, 2, 3 (ante, pp. 179, 183, 200). 12 G. 3, c. 20, as to the consequences of standing mute on arraignment, is virtually repealed as to England.

Evidence.

Prove a robbery, and prove it to have been committed within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty. Attend also to the following particulars of evidence:—

Upon the high seas.]—The offence must be proved to have been committed within the jurisdiction of the court of Admiralty, that is, upon some part of the sea which is not infra corpus comitatûs. See 13 R. 2, st. 1, c. 5; 15 R. 2, c. 3. According to Coke, all rivers in this country, until they flow past the furthest point of land next the sea, are within the jurisdiction of the courts of common law, and not of the court of Admiralty (see 3 Co. Inst. 113; Velthasen v. Ormsley, 3 T. R. 315); and the Admiralty jurisdiction does not extend to any haven, creek, arm of the sea, or other place within the body of a county: 3 Co. Inst. 113; 1 Hawk. c. 37, s. 16; thus, where the sea flows in between two points of land in this country, a straight imaginary line being drawn from one point to the other, the courts of common law have jurisdiction of all offences committed within, the court of Admiralty of all offences without it. According to Hale, whose opinion seems to be better, the Admiralty had concurrent jurisdiction in such waters as to murder and maiming, and exclusive jurisdiction as to piracy. R. v. Bonnet, 15 St. Tr. 1231; and see ante, p. 39. And if a robbery be committed in creeks, harbours, ports, etc., in foreign countries, the court of Admiralty indisputably has jurisdiction of it, and such offence is consequently piracy. R. v Jemot, Old Bailey, 28*th Feb.* 1812, MS. For the court of Admiralty has jurisdiction over British ships in foreign rivers, below the bridges, where the tide ebbs and flows, and where great ships go, although the municipal authorities of the foreign country may be entitled to exercise concurrent jurisdiction. R. v. Anderson, L. R., 1 C. C. R. 161; 38 L. J. (M. C.) 12, ante, pp. 39, 40: R. v. Carr, 10 Q. B. D. 76; 52 L. J. (M. C.) 12, ante, p. 40. Indeed, on an indictment for larceny out of a vessel lying in a river at Wampu, in China, the prosecutor gave no evidence as to the tide flowing or otherwise where the vessel lay; but the judges held that the Admiralty had jurisdiction, it being a place where great ships go. R. v. Allen, 1 1 Mood. C. C. 494. As to offences committed on the coast, the Admiralty have exclusive jurisdiction of offences committed beyond the low water-mark; and between that and the high water-mark the court of Admiralty has jurisdiction over offences done upon the water when the tide is in; and the courts of common law over offences committed upon the strand when the tide is out. But see Embleton v. Brown, 3 E. & E. 234; 30 L. J. (M. C.) 1, and ante, p. 39 et seq. All the other parts of the high seas are indisputably within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty. See ante, p. 39.

In and on board, etc.]—This must be proved as laid. If the name of the ship be unknown, it must be stated so in the indictment. (See ante, p. 56).

In the peace of our lord the King.]—Some evidence must be given of this; for if the persons robbed be subjects of a state at enmity with this country, although it may perhaps be piracy, yet it is not cognizable as such in any court of Admiralty within this realm. 4 Co. Inst. 154; Y. B. 2 Ric. 3, f. 2. See R. v. Sawyer, R. & R. 294.

In bodily fear, etc.]—This must be proved in the same manner as in robbery. Sir L. Jenk. xciv.

And the said ship, etc.]—The things stolen are proved in the same manner as in ordinary cases of larceny. The value is immaterial, as in a robbery upon land. Molloy de Jure Maritimo, p. 64, s. 18; Beawes, 231. It is said, that if one or more of the crew or passengers in a vessel be taken for the purpose of being sold as slaves, it is piracy. Molloy, p. 63, s. 16; (and see the Slave Trade Act, 1824 (5 G. 4, c. 113), s. 9, post, p. 545).

Of the goods and chattels of, etc.]—These must be stated to be the goods of a subject or subjects of this realm, or of some state in amity with it; and the allegation must be proved as laid. (See ante, pp. 56, 300).

Piratically, feloniously, and violently.]—The goods must be proved to have been taken animo furandi, as in other cases of larceny. Molloy, 71, s. 73. (See ante, p. 440.) And they must be proved to have been either taken with force and violence, or delivered to the pirates under the impression of that degree of fear and apprehension which is necessary to constitute robbery upon land. (See ante, p. 523).

The taking, to be piracy, must be without authority from any prince or state. If a party making a capture at sea do so by the authority of any prince or state, it cannot be considered piracy; for a nation never can be deemed pirates; fixed domain, public revenue, and a certain form of government exempt a people from that character. Even a capture by authority of the states of Algiers, Tunis, or Tripoli, was not treated as piracy. 2 Sir L. Jenk. 790.

At common law, if a subject of this realm committed acts of hostility against another subject, under the authority of a commission from a foreign prince, it was not piracy; 2 Sir L. Jenk. 754; but the law has been altered in this respect by 11 W. 3, c. 7, and 18 G. 2, c. 30, s. 1 (post, p. 544). See R. v. Evans, 2 East, P. C. 798. As to trials for piracy of persons acting under the commission of Jas. 2, after his deposition, see R. v. Golding, 12 St. Tr. 1269.

If the subjects of the same state commit robbery upon each other, upon the high sea, it is piracy. If the subjects of different states commit robbery upon each other, upon the high sea, if their respective states be in amity, it is piracy; if at enmity, it is not; for it is a general rule, that enemies can never commit piracy on each other, their depredations being deemed mere acts of hostility. 1 Sir L. Jenk. xciv.; 4 Co. Inst. 154.

But if a commissioned ship, by mistake, capture a vessel belonging to the subjects of a friendly power, imagining it to belong to an enemy, and bring it into port for condemnation, that is not piracy. See 1 Sir L. Jenk. xciv.

Steal, take, and carry away.]—This is proved in the same manner as in robbery. Molloy, p. 64, s. 18. If persons at sea force the captain of a vessel to sell part of his cargo for less than its value, it is piracy. 28 H. 8, c. 15, s. 4, exempts from the penalties of piracy, the taking, when compelled by necessity, from a ship which can conveniently spare them victuals or equipment if payment is made by bill on the terms there prescribed. If a pirate attack a vessel, and before he obtains possession of her, the captain, in order to redeem her, give an oath to pay a sum certain, this is no piracy, for there was no taking. Molloy, p. 64, s. 18. But if there be an actual taking, it is piracy, although the pirate afterwards allow the party to proceed on his voyage. Sir L. Jenk. xcviii.

Indictment for Piracy with Violence. (7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 88, s. 2.)

before,' or 'immediately after the committing'] such piracy as aforesaid, in and upon one J. N., then and there being on board of [or 'belonging to'] the said ship, feloniously did make an assault, with intent him the said J. N. feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought to kill and murder" [or otherwise as the case may be]; and concluding against the form of the statute, etc. See an abstract of an indictment for piracy under 11 W. 3, c. 7, s. 8 (ante, p. 542). R. v. Jones, 11 Cox, 393. The evidence will be the same as stated ante, p. 510, *with the addition of the proof necessary to sustain the above allegation. RECEIVING STOLEN PROPERTY.

Statutes.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 (Larceny Act, 1861), s. 91—Receivers may be tried as accessories after the fact or for substantive felony.]—Whosoever shall receive any chattel, money, valuable security, or other property whatsoever, the stealing, taking, extorting, obtaining, embezzling, or otherwise disposing whereof shall amount to a felony, either at common law or by virtue of this Act, knowing the same to have been feloniously stolen, taken, extorted, obtained, embezzled, or disposed of, shall be guilty of felony, and may be indicted and convicted, either as an accessory after the fact or for a substantive felony, and, in the latter case, whether the principal felon shall or shall not have been previously convicted, or shall or shall not be amenable to justice; and every such receiver, howsoever convicted, shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding fourteen years . . . or to be imprisoned . . . and, if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping: provided that no person, howsoever tried for receiving as aforesaid, shall be liable to be prosecuted a second time for the same offence. For definition of valuable security and property, see ante*, p. 427. For indictment, see post, p. 549.]

Sect. 92.—Joining counts against principal felons and receivers.]—In any indictment containing a charge of feloniously stealing any property, it shall be lawful to add a count, or several counts, for feloniously receiving the same, or any part or parts thereof, knowing the same to have been stolen; and in any indictment for feloniously receiving any property knowing it to have been stolen, it shall be lawful to add a count for feloniously stealing the same; and where any such indictment shall have been preferred and found against any person, the prosecutor shall not be put to his election, but it shall be lawful for the jury who shall try the same to find a verdict of guilty either of stealing the property, or of receiving the same, or any part or parts thereof, knowing the same to have been stolen; and if such indictment shall have been preferred and found against two or more persons, it shall be lawful for the jury who shall try the same to find all or any of the said persons guilty either of stealing the property, or of receiving the same, or any part or parts thereof, knowing the same to have been stolen, or to find one or more of the said persons guilty of stealing the property, and the other or others of them guilty of receiving the same or any part or parts thereof, knowing the same to have been stolen. Sect. 93—Several counts against separate receivers.]—Whenever any property whatsoever shall have been stolen, taken, extorted, obtained, embezzled or otherwise disposed of in such a manner as to amount to a felony, either at common law, or by virtue of this Act, any number of receivers at different times of such property, or of any part or parts thereof, may be charged with substantive felonies in the same indictment, and may be tried together, notwithstanding that the principal felon shall not be included in the same indictment, or shall not be in custody, or amenable to justice. [This section re-enacts 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 15, with the addition of the words in italics.]

Sect. 94—Conviction for separate, on indictment for joint, receiving.]—If upon the trial of any two or more persons indicted for jointly receiving any property, it shall be proved that one or more of such persons separately received any part or parts of such property, it shall be lawful for the jury to convict upon such indictment such of the said persons as shall be proved to have received any part or parts of such property. [This section re-enacts 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 14.]

Sect. 95—Receivers, where principal offence is a misdemeanor.]—Whosoever shall receive any chattel, money, valuable security, or other property whatsoever, the stealing, taking, obtaining, converting or disposing whereof is made a misdemeanor by this Act, knowing the same to have been unlawfully stolen, taken, obtained, converted or disposed of, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and may be indicted and convicted thereof, whether the person guilty of the principal misdemeanor shall or shall not have been previously convicted thereof, or shall or shall not be amenable to justice; and every such receiver, being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding seven years . . . or to be imprisoned . . . and, if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping. [This section is framed on 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 55; and 20 & 21 Vict. c. 54, s. 9. For indictment, see post, p. 554.]

Sect. 96—Venue in indictment against receivers.]—Whosoever shall receive any chattel, money, valuable security, or other property whatsoever, knowing the same to have been feloniously or unlawfully stolen, taken, obtained, converted, or disposed of, may, whether charged as an accessory after the fact to the felony, or with a substantive felony, or with a misdemeanor only, be dealt with, indicted, tried, and punished, in any county or place, in which he shall have or shall have had any such property in his possession, or in any county or place in which the party guilty of the principal felony or misdemeanor may by law be tried, in the same manner as such receiver may be dealt with, indicted, tried, and punished in the county or place where he actually received such property [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 56.]

34 & 35 Vict. c. 112 (Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871), s. 19—Proof of knowledge that goods were stolen by evidence of possession of other stolen property, or of previous conviction.]—Where proceedings are taken against any person for having received goods knowing them to be stolen, or for having in his possession stolen property, evidence may be given at any stage of the proceedings that there was found in the possession of such person other property stolen within the preceding period of twelve months, and such evidence may be taken into consideration for the purpose of proving that such person knew the property to be stolen, which forms the subject of the proceedings taken against him.

Where proceedings are taken against any person for having received goods knowing them to be stolen, or for having in his possession stolen property, and evidence has been given that the stolen property has been found in his possession, then if such person has within five years immediately preceding been convicted of any offence involving fraud or dishonesty, evidence of such previous conviction may be given at any stage of the proceedings, and may be taken into consideration for the purpose of proving that the person accused knew the property which was proved to be in his possession to have been stolen; provided that not less than seven days' notice in writing shall have been given to the person accused that proof is intended to be given of such previous conviction: and it shall not be necessary for the purposes of this section to charge in the indictment the previous conviction of the person so accused. [See post, p. 552, Evidence of guilty knowledge.]

35 & 36 Vict. c. 93 (Pawnbrokers Act, 1872), s. 38—Pawnbroker convicted of receiving stolen goods.]—If a pawnbroker is convicted on indictment of any fraud in his business, or of receiving stolen goods knowing them to be stolen, the court before which he is convicted may, if it thinks fit, direct that his licence shall cease to have effect, and the same shall so cease accordingly.

Indictment against a Receiver of Stolen Goods as for a Substantive Felony. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 91, ante, p. 546.)

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—one silver tankard ("chattel, money, valuable security, or other property whatsoever"), of the goods and chattels of J. C.* 781. It is not necessary for the purposes of s. 19 of 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112 (ante, p. 548), to charge in the indictment the previous conviction of the prisoner.

The defendant may be convicted both on a count charging him as accessory before the fact and on a count for receiving: R. v. Hughes, Bell, 242; 29 L. J. (M. C.) 71. And where the first count of the indictment charged the defendant with stealing certain goods, and the second with receiving "the goods and chattels aforesaid so as aforesaid feloniously stolen," it was held that a conviction on the latter count was good, the words "so as aforesaid feloniously stolen" being immaterial. R. v. Huntley, Bell, 238; 29 L. J. (M. C.) 70. As to the venue, see ante, pp. 48, 49, 548; R. v. Martin, 1 Den. 398; 2 C. & K. 950; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 137; and R. v. Cryer, Dears. & B. 324; 26 L. J. (M. C.) 192; R. v. Rogers, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 136, post, p. 552.

Felony: penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour; if a male under sixteen years of age, with or without whipping—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 91; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 431). If a pawnbroker is convicted on indictment of receiving stolen goods, knowing them to be stolen, the court before which he is convicted may, if it thinks fit, direct that his licence shall cease to have effect, and the same shall so cease accordingly. 35 & 36 Vict. c. 93, s. 38 (ante, p. 550).

The statute extends to "chattels, money, valuable securities (see ante, p. 546), and other property whatsoever;" and the receiver or receivers may be indicted and convicted as an accessory or accessories after the fact, or for a substantive felony, whether the principal be or be not convicted, or be or be not amenable to justice. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, ss. 91, 93 (ante, p. 547).

The owner on prosecuting the receiver to conviction is entitled to restitution of his property, except in the case of a valuable security bonâ fide paid or transferred, if a negotiable security, for a valuable consideration. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 100 (ante, p. 265 et seq.). As to summary proceedings for purchasing or receiving materials or tools embezzled by persons employed in the woollen, worsted, linen, cotton, flax, mohair, or silk manufacturers, see 6 & 7 Vict. c. 40, ss. 4, 5, 11.

Evidence.

Prove a larceny of the goods mentioned in the indictment, as directed ante, p. 434 et seq., for which purpose the principal felon is a competent witness, and indeed to prove the whole case. R. v. Haslam, 1 Leach, 418. Where the only evidence, however, against the alleged receiver is that of the thief, the presiding judge will advise the jury to acquit. R. v. Robinson, 4 F. & F. 43. And the mere fact that the stolen goods were found upon the alleged receiver's premises on the day of the theft, is not sufficient to confirm the evidence of the thief, so as to make it proper to convict. R. v. Pratt, 4 F. & F. 315. The confession of the principal (unless made in the presence of and assented to by the receiver, R. v. Cox, 1 F. & F. 90) is not admissible evidence against the receiver for any purpose. R. v. Turner, 1 Mood. C. C. 347 (ante, p. 338); R. v. Kelly, 64 J. P. 84; and see R. v. Smith, 18 Cox, 470. It is competent to the defendant to disprove the guilt of the principal. Fost. 365. A conviction of the principal for embezzlement is sufficient to warrant a conviction of the receiver, by virtue of the express words of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 91: and was held to be so before the passing of that statute. See R. v. Frampton, Dears. & B. 585; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 229. But it is not a crime punishable under s. 91 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 (ante, p. 546) to receive stolen goods, knowing them to have been stolen, if the stealing is not a crime either at common law or under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, although the stealing is a felony under the Larceny Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 116), s. 1 (ante, p. 432). R. v. Smith, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 266; 39 L. J. (M. C.) 112: R. v. Streeter, infra. And therefore where A. and B. were in partnership, and B. stole the partnership goods, and disposed of them to the prisoner, who received them knowing them to have been so stolen, and the prisoner was afterwards indicted and convicted as a receiver under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 91, the conviction was quashed. R. v. Smith, ubi supra. It was intimated by the court that the proper course in that case would have been to indict the prisoner as an accessory before or after the fact to the felony, either at common law or under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 94, ss. 1, 3, there being circumstances, independent of the receipt of the stolen goods, from which the jury might have drawn the conclusion that he was such accessory. Id. The mere receipt of stolen goods, however, does not at common law constitute the receiver an accessory, but it is a misdemeanor punishable by fine and imprisonment. See ante, p. 21, and Fost. 370. And it would seem that if, in the case of R. v. Smith, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 266; 39 L. J. Q. B. 112, the only thing that could have been proved against the prisoner was the receiving with a guilty knowledge, he ought to have been indicted for this common law misdemeanor. A wife, although she may have committed adultery, could not at common law steal her husband's goods; and therefore the adulterer, receiving from her the goods which she had taken from her husband, could not be guilty of receiving stolen goods. R. v. Kenny, 2 Q. B. D. 307; 46 L. J. (M. C.) 156. This case was decided before the passing of 45 & 46 Vict. c. 75, s. 16, by virtue of which a married woman may under certain circumstances be guilty of stealing her husband's goods (see R. v. James [1902] 1 K. B. 540, and ante, p. 459, 460); but the receiver from her with a guilty knowledge cannot be indicted for receiving under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 91, but may, it would seem, be indicted for a common law misdemeanor. R. v. Streeter [1900] 2 Q. B. 601 C. C. R., 69 L. J. Q. B. 915: 19 Cox, 570; 64 J. P. 537, explaining statements in Roscoe, Cr. Ev. (12th ed.), 485: and see Steph. Dig. Cr. Law (6th ed.), 317–320.

Having proved the larceny, you must prove the goods stolen to have been received by the defendant. And though there be proof of a criminal intent to receive, and a knowledge that the goods were stolen, if the exclusive possession still remain in the thief, a conviction for receiving cannot be sustained. R. v. Wiley, 2 Den. 37; 20 L. J. (M. C.) 4; and see R. v. Hill, 1 Den. 453; 2 C. & R. 978. So, a principal in the second degree, particeps criminis, cannot at the same time be treated as a receiver. R. v. Perkins, 2 Den. 459; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 152: R. v. Coggins, 12 Cox, 517 (C. C. R.). But a person having a joint possession with the thief may be convicted as a receiver. R. v. Smith, Dears. 494; 24 L. J. (M. C.) 135. Before 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 14 rep.), if two defendants were indicted jointly for receiving, a joint act of receiving must have been proved in order to convict both. R. v. Messingham, 1 Mood. C. C. 257. See R. v. Archer, Id. 143: R. v. Parr, 2 M. & Rob. 346: R. v. Matthews, 1 Den. 596: R. v. Dovey, 2 Den. 86; 20 L. J. (M. C.) 105; but this was altered by the above section, which, although now repealed, was re-enacted by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 94 (ante, p. 547), which enables the jury, on the trial of an indictment against two or more persons for jointly receiving any property, if it be proved that one or more of such persons separately received any part of such property, to convict them separately of receiving such property. Where A., knowing that goods had been stolen, directed B., his servant, to receive them into his premises, and B., in pursuance of that direction, afterwards received them in A.'s absence, B. also knowing that they had been stolen, they were held to be indictable jointly. R. v. Parr, 2 M. & Rob. 346. Two or more persons may be indicted jointly for receiving stolen property, though each successively received the whole of the same at different times; and it makes no difference whether the receipt was direct from the thief or from an intermediate person. R. v. Reardon, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 21; 35 L. J. (M. C.) 171. Proof that the goods were found in the defendant's possession is good presumptive evidence of the fact; or it may be proved by the principal felon. If it be proved that the defendant not only received the articles, but also assisted in stealing them, he may still be convicted, provided some other person assisted in the theft; because the stealing and receiving are both felonious, and a theft by several is a theft by each. See R. v. Dyer, 2 East, P. C. 767: R. v. Attwell, Id. 768 (ante, p. 13). If a husband, knowing that his wife has stolen goods, receives them from her, he may be convicted of receiving. R. v. M'Athey, L. & C. 250; 32 L. J. (M. C.) 35. Husband and wife were indicted jointly for receiving. The jury found both guilty, and found also that the wife received the goods without the control or knowledge of the husband, and apart from him, and that "he afterwards adopted his wife's receipt." It was held that this finding did not necessarily mean that the husband took an active part in the matter and therefore did not warrant his conviction. R. v. Dring, Dears. & B. 329; 7 Cox, 382. A wife, in her husband's absence, and without his knowledge, received stolen goods, and paid money on account of them. The thief and the husband afterwards met, and the latter then learnt that the goods were stolen, and agreed on the price to be paid for them, and paid the balance to the thief. On these facts the husband was held to have been properly convicted of receiving. R. v. Woodward, L. & C. 122; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 91. A wife indicted jointly with her husband for receiving, may be convicted if there is evidence that she acted independently in receiving the stolen goods. R. v. Baines, 69 L. J. Q. B. 681; 19 Cox, 524.

Constructive possession.]—The actual manual possession or touch of the goods by the defendant, however, is not necessary to the completion of the offence of receiving; it is sufficient if they are in the actual possession of a person over whom the defendant has a control, so that they would be forthcoming if he ordered it. R. v. Smith, Dears. 494; 24 L. J. (M. C.) 135: cf. R. v. Miller, 6 Cox, 353 (Ir.). The prisoner stole a watch at Liverpool, and sent it by rail to a confederate in London: it was held that the constructive possession still remained in the prisoner, and that he was triable in London. R. v. Rogers, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 136; 37 L. J. (M. C.) 83; 6 Cox, 38.

Evidence of guilty knowledge.]—And, lastly, it must be proved that the defendant, at the time he received, or bought the goods, knew them to be stolen. This is proved, either directly, by the evidence of the principal felon, or circumstantially, by proving that the defendant bought them very much under their value, 1 Hale, 619, or denied their being in his possession, or the like. See ante, p. 340.

By the first paragraph of 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112 (the Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871), s. 19 (ante, p. 548), "Where proceedings are taken against any person for having received goods knowing them to be stolen, or for having in his possession stolen property, evidence may be given at any stage of the proceedings that there was found in the possession of such person other property stolen within the preceding period of twelve months, and such evidence may be taken into consideration for the purpose of proving that such party knew the property to be stolen, which forms the subject of the proceedings taken against him." R. v. Oddy, 2 Den. 264; 20 L. J. (M. C.) 198, is therefore no longer law. Under this section on the trial of an indictment for larceny and receiving stolen goods, evidence may be given that there was found in the possession of the prisoner other property stolen within the preceding period of twelve months, although such other property is the subject of another indictment against him, to be tried at the same assizes. R. v. Jones, 14 Cox, 3, Lopes, J. But in order to show guilty knowledge it is not sufficient merely to prove that "other property stolen within the preceding period of twelve months" had at some time previously been dealt with by the prisoner, but it must be proved that such "other property" was found in the prisoner's possession at the time when he was found in possession of the property which is the subject of the indictment. R. v. Carter, 12 Q. B. D. 522; 53 L. J. (M. C.) 96: R. v. Drage, 14 Cox, 85, Bramwell, L.J. Therefore, where the prisoner was indicted for receiving stolen goods, and to show guilty knowledge, evidence was tendered, under 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112 s. 19, to show that a short time previously the prisoner had sold for half its value, and had otherwise disposed of, other property stolen within the preceding period of twelve months, it was held that the statute did not extend to such evidence, which was therefore inadmissible. R. v. Drage, ubi supra. Where, however, evidence was tendered on behalf of the prosecution to prove receipt by the prisoner at different times from the same person of articles which were not those the subject of the charge and had been stolen on different occasions antecedent to the date of the receiving charged in the indictment, this was held to be admissible. R. v. Dunn, 1 Mood. C. C. 146. So, where evidence was tendered that on various former occasions portions of the commodity stolen had been missed by the prosecutor, and that the prisoners, the alleged thief and receiver, had after such occasions been found selling such a commodity, that which was sold on the last of these occasions being identified as part of the commodity missed by the prosecutor, this was held to be admissible as proof of guilty knowledge. R. v. Nicholls, 1 F. & F. 51, Cockburn, C.J., in which case the attention of the court was called on behalf of the prisoner to R. v. Oddy, ubi supra. The prisoner was indicted for receiving certain jewellery knowing the same to have been stolen. No stolen jewellery was proved to have been found in his possession, but evidence that he had received large quantities of stolen jewellery from the same person (who had acted as intermediary between the thief and the receiver) on various occasions antecedent and on one occasion subsequent to the receiving charged in the indictment was held to be admissible on the authority of R. v. Dunn, ubi supra: R. v. Hobinstock [1902] 135 Cent. Crim. Court, Sess. Pap. 169, Fulton Recorder. See 37 Law Journ. Newsp. 106.

Upon the second paragraph of the same section (34 & 35 Vict. c. 112, s. 19: ante, p. 548) it would appear that on an indictment for receiving stolen goods, service of a notice under that paragraph, and proof of a previous conviction, do not relieve the prosecution from the necessity of proving that the prisoner knew that the goods had been stolen. R. v. Davis, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 272. That case was, however, decided upon 32 & 33 Vict. c. 99. s. 11 (rep.), which is somewhat differently worded from s. 19 of 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112. Before the passing of 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112, other instances of receiving goods of the prosecutor might, under certain circumstances, have been proved. R. v. Dunn, 1 Mood. C. C. 146: R. v. Nicholls, 1 F. & F. 51; see ante, p. 552.

Resumption of possession by owner.]—Where stolen goods were returned to the thief, who then on the owner's instructions sold them to D., it was held that D. was not liable to conviction under such circumstances, inasmuch as at the time of the receipt the goods were not stolen goods. R. v Dolan, Dears. 436; 24 L. J. (M. C.) 59; overruling R. v. Lyons, C. & Mar. 217; cf. R. v. Hancock, 14 Cox, 119 (C. C. R.). Stolen goods were sent by the thief in a parcel by railway addressed to the prisoner. An officer of the railway company, from information he had received, examined the parcel at the railway station at the place of its destination, and stopped it. It was called for by the thief on the day of its arrival and refused to him. Next day a porter of the company, by the officer's direction, took it to a house which the thief had designated, and it was there received by the prisoner. It was held that the prisoner could not be convicted of receiving, as the goods had ceased to be stolen goods at the time when he received them. R. v. Schmidt, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 15; 35 L. J. (M. C.) 94; R. v. Villensky [1892] 2 Q. B. 597 (C. C. R.)

If the goods stolen have been altered between the time of the larceny and that of the receipt, so as to pass under a new denomination, the indictment should correspond with the fact. And where the principal was indicted for sheep-stealing, and the accessory charged with receiving "twenty pounds of mutton, parcel of the goods," etc., it was held good. R. v. Cowell, 2 East, P. C. 617, 781.

Recent possession.]—Recent possession of stolen property is evidence, either that the person in possession stole the property, or that he received it knowing it to be stolen, according to the circumstances of the case (see ante, p. 340). Where the prisoner was found in the recent possession of stolen property, of which he could give no satisfactory account, and it might reasonably be inferred from the circumstances that he was not the thief, it was held that there was evidence for the jury that he received it knowing it to have been stolen. R. v. Langmead, L. & C. 427; 9 Cox, 464. So also where the prisoner was indicted for larceny and also for receiving, and the evidence against her consisted of the fact of the stolen property having been found concealed on her person at about ten o'clock in the morning after the night on which it was stolen, and of her having made two contradictory statements as to how she became possessed of it, and the jury acquitted her on the count of larceny, but convicted her on the count for receiving, it was held that the evidence was sufficient to sustain the conviction. R. v. McMahon, 13 Cox, 275 (C. C. R. Ir.). See also R. v. Deer, L. & C. 240; 32 L. J. (M. C.) 33, ante, p. 460.

Indictment against a Receiver where the principal Offence is a Misdemeanor (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 95, ante, p. 547).

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—one silver tankard ("any chattel, money, valuable security, or other property whatsoever") of the goods and chattels of J. N., before then unlawfully, knowingly, and designedly obtained ("stolen, taken, obtained, converted, or disposed of") from the said J. N. by false pretences unlawfully did receive and have, he the said J. S., at the time when he so received the said silver tankard as aforesaid, then well knowing the same to have been unlawfully, knowingly, and designedly obtained [from the said J. N.] by false pretences; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. The indictment must allege the goods to have been obtained by false pretences, and known to have been so; it is not enough to allege them to have been "unlawfully obtained, taken, and carried away." R. v. Wilson, 2 Mood. C. C. 52. But in an indictment for receiving goods knowing them to have been obtained by false pretences it is not necessary to set out the false pretences. Taylor v. R. [1895], 1 Q. B. 25: 64 L. J. (M. C.). 11, overruling R. v. Mackay, 17 Cox, 713. The venue may be laid as in the last case: see ante, pp. 48, 49, 548.

Misdemeanor: penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and, if a male under sixteen years of age, with or without whipping (Id.)—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, ss. 95, 119; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to finding the offender and requiring him to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 431).

The statute extends to "chattels, money, valuable securities, and other property whatsoever," the stealing, etc., whereof is a misdemeanor; and the receiver may be indicted and convicted, whether the principal shall or shall not have been previously convicted, or shall or shall not be amenable to justice. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 95.

Evidence.

Prove the principal offence, and the receipt and guilty knowledge of the defendant, as in the last case.

Indictment against the Principal and Receiver jointly. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 91, ante, p. 546.)

After the conclusion of the indictment against the principal, continue it in the same paragraph thus:]—and the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present that J. S. afterwards, to wit, on the first day of June, in the year aforesaid, the goods and chattels aforesaid ("chattels, money, valuable security, or other goods whatsoever") before then feloniously stolen, taken, and carried away, feloniously did receive and have, he the said J. S. then well knowing the said goods and chattels to have been feloniously stolen, taken, and carried away; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

Receivers, where the stealing is felony at common law or by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, may be indicted as accessories after the fact, and are punishable with penal servitude for not more than fourteen and not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour; and, if a male under sixteen years of age, with or without whipping—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, ss. 91 (ante p. 546), 119 (ante, p. 432); 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, Id. s. 117 (ante, p. 431).

A precedent of indictment of a receiver as accessory after the fact, the principal having been convicted, was contained in the 21st ed. of this work at p. 504. It has been omitted in this edition as obsolete.

Evidence.

Prove the larceny as directed ante, p. 434 et seq., and prove the offence against the receiver, as directed under the last precedent but one.

RECEIVING STOLEN LETTERS, ETC.

Statute.

7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36 (Post Office Offences Act, 1837), s. 30]—Every person who shall receive any post letter or post-letter bag, or any chattel or money, or valuable security, the stealing, or taking, or embezzling, or secreting whereof shall amount to a felony under the "Post Office Acts" (see ante, p. 506, knowing the same to have been feloniously stolen, taken, embezzled, or secreted, and to have been sent or to have been intended to be sent by the post shall, in England and Ireland be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and may be indicted and convicted either as an accessory after the fact, or for a substantive felony, and in the latter case, whether the principal felon shall or shall not have been previously convicted, or shall or shall not be amenable to justice; and every such receiver, howsoever convicted, shall be liable to be transported beyond the seas for life. [As to terms of penal servitude or imprisonment, see 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36, ss. 41, 42 (ante, p. 505), and 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1 (ante, p. 235)].

Indictment against a Receiver of Stolen Letters, etc., as for a Substantive Felony.

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—one post letter ("any post letter or post-letter bag, or any chattel or money, or valuable security," etc.) the property of the postmaster-general, before then from and out of a certain post-letter bag feloniously stolen, taken, and carried away [as the case may be (see ante, pp. 502, 503)] ("stolen, taken, embezzled, or secreted") feloniously did receive and have, he the said J. S. then well knowing the same post letter to have been feloniously stolen, taken, and carried away, from and out of the said post-letter bag, as aforesaid, and to have been sent ("sent or intended to be sent") by the post; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. As to the venue, see ante, pp. 50, 504. The property may be laid in the post-master-general, and it is not necessary to allege or prove any value. See ante, p. 505.

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.—7 W. 4 & 1 c. 36, s. 30; 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, s. 2 (ante, p. 235); (54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2, (ante, p. 235).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove the felony as directed (ante, p. 511); then prove the receipt and guilty knowledge, as directed (ante, pp. 549, 552); and also prove that the defendant at the time he received the letter, etc., knew that it had been sent, or that it was intended to have been sent by the post. This may be shown by the post-mark on the letter, or by the contents of the letter, if brought to the defendant's knowledge, or by other circumstances from which it may be inferred. (See ante, pp. 300, 340).

(2) If any person so appointed to an office or service—

(a) Fraudulently applies or disposes of any chattel, money, or valuable security received by him (whilst employed in such office or service) for or on account of any local marine board, or for or on account of any other public board or department, for his own use, or any use or purpose other than that for which the same was paid, intrusted to, or received by him; or,

(b) Fraudulently withholds, retains, or keeps back the same or any part thereof contrary to any lawful directions or instructions which he is required to obey in relation to his office or service aforesaid, that person shall be guilty of embezzlement within the meaning of the said s. 68 of the Larceny Act, 1861 (ante, p. 556).

Indictment for embezzlement by clerk or servant (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 68, ante, p. 556).

Central Criminal Court, to wit: The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present, that J. S., on the first day of June, in the year of our Lord ——, then being clerk and servant ("clerk or servant, or being employed for the purpose or in the capacity of a clerk or servant") to J. N., did receive and take into his possession certain money ("chattel, money, or valuable security") to a large amount, to wit, to the amount of ten pounds, for and in the name and on the account of the said J. N., his master ("master or employer"), and the said money then fraudulently and feloniously did embezzle; and so the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do say, that the said J. S., then in manner and form aforesaid, the said money, the property of the said J. N., his said master, from the said J. N., his said master, feloniously did steal, take, and carry away; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. If the defendant has been guilty of other acts of embezzlement within the period of six months, the following count may be added:—And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present, that the said J. S. afterwards, and within six calendar months from and after the time of the committing of the said offence in the first count of this indictment charged and stated, to wit, on the —— day of ——, in the year aforesaid, then being clerk and servant to the said J. N., did receive and take into his possession certain other money to a large amount, to wit, to the amount of ten pounds, for and in the name and on the account of the said J. N., his said master, and the said last-mentioned money then, and within the said six calendar months, fraudulently and feloniously did embezzle; and so, etc., as in the first count to the end.

Joinder of counts:]—Any number of acts, not exceeding three, committed against the same master within six calendar months from the first to the last of such acts, may be charged in the indictment. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 71, ante, p. 557. And the proper course is to charge them in separate counts; and if this is not done the indictment is demurrable. Noake, 2 C. & K. 620. As to counts joined for embezzlement from different persons, see R. v. Woolley, 4 Cox, 255, and ante, p. 90.

Description of property:]—Under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 71 (ante, p. 557) in every case (except where the offence relates to a chattel, which must be described as in an indictment for larceny), it is sufficient to allege the embezzlement to be of money, without specifying any particular coin or valuable security; nor is it necessary that the exact amount or value of the thing embezzled should be stated; R. v. Carson, R. & R. 303; and in case the indictment alleges the embezzlement of money, such allegation, so far as regards the description of the property, is sustained by proof that the offender embezzled any amount, although the particular species of coin or valuable security of which such amount was composed shall not be proved; or by proof that he embezzled any piece of coin or any valuable security, or any portion of the value thereof, although such piece of coin or valuable security may have been delivered to him in order that some part of the value thereof should be returned to the party delivering the same, or to some other person, and such part shall have been returned accordingly. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 71 (ante, p. 557); 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 18 (ante, p. 54). These statutes overrule the former decisions requiring the indictment to state in all cases specifically same article embezzled. Tyers, R. & R. 402. As to where there is a general deficiency of moneys, see post, p. 573. But an indictment alleging the embezzlement of money is not sustained by evidence of the embezzlement of a cheque unless it be also proved that the prisoner cashed the cheque and so converted it into money. Lovell, 2 M. & Rob. 236 (post, p. 574), and ante, p. 84. It is usual and prudent to state that the defendant feloniously did embezzle, etc.; but it is not absolutely necessary, if the conclusion state that he feloniously stole. Beacall, 1 C. & P. 313, 454. *But as this may operate as a hardship upon the prisoner, the judge before whom he is to be tried will, upon application, order the prosecutor to furnish the prisoner with particulars of the charge. Punishment.]—Declared to be larceny, and punishable with penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or by imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years with or without hard labour; and, in the case of a male under sixteen years of age, with or without whipping—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 68; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 431).

Verdict.]—If it be proved that the defendant took the property in question in any such manner as to amount in law to larceny, he is not by reason thereof entitled to be acquitted, but the jury may return as their verdict that he is not guilty of embezzlement, but is guilty of simple larceny, or of larceny as a clerk, servant, etc., and thereupon he is liable to be punished as for such larceny. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 72 (ante, p. 557). *But it would seem that a general verdict of guilty cannot be sustained upon evidence of larceny only. Evidence.

"Clerk or servant."]—Prove that the defendant, at the time he received the chattel, money, or valuable security, was clerk or servant to J. N., or employed for the purpose or in the capacity of a clerk or servant as stated in the indictment, acting under and bound to obey the orders of his master or employer. See R. v. Negus, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 34; 42 L. J. (M. C.) 62; 12 Cox, 492. This may be proved by evidence that he acted as such. See R. v. Beacall, 1 C. & P. 312: R. v. Wellings, 1 C. & P. 454: R. v. Welch, 1 Den. 199; 2 C. & K. 296; 2 Cox, 85. If the contract of service was in writing, parol evidence of it is inadmissible, unless notice to produce has been given. R. v. Clapton, 3 Cox, 126: R. v. Dodson, 62 J. P. 729, Kennedy, J. Where the prisoner was charged with embezzlement, but his employer, who made the engagement with him, was not called to prove the terms thereof, but only his managing clerk, who knew him through repute alone, having been informed of them by his employer, it was held that there was no evidence to go to the jury that the prisoner was servant to the prosecutor. R. v. Taylor, 10 Cox, 544, per Russell Gurney, Recorder. Whether the defendant was clerk or servant is a question of fact for the jury. R. v. Negus, ubi supra: R. v. Chater, 9 Cox, 1; and see Steph. Dig. Cr. L. (6th ed.), 271, n. A female servant is within the meaning of the Act. R. v. Smith, R. & R. 267. So is an apprentice, though under age. R. v. Mellish, R. & R. 80. "In the capacity of clerk or servant" only applies when the prisoner is employed on temporary occasions, and does not usually fill the situation. R. v. Woolley, 4 Cox, 255, per Patteson, J.; sed quære "only." A son who lives with his father, and performs for him duties usually performed by a clerk, "employed for the purpose or in the capacity of a clerk or servant" within the statute, although he receives no salary, and although there is no contract binding him to go on doing those duties. R. v. Foulkes, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 150; 44 L. J. (M. C.) 65, 13 Cox, 63. A butty collier, paid so much for every ton of coal he raised, was allowed to sell coal for his employer. It was his duty to pay over the gross price received, and he was subsequently allowed a poundage. He converted to his own use money received for coal. Held that he was servant to the colliery owner. R. v. Thomas, 6 Cox, 403. As to the distinction between servants and mere bailees, see R. v. Gibbs, Dears. 445; 24 L. J. (M. C.) 62; 6 Cox, 455 (ante, p. 462). The statute was not confined to the clerks and servants of persons in trade, but extends to the clerks and servants of all persons whomsoever, if they be employed to receive money, etc.: and therefore a person employed as accountant and treasurer to the overseers of the poor, whose duty it is to receive and pay monies receivable and payable to them, is a clerk and servant within the statute. R. v. Squire, R. & R. 349; 2 Stark. (N. P.) 348. See R. v. Townsend, 1 Den. 167; 2 C. & K. 168; 2 Cox, 224: R. v. Adey, 1 Den. 578; 19 L. J. (M. C.) 149; 4 Cox, 210: but see R. v. Harris, 17 Cox, 656 (C. C. R.) post, p. 567. A collector of poor and other rates within the parish of St. Paul, Covent Garden, was held to be rightly described as servant to the committee of management of the affairs of that parish (appointed under 10 G. 4, c. 87), though he was elected by the vestrymen of the parish. R. v. Callahan, 8 C. & P. 154. See now 12 & 13 Vict. c. 103, s. 15, ante, p. 556. So, a clerk of a savings-bank was held to be properly described as clerk to the trustees, though elected by the managers. R. v. Jenson, 1 Mood. C. C. 434. An assistant overseer, elected by the parishioners in vestry under 59 G. 3, c. 12, s. 7, who fixed his duties and salary, was held to be rightly described as the servant of the inhabitants of the parish, in an indictment charging him with embezzling monies collected by him for the poor-rate. R. v. Carpenter, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 29; 35 L. J. (M. C.) 169; 10 Cox, 246. But he is not clerk or servant of the overseers; and see R. v. Sampson, 1 Cox, 355. The appointment is now made in rural parishes by the parish council or parish meeting, 56 & 57 Vict. c. 73, ss. 5 (1), 19 (5); but a rural assistant overseer may still be described as servant of the inhabitants. R. v Smallman [1897] 1 Q. B. 4; 66 L. J. (Q. B.) 82; 18 Cox, 451. The mode of appointment in many urban parishes has been altered under 56 & 57 Vict. c. 73, s. 33. Where, however, C. had been nominated by the inhabitants of a township as an assistant overseer, and the nomination did not specify as one of the duties he was to perform the duty of receiving money, it was held that he could not be convicted as a clerk or servant of the inhabitants of embezzling rates collected by him. R. v. Coley, 16 Cox, 226 (C. C. R.): but see p. 230, n. The learned reporter in a note on this case, after reviewing other cases on the same subject, concludes that the "decision appears open to question," and it is not reported in the Law Reports. In R. v. Truman, 2 Cox, 306, it was held by Maule, J. that a rate collector appointed by guardians of the poor under 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76, s. 46, was not their clerk or servant: cf. R. v. Townsend, ubi supra; but see section 97 of that Act. In R. v. Welch, 1 Den. 199: 2 C. & K. 296; 2 Cox, 85; a treasurer to guardians of the poor appointed under a local act was held to be their servant.

It is not necessary that the employment should be permanent; if it be only occasional it will be sufficient. Where the prosecutor, having agreed to let the defendant carry out parcels when he had nothing else to do, for which the prosecutor was to pay him what he pleased, gave him an order to receive two pounds, which he received and embezzled, he was held to be a servant within 39 G. 3, c. 85 (rep.). R. v. Spencer, R. & R. 299. So, where a servant usually employed to receive sums of one description at one place was employed in one instance to receive at a different place a sum of a different description, R. v. Smith, R. & R. 516, and see R. v. Beechey, Id. 319. And where a drover, who was employed to drive two cows to a purchaser, and receive the purchase-money, embezzled it, he was held to be a servant within the meaning of 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 47 (rep.). R. v. Hughes, 1 Mood. C. C. 370; but cf. R. v. Goodbody, 8 C. & P. 665. The duties of the secretary of a money club were held to be sufficiently cognate to that of the receipt of money for and on the account of the club, to make his employment to receive money in a particular instance an employment by him as clerk or servant within the same enactment, although he had recourse to an action in his own name to get in the money. R. v. Tongue, Bell, 289; 30 L. J. (M. C.) 49; 8 Cox, 386 (C. C. R.). But where the treasurer of a charitable institution, in his individual capacity, directed the defendant (who was the schoolmaster of the charity school, appointed by a committee of which the treasurer was a member, and whose sole duty was confined to the instruction of the children) in one single instance to receive a voluntary contribution, for which he was to have no remuneration; it was held that he was not a clerk or servant, or person employed for the purpose or in the capacity of a clerk or servant. R. v. Nettleton, 1 Mood. C. C. 259. A member of, and secretary to, a society, who fraudulently withheld money received from a member to be paid over to the trustees, was held to be guilty of embezzlement, and to be properly described as the clerk and servant of the trustees, and it was held that money was properly described as their property, although it ought, in the ordinary course, to have been received by the steward, and although the articles of the society were not enrolled, and the society was not conducted strictly according to the Act of Parliament. R. v. Hall, 1 Mood. C. C. 474: R. v. Miller, 2 Mood. C. C. 249: R. v. Woolley, 4 Cox, 255, Patteson, J.: R. v. Proud, L. & C. 97; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 71; 9 Cox, 22 (C. C. R.). Cases of this kind appear to be covered by the Larceny Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 10), s. 1 (post, p. 575).

Cases prior to the Larceny Act, 1868.]—But a mere unpaid treasurer of a friendly society, not appointed by the trustees of the society, is not a clerk or servant of the trustees in whom the monies of the society are vested, and cannot be indicted under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 68, for embezzling the monies of the society. R. v. Tyree, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 177; 38 L. J. (M. C.) 58; 11 Cox, 241. "I believe," says Bovill, C.J. (see L. R. 1 C. C. R. at p. 181), "there is no case to show that the treasurer of a friendly society can be indicted for embezzlement. The essence of the indictment in this case is this, that the prisoner was a clerk or servant of the trustees. The trustees have all monies of the society vested in them by statute, as well as by one of their rules, and the prisoner must account to them; but this does not make him their servant. The treasurer is an accountable officer, but not a servant." And the secretary, who was also a member of a friendly society, established under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63 (rep.), for which no trustees had been appointed, could not, previously to the Larceny Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 116, ante, p. 432), be convicted on an indictment for embezzling the society's monies, laying the property in A. B. (another member of the society) and others, and describing him as their servant, because the "others" would have comprised himself, and so the indictment would in fact have charged him with embezzling his own money as his own servant. R. v. Diprose, 11 Cox, 185 (C. C. R.): R. v. Taffs, 4 Cox, 169, Maule, J.: and cf. R. v. Blackburn, 11 Cox, 157. So where a committee, formed of the members of two friendly societies, for the purpose of conducting an excursion, appointed certain persons to sell the excursion tickets, and the money received from their sale was to be paid over to a specified person, and was to belong to the two societies: the prisoner, who was a member of the committee, was one of those appointed to sell tickets without any remuneration for his services; he sold some of the tickets, and fraudulently misappropriated the money received for the sale to his own use, it was held (previously to 31 & 32 Vict. c. 116) that he could not be convicted on an indictment charging him, as servant to the other members of the committee, with embezzling their monies. R. v. Bren, L. & C. 346; 33 L. J. (M. C.) 59; 9 Cox, 398 (C. C. R.).

Effect of Larceny Act, 1868.]—The Larceny Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 116, s. 1, ante, p. 432), was passed to meet the difficulties which arose in the above three cases. An association having for its object not the acquisition of gain but the spiritual and mental improvement of its members is not a "co-partnership" within the meaning of the term as used in 31 & 32 Vict. c. 116, s. 1. Consequently a member of such an association who has embezzled money belonging to it cannot be convicted on an indictment charging him with embezzling the monies of a "co-partnership," and containing no count describing the monies as monies of which he was a joint beneficial owner. R. v. Robson, 16 Q. B. D. 137; 55 L. J. (M. C.) 55; 15 Cox, 772. A member and secretary of a fête committee, the members of which had guaranteed the expenses of the fête, may be a "beneficial owner" of the entrance monies so as to make him criminally liable for their misappropriation within 31 & 32 Vict. c. 116, s. 1. R. v. Neat, 69 L. J. Q. B. 118; 12 Cox, 424; 16 T. L. R. 109.

Unlawful societies.]—A person cannot be convicted of embezzlement as clerk or servant to a society which, in consequence of administering an unlawful oath to its members, is an unlawful combination and confederacy within the 37 G. 3, c. 123, and 57 G. 3, c. 19: R. v. Hunt, 8 C. & P. 642. Registered friendly societies which comply with the Act of 1896 are not within these Acts (59 & 60 Vict. c. 25, s. 32). And a society which is of the nature of a friendly society, although not enrolled or certified under the Friendly Societies Act, some of the rules of which are in restraint of trade, and therefore void, is not an illegal society in the sense that it is disabled from prosecuting a servant for embezzling its funds under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 68. R. v. Stainer, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 230; 39 L. J. (M. C.) 54; 11 Cox, 483, and the members of such a society are clearly "beneficial owners" within 31 & 32 Vict. c. 116 (ante, p. 432). R. v. Tankard [1894] 1 Q. B. 548; 63 L. J. (M. C.) 61; 17 Cox, 719: and see R. v. Frankland, L. & C. 276; 32 L. J. (M. C.) 69; 9 Cox, 273 (C. C. R.): R. v. Webb [1893] 9 T. L. R. 199 (C. C. R.).

A prisoner, who had been employed sometimes as a regular labourer, sometimes as a roundsman for a day at a time, and had on several occasions been sent to a banker's to receive the amount of cheques, was sent to the banker's with a cheque for payment, for which he was to receive 6*d.*, he not being in the prosecutor's employment at the time; he received the money for the cheque and embezzled it; and being indicted for the embezzlement, Park, J. (after consulting Taunton, J.), held, that he was not a clerk or servant within the meaning of the Act of Parliament. R. v. Freeman, 5 C. & P. 534. The person employed to collect sacrament money from the communicants is not the servant of the minister, churchwardens, or poor. R. v. Burton, 1 Mood. C. C. 237.

Where several employers.]—If the clerk of several partners embezzle the private money of one of them, it is an embezzlement within the Act: for he is a servant of each. R. v. Leech, 3 Stark. (N. P.) 70. So where a clerk was appointed and paid by a joint committee of directors of several railway companies, and employed at a joint station of the companies. R. v. Bayley, Dears. & B. 121; 26 L. J. (M. C.) 4; 7 Cox, 179 (C. C. R.). So where a traveller is employed by several persons, and paid wages, to receive money, he is the individual servant of each. Id.: R. v. Carr, R. & R. 198. So where a clerk in the employ of a railway company at one of their stations was also employed separately by W. and G. to sell coals for them, it was held that he could be convicted of embezzlement as the servant of W. R. v. Batty, 2 Mood. C. C. 257. So, a coachman, employed by one proprietor of a coach to drive a certain part of the journey, and to receive money and hand it over to him, may be charged with embezzling the money of that proprietor, though the money, when received, would belong to him and his partners. R. v. White, 2 Mood. C. C. 91; 8 C. & P. 742.

A county court bailiff, who had fraudulently misappropriated the proceeds of levies made under county court process, could not formerly be indicted for embezzling the monies of the high bailiff his master. R. v. Glover, L. & C. 466; 33 L. J. (M. C.) 169; 9 Cox, 501 (C. C. R.). That case, however, was decided upon the county court Rules then in existence, setting forth the duties of the bailiff, but it has been held that by virtue of the county court Rules of 1875, a county court bailiff, misappropriating monies as did the bailiff in R. v. Glover, might be indicted for embezzling the monies of the high bailiff his master. R. v. Parsons, 16 Cox, 498, Cave, J. The county court Rules of 1903 are in the same terms on this as those of 1875. And under s. 33 of the County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), the bailiffs appear to be servants of the high bailiff. A distraining broker employed exclusively by the prosecutor, and paid by a weekly salary and by a commission, is a servant within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 68. R. v. Flanagan, 10 Cox, 561.

The mode by which the defendant is remunerated for his service is immaterial. Where a defendant, who was employed as a master of a barge, to carry out and sell coals, and was allowed a portion of the profits, after deducting the price of the coals at the colliery, for his labour, took a quantity of coals, sold them, received the price, and absconded with the money; it was held by a majority of the judges, that he was a servant within 39 G. 3, c. 85 (rep.). R. v. Hartley, R. & R. 139. So, where the defendant was employed as a traveller to take orders and collect money, was paid by a percentage upon the orders he got, paid his own expenses, did not live with the prosecutors, and was employed as traveller by other persons also; he was held to be a clerk to the prosecutors, within the meaning of the Act. R. v. Carr, R. & R. 198: R. v. Hoggins, Id. 145: see R. v. Tite, L. & C. 29; 30 L. J. (M. C.) 142; 8 Cox, 458 (C. C. R.) The prisoner agreed with the prosecutor, an earthenware manufacturer, to act as his traveller, to employ himself in going from town to town in England, Ireland, and Scotland, and soliciting orders for the goods manufactured by the prosecutor, and that he would not, without the prosecutor's consent, take or execute any order for selling any goods of the kind manufactured by the prosecutor, for or on account of himself or any other person, except the prosecutor. And it was further agreed that the prisoner should pay his own travelling expenses, that he should be paid a commission, and should render weekly accounts. The prosecutor afterwards gave the prisoner permission to take orders for two other manufacturers. It was held on these facts, that the prisoner was a clerk or servant of the prosecutor. R. v. Turner, 11 Cox, 551, Lush, J. And where the cashier of a firm had, besides his salary, a percentage on the profits made by the firm, but was not to be liable for its losses, and had no control over the management of the business, it was held that he might be indicted as a servant for embezzling the firm's monies. R. v. M'Donald, L. & C. 85; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 67; 9 Cox, 10 (C. C. R.). The defendant entered into an agreement with the prosecutor, whereby he undertook to take charge of the prosecutor's glebe land, his wife undertaking the dairy and poultry, at 15*s.* a week, till Michaelmas, 1850, and afterwards at a salary of 25*l.* a year, and a third of the clear annual profits, after all expenses of rent, rates, labour, and interest on capital, etc., were paid, on a fair valuation, made from Michaelmas to Michaelmas; three months' notice on either side to be given, at the expiration of which time a cottage, which was to be occupied by the defendant as bailiff, in addition to his salary, was to be vacated. It was held that this was not a contract of partnership, but an agreement for the hire of the defendant as a labourer: and that he was rightly convicted of embezzlement, in fraudulently denying the receipt of monies which he had received for and on account of the prosecutor, though such denial was after Michaelmas, the period agreed on for the valuation to be made and the profits ascertained. R. v. Wortley, 2 Den. 333; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 44; 5 Cox, 382 (C. C. R.). R. v. Hartley (ante, p. 565), R. v. M'Donald, and R. v. Wortley were decided before the Larceny Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 116, s. 1, ante, p. 432), which renders partners and joint beneficial owners liable to the same punishment as if they were not partners or joint beneficial owners in the event of their embezzling the joint property. Where the prosecutors, manure manufacturers, engaged the defendant, who kept a refreshment house at B., to get orders for the manure, on which orders they supplied it from their stores: the defendant was to collect the money, and pay it over to them, and send a weekly account, and was called agent for the B. district: "he was to go through the county and see the farmers, and get orders, and to be continually during the season among the farmers:" subsequently the prosecutors sent large quantities of manure to stores at B., which were under the defendant's control, who took them in his own name, and paid the rent for them, being repaid such rent by the prosecutors when their accounts were adjusted: and the defendant signed a proposal to a guarantee society to insure the prosecutors, which stated that his salary was 1*l.* a year, besides commission, which was estimated at 65*l.* a year; and the prosecutors deposed that at this time they had agreed to give the salary of 1*l.* a year; the defendant was held to be an agent, and not a servant within the statute. R. v. Walker, Dears. & B. 600; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 207; 8 Cox, 1 (C. C. R.). So, where the defendant was employed to obtain orders for the sale of iron manufactured by the prosecutors, and was to receive a commission on the orders he got; it being his duty to account to the prosecutors for all money he should receive, but it was not expressly found to be his duty to receive money; he was held not to be a clerk or servant, etc., within the statute. R. v. May, L. & C. 13; 30 L. J. (M. C.) 81; 8 Cox, 421 (C. C. R.). Where a man assigned his estate to trustees for the benefit of creditors, and was employed by the trustees to manage the business and collect the book debts, he was held not to be their clerk or servant. R. v. Barnes, 8 Cox, 129, Byles, J. As to persons employed by a debtor acting under such an arrangement with his creditors, see R. v. Dixon, 11 Cox, 178 (C. C. R.). A solicitor engaged as land agent to a limited company at 300*l.* a year to collect rents, etc., was held to be a clerk or servant of the company. R. v. Gibson, 8 Cox, 436.

The conclusion to be drawn from the cases appears to be that a commercial traveller, whether paid by commission or salary, who is under orders to go here and there, or is bound to devote the whole or at least some portion of his time to the service of his employer, is—but that a commission agent who is not under orders to go here and there, and who is not bound to devote any portion of his time to the service of his principal, but who may get or abstain from getting business for his principal as he chooses, is not—a clerk or servant, or person employed for the purpose or in the capacity of a clerk or servant within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 68. Thus, where the prisoner was employed by the prosecutor to solicit orders and collect monies, for which he was paid by commission, being at liberty to get orders when and where he pleased, but to be exclusively in the employ of the prosecutor, and to give the whole of his time to the prosecutor's service, he was held to be the servant of the prosecutor. R. v. Bailey, 12 Cox, 56 (C. C. R.). And the prisoner would still have been the servant of the prosecutor, if he was a traveller under orders to go here and there, even although he might have been at liberty to obtain orders for other persons beside the prosecutor, and so was not bound to devote all his time to the prosecutor's service. R. v. Tite, L. & C. 29; 30 L. J. (M. C.) 142; 8 Cox, 458 (C. C. R.). But where the prisoner was employed by the prosecutors as their agent for the sale of coals on commission, and to collect monies in connection with his orders, but he was at liberty to dispose of his time as he thought best, and to get or abstain from getting orders as he might choose, he was held not to be clerk or servant within the statute. R. v. Bowers, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 41; 35 L. J. (M. C.) 206; 10 Cox, 250. In delivering judgment in that case, Erle, C.J., observed, "The cases have established that a clerk or servant must be under the orders of his master, or employed to receive the monies of his employer, to be within the statute; but if a man be intrusted to get orders and to receive money, getting the orders when and where he chooses, and getting the money when and where he chooses, he is not a clerk or servant within the statute." Id. Where the prisoner was employed by one of the overseers of a parish to collect the poor-rate and keep the rate books, but was left complete liberty as to the method of collection and keeping the books, he was held not to be a clerk or servant. R. v. Harris, 17 Cox, 656 (C. C. R.). See also R. v. Mayle, 11 Cox, 150: R. v. Marshall, 11 Cox, 490 (C. C. R.). The test whether a person charged with embezzlement was the clerk or servant of his alleged master, is—Was he under the control of and bound to obey his alleged master? See the judgment of Blackburn, J., in R. v. Negus, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 34; 42 L. J. (M. C.) 62; 12 Cox, 492. And, therefore, where the prisoner was employed to solicit orders for the prosecutors, and was to be paid by a commission on the sums received through his means, and he was at liberty to apply for orders whenever he thought most convenient, but was not to employ himself for any others persons than the prosecutors, it was held that these facts alone did not show him to be a clerk or servant within the meaning of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 68. Id. The distinction between the case last cited, and R. v. Bailey (supra), is, that in R. v. Bailey the prisoner was under the prosecutor's control, having to devote his whole time to the service, whereas in R. v. Negus, although the prisoner was not to employ himself for any other persons than the prosecutors, he might go away to amuse himself whenever he liked. See the remarks of Bovill, C.J., and Blackburn, J., L. R. 2 C. C. R. 35. The prosecutors employed the prisoner, who carried on an independent business as an accountant and debt collector, to collect certain debts for them at a commission on the amount recovered, the time and mode of collecting the debts being in the prisoner's discretion, and it being his duty to pay over the amounts received by him to the prosecutors as soon as he had collected them. It was held that he was not employed in the capacity of clerk to the prosecutors. R. v. Hall, 13 Cox, 49.

A director and shareholder in a limited company, who is employed at a salary to superintend its business and collect monies due to the company, may be convicted of embezzlement of such monies as a servant of the company. R. v. Stuart [1894] 1 Q. B. 310; 63 L. J. (M. C.) 63; 17 Cox, 723 (C. C. R.). And see also 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 81 (post, p. 585).

"For on in the name or on account of his master."]—Prove that the defendant received the money, etc., stated in the indictment, for or in the name or on account of his master or employer.

Where the defendant misappropriates money received by him from his master himself, for the purpose of paying it to a third person, this is not embezzlement. R. v. Smith, R. & R. 267; R. v. Hawkins, 1 Den. 584; 4 Cox, 224 (C. C. R.), and see now 1 Edw. 7, c. 10 (post, p. 575). Nor is it embezzlement where the money misappropriated is constructively in the possession of the master, by the hands of any other clerk or servant. R. v. Murray, 1 Mood. C. C. 276; 5 C. & P. 145. See R. v. Hayward, 1 C. & K. 518: R. v. Watts, 2 Den. 14; 19 L. J. (M. C.) 192: R. v. Reed, Dears. 168, 257; 23 L. J. (M. C.) 25: 6 Cox, 284 (C. C. R.). But the fraudulent appropriation of money, which has never been in the master's own possession, and which the defendant has received from a fellow-servant to give to his master, is embezzlement. R. v. Masters, 1 Den. 332; 2 C. & K. 930; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 2; 3 Cox, 178 (C. C. R.).

A conductor of a tramway car was charged with embezzling 3*s.* It was proved that on a certain journey there were fifteen threepenny fares and twenty-five twopenny fares (altogether 7*s.* 11*d.*), and the prisoner was seen to give tickets to each fare and to receive money from each, but what sum did not appear. He made out a way-bill for the journey, debiting himself only with nine threepenny fares and sixteen twopenny fares (altogether 4*s.* 11*d.*) The mode of accounting was to deliver the way-bills for each journey to a clerk and to hand in all the money received during each day on the following morning. The prisoner's way-bills for the day showed the receipt by him of 3*l.* 1*s.* 9*d.*, but he paid in only 3*l.* 0*s.* 8*d.* It was held that there was sufficient evidence of the receipt of 7*s.* 11*d.*, the total amount of fares of the particular journey, and of the embezzlement of 3*s.*, part thereof. R. v. King, 12 Cox, 73 (C. C. R.). If the indictment allege that the defendant received chattels, the articles described, or some part of them, must be proved, as in larceny; but if the receipt of "money" be alleged, the prosecutor may give in evidence the receipt of any species of coin or valuable security, or a receipt of any amount, although the particular species of coin, or valuable security, of which such amount was composed, shall not be proved; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 71 (ante, p. 557); and in case the indictment alleges the embezzlement of money, such allegation, so far as regards the description of the property, will be sustained by proof that the defendant embezzled any amount, although the particular species of coin or valuable security, of which such amount was composed shall not be proved; or by proof that he embezzled any piece of coin or any valuable security or any portion of the value thereof, although such piece of coin or valuable security may have been delivered to him in order that some part of the value thereof should be returned to the party delivering the same, or to some other person, and such part has been returned accordingly. Id.; 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 18 (ante, p. 54). But an indictment alleging the embezzlement of money is not sustained by evidence of the embezzlement of a cheque, unless it be also proved that the prisoner cashed the cheque, and so converted it into money. R. v. Keena, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 113; 37 L. J. (M. C.) 43; 11 Cox, 123. Where the defendant's duty was to place every night in an iron safe, provided by his employers for that purpose, in an office where he conducted the business of his employers (though in his own house) the monies received by him on their account and not used during the day, it was held that by placing it there he determined his own exclusive possession of the money, and that, by afterwards taking some of it out of the safe, animo furandi, he was guilty of larceny. R. v. Wright, Dears. & B. 431; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 65 (C. C. R.). Where a son acted as clerk to his father, who himself held the office of clerk to a local board, and whose duty it was to receive monies on account of such board, and some of such monies were received by the son as his father's clerk in the ordinary course of business and appropriated by him to his own use, it was held that he was rightly convicted on an indictment charging him with embezzling such monies, and alleging them to be the monies of the father. R. v. Foulkes, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 150; 44 L. J. (M. C.) 65; 13 Cox, 63. Where the master gave a stranger some marked money, for the purpose of purchasing goods from the master's shopman, in order to try the shopman's fidelity, which he doubted; the stranger bought the goods, and the shopman embezzled the money: the judges held this to be a case within the Act. R. v. Whittingham, 2 Leach, 912: R. v. Headge, Id., 1033; R. & R. 160, confirmed in R. v. Gill, Dears. 289; 23 L. J. (M. C.) 50; 6 Cox, 295 (C. C. R.). Where the defendant's duty was to sell his master's goods, entering the sales in a book, and settling accounts with his master weekly, and upon such a sale the defendant fraudulently omitted to make an entry of it in the book, and appropriated the money which he received from the buyer, this was held to be embezzlement and not larceny. R. v. Betts, Bell, 90; 28 L. J. (M. C.) 69; 8 Cox, 140 (C. C. R.). A defendant whose business it was to receive orders, to take the materials from his master's shop, work them up, deliver the goods, receive the price for them, and pay it over to his master, who, at the end of the week, paid the defendant a proportion of the price for his work, received an order for certain goods, took his master's materials, worked them up on his premises, delivered them, and received the price, but concealed the transaction, and embezzled the money; upon a conviction for embezzlement, it was doubted whether this was not a larceny of the materials, rather than a case within the statute; the judges held the conviction right. R. v. Hoggins, R. & R. 145. But where it appeared that the defendant was employed as a town traveller and collector, to receive orders from customers, and enter them in the books and receive the money for the goods supplied thereon, but had no authority to take or direct the delivery of the goods from his master's shop, and a customer having ordered two articles of the defendant, he entered one of them only in the order-book, for which an invoice was made out by the prosecutor to the customer; but the defendant entered the price of the other at the bottom of the invoice, and, having caused both to be delivered to the customer, received the price of both, and accounted to the prosecutor only for the former: this was held not to be embezzlement but larceny. R. v. Wilson, 9 C. & P. 27. The prosecutor had contracted with a railway company to find and provide them with necessary horses and carmen for the purpose of conveying and delivering to the company's customers the coals of the company, in their own waggons; and that he or his carmen should daily account for and deliver to the company's coal manager all monies received in payments for coals so delivered; the delivery-notes, as well as receipted invoice, for the coals, being handed to the carman, and the former taken to the prosecutor's office, the latter left with the customers on payment. The defendant, one of the prosecutor's carmen, delivered coals of the company to a customer, and brought back the delivery-order to the prosecutor's office to be entered; he received 5*l.* 10*s.* from the customer for the coals, leaving with him the receipted invoice, and embezzled the money. It was held that there was such a privity as to make the defendant the agent of the company in receiving the money, and that it was not received for or on the account of the prosecutor, his master, but for and on account of the company. R. v. Beaumont, Dears. 270; 23 L. J. (M. C.) 54; 6 Cox, 269 (C. C. R.). H., the defendant's master, was the agent of a railway company for delivering goods, and employed his own servants, of whom the defendant was one, and used his own drays and horses, and was answerable to the company for monies collected by his servants for carriage. It was the defendant's duty to go out with a dray, to take with him goods and a delivery-book handed to him by a clerk of the company, and to receive the amount of carriage therein specified as due to the company, and then to account for the sums so received with the company's clerk. The sums charged as being embezzled were sums received by the defendant for carriage, and entered in the delivery-book, and such sums were paid to the defendant and received by him as due to the company, and he gave receipts for the same in the name of the company. It was held that the defendant was properly convicted on an indictment charging that he received the money for and in the name and on the account of H., his master; for that, although he received it in the name of the company, he received it for and on account of his master. R. v. Thorpe, Dears. & B. 562; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 64; 8 Cox, 29 (C. C. R.). The defendant was the miller of a mill in a county gaol, being paid a weekly salary as such out of the county rate, and it was his duty to direct persons who brought grain to be ground at the mill to obtain at the porter's lodge a ticket specifying the quantity of grain brought, and his business then was to receive the grain with the ticket, to grind it, to receive the money for the grinding, and to account for it to the governor of the gaol, who in his turn accounted to the county treasurer. The defendant received and ground grain brought without a ticket, and, without directing the persons who brought it to obtain one, received the money for grinding it, and did not account for it, but applied it to his own use. It was held that upon these facts he could not be convicted of embezzlement, as the conclusion to be drawn from them was that he had made an improper use of the mill by grinding the corn for his own benefit, and so he did not receive the money for or on behalf of his masters. R. v. Harris, Dears. 344; 23 L. J. (M. C.) 110; 6 Cox, 363 (C. C. R.): and see R. v. Cullum (post, p. 571). It is not necessary, however, that the person paying the money to the servant should have paid it to him on account of his master; it is sufficient if the servant received it on account of his master. The prisoner was the clerk of an insurance company, and head manager at their chief office at L. In course of business he received several cheques payable to his order from the managers of branch offices, and it was his duty to indorse these cheques and hand them over to the company's cashier. Instead of doing so, he indorsed the cheques and obtained money for them from friends of his own, who paid the cheques into their own banks. The money thus obtained the prisoner appropriated to his own use, and, having been convicted of embezzling it, it was held that the proceeds of the cheques, though received by the prisoner, not from the bankers, but from third persons who knew nothing of the prisoner's masters in the transactions, were received by him on account of the company, and that he was rightly convicted. R. v. Gale, 2 Q. B. D. 141; 46 L. J. (M. C.) 134; 13 Cox, 340 (C. C. R.): cf. R. v. Wheeler, 14 W. R. 848 (C. C. R. Ir.).

As it must have appeared, in order to satisfy 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 47

(rep.), that the money, etc., embezzled was never, even constructively, in the possession of the master, since, if it was, the offence would amount to larceny at common law, nice and difficult questions frequently arose on this point. See R. v. Murray (ante, p. 568): R. v. Watts, 2 Den. 15; 19 L. J. (M. C.) 192, and other cases. But this distinction is rendered practically immaterial by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 72 (ante, p. 557), under which, upon an indictment for embezzlement, the defendant is not entitled to be acquitted if the offence turn out to be larceny, be convicted and punished as for larceny, and vice versâ. Where, however, the prisoner is indicted for larceny a general verdict of guilty cannot be sustained upon evidence of embezzlement only. R. v. Gorbutt, Dears. & B. 166; 26 L. J. (M. C.) 47; 7 Cox, 221 (C. C. R.). Though it is not necessary under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 68, that the money, etc., alleged to have been embezzled should have been received by the servant by virtue of his employment (see note ante, p. 557), it is necessary that it should when received by the servant be the master's property, and therefore a servant cannot be guilty of embezzling money which he has earned by an unauthorized and wrongful use of his master's implements of trade from a person who contracted with the servant only and knew nothing of the master in the transaction. R. v. Cullum, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 28; 42 L. J. (M. C.) 64; 12 Cox, 469. Therefore where a servant whose duty it was to take a barge belonging to his master with cargo from A. to B., and receive back such return cargo, and from such persons as his master should direct, and such only, contrary to the express orders of his master, which were to return empty from B. to C., part of the return voyage to A., took nevertheless a return cargo from B. to C., and received the freight from the owner of the cargo (who knew only the prisoner in the transaction), and did not account to his master for the freight, and denied having carried such return cargo; it was held, that an indictment against the servant for embezzling the money received by him as freight for such return cargo could not be sustained. Id. And where a gamekeeper, not authorized to kill or take rabbits for his own use, took and killed some wild rabbits upon his master's land, and dishonestly converted them to his own use by selling them,—the taking, killing, removing, and selling, being parts of one continuous action; it was held that a conviction of the gamekeeper for embezzling the rabbits could not be sustained, apparently on the ground that the rabbits could not be said to have been received or taken into possession by him for or in the name or on the account of his master. R. v. Read, 3 Q. B. D. 131; 47 L. J. (M. C.) 50; 14 Cox, 17 (C. C. R.).

And, lastly, prove that the defendant embezzled the money, etc., so received, or some part of it. An unstamped receipt for the money given by the defendant is admissible as evidence against him (see ante, p. 383). As to the constructive receipt of the money, see R. v. Baxter, 5 Cox, 302. The usual presumptive evidence of this fact is, that the defendant never accounted with his master for the money, etc., so received by him, or that he denied his having received it. Where the defendant charged himself in his master's book with money received by him, it was held that an embezzlement was not proved merely by his not paying it over to the master. R. v. Hodgson, 3 C. & P. 422. On the other hand, the defendant is not exempted from the operation of the statute merely by entering the receipt of the money correctly in his master's book. R. v. Lister, Dears. & B. 118; 26 L. J. (M. C.) 26; 7 Cox, 203 (C. C. R.): R. v. Guelder, Bell, 284; 30 L. J. (M. C.) 34; 8 Cox, 372 (C. C. R.). If, instead of denying the appropriation of the money, the party in rendering his account admits it, alleging a right in himself, however unfounded, or setting up an excuse, however frivolous, he ought not to be convicted of embezzlement;

R. v. Norman, C. & Mar. 501, Cresswell, J.; even though he afterwards abscond, and do not pay over the money. R. v. Creed, 1 C. & K. 63. But where it is the servant's duty to account for and pay over the monies received by him at stated times, his not doing so wilfully is an embezzlement, although he do not actually deny the receipt of them. R. v. Jackson, 1 C. & K. 384, Coleridge, J. R. v. Jones, 7 C. & P. 833, which seems to the contrary, must be taken to be overruled. And even where no precise time can be fixed at which it was his duty to pay them over, his not accounting for them, if found by the jury to have been done fraudulently, is equally an embezzlement. R. v. Welch, 1 Den. 199; 2 C. & K. 296; 2 Cox, 85 (C. C. R.). See R. v. Squire, (ante, p. 562): R. v. Wortley (ante, p. 566), and see as to where there is a general deficiency, post, p. 573.

Venue.]—The defendant, who was employed as a travelling salesman by a tradesman living at Nottingham, received two sums for his master in the county of Derby, appropriated them to his own use, and neglected to return and account to his master for the money as it was his duty to do. Two months afterwards he was met by his master in Nottingham; and being asked by him respecting the two sums of money, said he was very sorry for what he had done, that he had spent the money. It was held that there was evidence to go to the jury of an embezzlement in Nottingham, and therefore that the defendant was rightly tried there. R. v. Murdock, 2 Den. 298; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 22; 5 Cox, 360 (C. C. R.). It was the duty of the prisoner, a commercial traveller, to remit daily to his employers, who resided in London, the money which he collected. The prisoner on the 1st and 2nd March, 1878, collected at Newark two sums of money, which he never remitted and did not account for till the first week in April, when one of his employers went to Grantham, where the prisoner resided, saw him, and taxed him with receiving monies and not accounting for them. The prisoner then and there handed to his employer a list of monies he had collected and not accounted for, including the above two sums. There was no evidence that the prisoner returned from Newark (which is within fifteen miles of Grantham) to Grantham on either of the days on which he received the money, nor indeed that he was ever at Grantham between the time when he received the sums of money and the time when he met his employer there. It was held upon these facts that there was no evidence of embezzlement at Grantham, and therefore that the defendant could not be tried at the quarter sessions for that borough. R. v. Treadgold, 48 L. J. (M. C.) 102; 14 Cox, 220 (C. C. R.). A clerk whose duty it was to remit at once to his employers in Middlesex all monies collected by him, collected at York, on the 18th April, a sum of money, but never remitted it. On the 21st April, he wrote and posted at Doncaster to his employers in Middlesex a letter which was intended to make them believe that he had not then collected the money in question. The letter was received by the employers in Middlesex. It was held that the receipt of such letter in Middlesex was evidence of embezzlement in that county, and that the prisoner was rightly tried there. R. v. Rogers, 3 Q. B. D. 28; 47 L. J. (M. C.) 11; 14 Cox, 22 (C. C. R.). Semble, also that on these facts there was evidence of embezzlement in Yorkshire, and that the prisoner might have been tried there. Id. Where the defendant received payment of a debt from one of his master's customers in Bank of England notes, but accounted with his master for 6*l.* less than he received, and afterwards delivered some Bank of England notes to his master upon another account (it being argued for the defendant that these must be presumed to be the same bank-notes which were received from the customer, and being actually delivered to the master could not be said to be embezzled), Bayley, J., ruled, that these notes, to the amount of 6*l.*, must be deemed to have been embezzled within the meaning of the Act, the moment the defendant accounted for 6*l.* less than he received, and that his afterwards paying these identical notes to his master in another account made no difference: which decision was afterwards confirmed by the judges. R. v. Hall, 3 Stark. (N. P.) 67; R. & R. 463. The difficulty in that case, which arose from the necessity of proving the embezzlement of some specific note or coin, has been removed by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 71 (ante, p. 557).

Where general deficiency of monies.]—In R. v. Grove, 1 Mood. C. C. 447; 7 C. & P. 635, a majority of the judges (eight against seven) are reported to have held that, since 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 48 (rep., but re-enacted in substance in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 71), an indictment for embezzlement might be supported by proof of a general deficiency of monies that ought to be forthcoming, without showing any particular sum received and not accounted for. See also R. v. Lambert, 2 Cox, 309, Erle, J.: R. v. Moah, Dears. 626; 25 L. J. (M. C.) 66; 7 Cox, 60 (C. C. R.): R. v. King, 12 Cox, 73 (C. C. R.), ante, p. 568. But in R. v. Lloyd Jones, 8 C. & P. 288, where upon an indictment for embezzlement, it was opened that the prisoner had been shopman to the prosecutrix, and it would be proved that there was a deficiency in the prisoner's accounts, but that there was no proof of the embezzlement of any particular sum, Alderson, B., said, "Whatever difference of opinion there might be in R. v. Grove (ubi supra), that proceeded more upon the particular facts of that case than upon the law. It is not sufficient to prove at the trial a general deficiency in account. Some specific sum must be proved to be embezzled, in like manner as in larceny some particular article must be proved to have been stolen." See also R. v. Chapman, 1 C. & K. 119; 1 Cox, 47, Williams, J.: R. v. Wolstenholme, 11 Cox, 313, Brett, J. Where embezzlement of a cheque was charged and the cheque could not be found the counterfoil was admitted in evidence. R. v. Wilkinson, 10 Cox, 537.

Where the indictment contains only one count, charging the receipt of a gross sum on a particular day, and it appears in evidence that the money was received in different sums on different days, the prosecutor will be put to his election and must confine himself to one sum and one day. R. v. Williams, 6 C. & P. 626. If, however, in that case, it had appeared that although the gross amount had been received in different sums on different days, the prisoner's duty was, on a certain day, to render an account and pay over the gross amount received, and that the prisoner had on that day failed to account or to pay over the gross amount, but embezzled the money, the prisoner might have been indicted in only one count for embezzling the gross amount, and evidence of the different sums received on different days might have been admitted to show how such gross amount was made up. R. v. Balls, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 328; 40 L. J. (M. C.) 148; 12 Cox, 96 (C. C. R.). And in R. v. Wright, Dears. & B. 431 (ante, p. 569), which was an indictment for larceny by a bank clerk, where the evidence showed a deficiency of over 3000*l.*, and the prisoner admitted that he had taken over 3000*l.*, it was held that the jury need not find that a specific sum was taken on any specific day, but might find that he stole some money. In R. v. Balls, ubi supra, the prisoner was a member of a co-partnership, and was indicted under 31 & 32 Vict. c. 116, s. 1 (ante, p. 432), for embezzling the co-partnership monies. It was his duty to receive money for the co-partnership, and once a week to render an account and pay over the gross amount received during the previous week. During each of three several weeks, within six months, the prisoner received various small sums, and failed to account for them at the end of the week, or to pay over the gross amount, but embezzled the money. It was held that he might be properly charged with embezzling the weekly aggregates; that three acts of embezzlement of such weekly aggregates within six months might be charged and proved under one indictment; and that evidence of the small sums received during each week was admissible to show how these aggregates were made up. The difficulties arising in the above cases with regard to the embezzlement of gross amounts can now often be surmounted by indicting the defendant under 38 & 39 Vict. c. 24 (The Falsification of Accounts Act, 1875): post, p. 591.

Where an indictment for embezzlement charged three offences, and it appeared that the prisoner had made correct entries of a number of payments made by him in one week, but had cast up the whole 2*l.* less than the correct amount; and in another week there was a precisely similar error of the same amount, and the same in a third week, and these were the cases charged in the indictment: it was held that evidence of a series of similar errors, both before and after those which formed the subject of the indictment was admissible in order to anticipate the defence that the three cases contained in the indictment were merely accidental errors. R. v. Richardson, 2 F. & F. 343; 8 Cox, 448. See R. v. Proud, L. & C. 97; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 71; 9 Cox, 22 (C. C. R.), R. v. Stephens, 16 Cox, 387 (C. C. R.); and for the general rules as to such evidence, ante, pp. 308–312. While the receipt of the money must have taken place during the service—R. v. Hoare, 1 F. & F. 647—it seems not to be necessary to allege or prove the embezzling to have taken place while the prisoner continued clerk or servant to the prosecutor. R. v. Lovell, 2 M. & Rob. 236, Coleridge, J.: see 2 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 373.

An indictment for embezzling money will not be sustained by evidence of embezzling goods. R. v. Clarke, C. C. R., 28*th Jan.* 1905.

Shall, contrary to or without such authority, for his own use or benefit, or the use or benefit of any person other than the person by whom he was so intrusted, and in violation of good faith, accept any advance of any money or valuable security on the faith of any contract or agreement to consign, deposit, transfer, or deliver any such goods or document of title:

Sect. 87—Offences not triable at quarter sessions.]—No misdemeanor against any of the last twelve preceding sections of this Act shall be prosecuted or tried at any court of general or quarter sessions of the peace. Indictment for fraudulent conversion of Property intrusted to him for safe Custody. (1 Edw. 7, c. 10, s. 1 (a) ante, p. 575.)

Central Criminal Court, to wit: The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present that A. B. on the —— day of ——, A.D. ——, was intrusted with certain property (see definition of property, ante, p. 427), to wit, with the sum of 5*l.* in money [of and belonging to C. D.] in order that he might retain the said money in safe custody [retain in safe custody, or apply, pay or deliver, for any purpose, or to any person, the property, or any part thereof, or any proceeds thereof], and the jurors aforesaid upon their oath aforesaid do further present that the said A. B. afterwards, to wit, on the —— day of ——, A.D. 1902, in the parish of ——, in the county of London, and within the jurisdiction of the said court, unlawfully and fraudulently did convert the said property [the property, or any part thereof, or any proceeds thereof] to his own use and benefit [his own use or benefit or the use or benefit of any other person]: against the form (as ante, p. 465).

Misdemeanor.—Penal servitude for not more than seven or less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour not exceeding two years, 1 Edw. 7, c. 10, s. 1 (1) (ante, p. 575); 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to fining the offender and requiring him to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 431).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 1 Edw. 7, c. 10, s. 2 (2) (ante, p. 576); 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 87 (ante, p. 579).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant was intrusted, either solely or jointly with any other person with the property, as stated in the indictment, and that it was intrusted to him for safe custody (a), or for the purpose stated—and, lastly, that he converted it to his own use and benefit, or to the use and benefit of some other person.

H. received sums of money from S. and others who entered his employment as security for their honesty whilst in his employment, and promised to repay the said sums to the depositors on their leaving his employment. He did not do so, but used the money for his own purposes. On an indictment against H. under s. 1 (a) of 1 Edw. 7, c. 10, alleging that H. had been intrusted by S. with certain property, to wit, ten pounds in money of and belonging to S., in order that (in one set of counts) he, H., might retain the same in safe custody and thereafter pay it back to S., and (in another set of counts) in order that he, H., might thereafter pay ten pounds the proceeds thereof back to S. in three months' time or on S. leaving the service of H., it was held by Bosanquet, Common Serjeant, after consulting Phillimore, J., that there was no evidence against H. of the offence so charged against him. R. v. Hotine, 68 J. P. Rep., 143.

(a) "Safe custody."]—Trust money had been invested on mortgage, which was paid off, and the money left in the hands of the defendant, the solicitor to the trust, who wrote to the person beneficially interested:—"R.'s money was paid on the 6th of April. Let me know how you would like to have it invested, whether in the funds or on mortgage." The answer, dated 9th of April, was:—"Will consult G. at once about the money, and let you know. I do not wish it placed in the funds. I am very glad it is paid over, and hope it will be well secured this time." At or very near the date of these letters it was clear that the defendant had fraudulently appropriated the money to his own use. Held, that this was a fraudulent conversion to his own use of property intrusted to the defendant for safe custody within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 76 (rep.). R. v. Fullagar, 14 Cox, 370 (C. C. R.); 41 L. T. (N. S.) 448. In the course of the argument in that case, Hawkins, J., said:—"If you say that the letters show that the defendant was intrusted with the money to invest on mortgage, then they amount to a direction in writing within section 75; and if they do not, then the money was intrusted to the defendant for safe custody within section 76 until the prosecutrix gave further directions how it was to be dealt with." But where a solicitor was intrusted by a client with money to invest on mortgage on the client's behalf, and he, instead of doing so, fraudulently appropriated the money to his own use, it was held that he was not intrusted with such money "for safe custody" within section 76. R. v. Newman, 8 Q. B. D. 706 (C. C. R.); 51 L. J. (M. C.) 87. The decision in this case turned upon the absence of any evidence that the money was to be treated as intrusted for safe custody until opportunity for investment should arise, and Stephen, J., expressly approved of the direction of Bowen, J., to the jury in the court below, viz., that "if they were satisfied that money was intrusted to the prisoner to be invested on mortgage, and to be kept safely in his own hands until such mortgage was effected by him, and if instead of investing the money so intrusted to him he converted it fraudulently to his own use, they should find the prisoner guilty." See also the observations of Denman and Stephen, JJ., upon R. v. Cooper (ante, p. 576).

1 Edw. 7, c. 10, s. 1 does not affect trustees under an express trust created by deed or will or mortgagees, in respect to any act done by them in relation to the property comprised in or affected by the trust or mortgagee (see ante, p. 576). As to the liability of such trustees, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 80 (post, p. 583).

No person shall be convicted of an offence against that statute by any evidence in respect of any act done by him, if at any time previously to his being charged with the offence he shall have first disclosed such act on oath, in consequence of any compulsory process of any court of law or equity, in any action, suit, or proceeding which shall have been bonâ fide instituted by any party aggrieved, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 85 (ante, p. 578). See R. v. Strahan, 7 Cox, 85; and the cases discussed, ante, pp. 328, 497. The same protection was afforded to him by the same section if he should have first disclosed such act in any compulsory examination or deposition before any court upon the hearing of any matter in bankruptcy or insolvency. That part of s. 85 is, however, now repealed by 53 & 54 Vict. c. 71, s. 27 (ante, p. 579), but by sub-s. 2 of that section a statement or admission made by any person in any compulsory examination or deposition before any court on the hearing of any matter in bankrupty is not admissible as evidence against that person in any proceeding in respect of any of the misdemeanors referred to in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 85.

Indictment for fraudulent conversion of Property received on account of another. (1 Edw. 7, c. 10, s. 1 (b), ante, p. 575.)

Commencement as ante, p. 579]—That J. S. on the —— day of ——, A.D. ——, received certain property, to wit, the sum of 100*l.* in money of and belonging to J. N., for and on the account of one M. M., and that the said J. S. afterwards, to wit, on the —— day of —— A.D. 1902 [in the parish, etc.], so having received the said property as aforesaid, unlawfully and fraudulently did convert the said property ("the property or any part thereof or any proceeds thereof") to his own use and benefit ("to his own use or benefit or the use or benefit of any other person"): against the form (as ante, p. 465).

Misdemeanor: For punishment and court of trial, see last precedent.

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant received the property for or on account of another person, as stated in the indictment, and that he converted to his own use, etc., all or part of the property or some of the proceeds thereof. As to what constitutes receipt for or on account of another see ante, p. 568.

Indictment against a Factor for unlawfully pledging Goods of the Principal. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 78, ante, p. 577.)

Commencement as ante, p. 579.]—J. N. did intrust to J. S., the said J. N. then being a factor and agent of him the said J. N., ten bales of cotton ("intrusted with the possession of goods or of any document of title to goods"); and that the said J. S., factor and agent as aforesaid, on the day and year aforesaid, contrary to and without the authority of the said J. N., for his own use and benefit, and in violation of good faith, unlawfully did make a deposit of the said ten bales of cotton with one J. P., as and by way of a pledge, lien and security for a certain sum of money, to wit, the sum of fifty pounds, then advanced by the said J. P. to him the said J. S.; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

Misdemeanor: penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years. —24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 78; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235); 1 Edw. 7, c. 10, ss. 1 (1), 2 (ante, pp. 575, 576). As to fining the offender and requiring him to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 431).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. Id. s. 87 (ante, p. 479).

Evidence.

Prove that the goods, etc., described in the indictment were intrusted by J. N. to the defendant as his agent: that the defendant deposited the goods with J. P. as a security for an advance of money, etc.; and, lastly, circumstances must be shown from which the jury may infer that the defendant pledged the goods in violation of good faith, and contrary to and without the authority of the prosecutor. A factor who has a lien upon goods may pledge them to the extent of his lien. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 78, proviso (ante, p. 577). A statement or admission by the defendant in any compulsory examination or deposition before any court on the hearing of any matter in bankruptcy is not admissible in evidence against him. 53 & 54 Vict. c. 71, s. 27, sub-s. 2 (ante, p. 579). And if he have, previously to the charge, first disclosed the act on oath under compulsory process of any court of law or equity, in any action, etc., bonâ fide instituted by any party grieved, he cannot be convicted by any evidence whatever. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 85. (See ante, p. 578.)

The conviction will not be evidence against the defendant in any action at law or suit in equity against him. Id. s. 86. As to what is an intrusting within the statute, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 79 (ante, p. 578), and as to what are to be considered as documents of title to goods, see s. 1 (ante, p. 426). A person intrusted with goods, or the documents of title thereto, as agent, was held, after his authority as agent had been revoked, not to be "an agent intrusted" within the meaning of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39, s. 1 (rep.), so as to protect a pledge by him to an innocent pledgee. Fuentes v. Montes, L. R. 4 C. P. 93; 38 L. J. C. P. 95 (Ex. Ch.). The Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 2, sub-s. 2, and the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 25, appear to protect the innocent pledgee in such a state of circumstances, but the question perhaps still remains whether a person whose authority has been so revoked is "a factor or agent intrusted" within the meaning of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 78. (See ante, p. 577.)

Agent.]—The words "or other agent" occurring after the words "banker, merchant, broker, attorney" in the repealed s. 75 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 were held to apply only to persons whose occupation is ejusdem generis with that of a "banker, etc." R. v. Portugal, 16 Q. B. D. 487; followed in R. v. Kane [1901] 1 K. B. 472; 19 Cox, 658 (C. C. R.); and semble the meaning of "agent" in s. 78 is similarly limited to that "agent" ejusdem generis with "factor," though the word "other" does not occur in s. 78. See R. v. Portugal, ubi supra.

BY TRUSTEES.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 (Larceny Act, 1861), s. 1—Definition of "Trustee."]—The term "trustee" shall mean a trustee on some express trust created by some deed, will, or instrument in writing, and shall include the heir, or personal representative, of any such trustee, and any other person upon or to whom the duty of such trust shall have devolved or come, and also an executor and administrator, and an official manager, assignee, liquidator, or other like officer acting under any present or future Act relating to joint stock companies, bankruptcy or insolvency.

Provided, that no proceeding or prosecution for any offence included in this section shall be commenced without the sanction of [his] Majesty's attorney-general, or in case that office be vacant, of [his] Majesty's solicitor-general:

Provided also, that where any civil proceeding shall have been taken against any person to whom the provisions of this section may apply, no person who shall have taken such civil proceeding shall commence any prosecution under this section without the sanction of the court or judge before whom such civil proceeding shall have been had or shall be pending. Misdemeanor: penal servitude for not more than seven and not less than three years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 80; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to fining the offender and requiring him to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour, Id. s, 117 (ante, p. 431). See 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, ss. 85, 86, ante, pp. 478, 479).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. Id. s. 87 (ante, p. 479).

The prosecution must be commenced with the sanction of a judge or of the attorney-general. Id. s. 80 (supra). It is not necessary to aver the obtaining of such sanction.

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant was a trustee within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 1 (ante, p. 583), as stated in the indictment, by producing and proving the deed, will, or other instrument in writing whereby the trust (which must be an express and not an implied trust) was created, and also, if the defendant be the heir or personal representative of the original trustee, by proving his heirship, or the will or letters of administration, as the case may be, of the original trustee (see ante, pp. 364, 380). Also prove the written fiat of the attorney-general authorizing the prosecution by calling his clerk or otherwise. But see R. v. Dexter, 19 Cox, 360 (ante, p. 8). A trustee of a savings bank is not a trustee of property "for a public or charitable purpose" within s. 80, supra. He is, however, a trustee for the benefit "of some other persons" within that section. R. v. Fletcher, L. & C. 180; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 206; 9 Cox, 189 (C. C. R.): cf. R. v. Gibbs, Dears. 445; 24 L. J. (M. C.) 62; 6 Cox, 455 (C. C. R.). The rules of a savings bank are an "instrument in writing" within s. 1 (ante, p. 583) Id. The defendant applied to his bankers for an advance as against goods consigned to him and then at sea. The advance was made on his signing a letter of hypothecation by which he undertook to hold the goods in trust for the bankers, and to hand over to them the proceeds to the amount of the advance. It was held that this letter contained a declaration of an express trust such as made the giver of it a trustee for the bankers within the meaning of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 80. R. v. Townshend, 15 Cox, 466, Day, J. It was also held that a letter of hypothecation is a bill of sale within the definition of the Bill of Sale Acts as being a declaration of trust without transfer of possession, and is required to comply with the provisions of those Acts as to form and registration; but that in this case, the goods being at sea at the time of the execution of the letter of hypothecation, it came within the exception as to "goods at sea" contained in the Bill of Sale Acts, and so was not affected by these provisions. Id. If the defendant is charged as a trustee in bankruptcy, the proceedings must be produced and proved (see ante, p. 367), in order to show his character as assignee. If as liquidator under the Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), it must be shown that the company was one that had been duly registered by producing the certificate of registration; and if the appointment as liquidator was one by the court of Chancery, the order of the court appointing the defendant must be proved; if by the company in general meeting, the appointment by such general meeting must be proved. Then prove that the defendant appropriated the property of which he was such trustee, or some part thereof, to his own use, or disposed of or destroyed it, or some part of it, as the case may be, and that he did so with intent to defraud, which intent must in general be implied from the circumstances of the case (see ante, pp. 303, 308). The definition of "property" is very wide (see ante, p. 427).

A statement or admission by the defendant in any compulsory examination or deposition before any court on the hearing of any matter in bankruptcy is not admissible in evidence against him. 53 & 54 Vict. c. 71, s. 27, sub-s. 2 (ante, p. 579). See R. v. Pike [1902] 1 K. B. 552; 20 Cox, 164. And if he have previously to the charge, first disclosed the act on oath under compulsory process of any court of law or equity, in any action, etc., bonâ fide instituted by any party grieved, he cannot be convicted by any evidence whatever, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 85 (ante, p. 578). As to what constitutes first disclosure, see ante, pp. 328, 496.

belonging to the company with intent to defraud or deceive any person, every person so offending shall be deemed to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon being convicted shall be liable to imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. Sect. 167—Direction of prosecution by court in case of winding-up by court —Expenses of prosecution.]—Where any order is made for winding-up a company by the court, or subject to the supervision of the court, if it appear in the course of such winding-up that any past or present director, manager, officer, or member of such company has been guilty of any offence in relation to the company, for which he is criminally responsible, the court may, on the application of any person interested in such winding-up or of its own motion, direct the official liquidators, or the liquidators (as the case may be), to institute and conduct a prosecution or prosecutions for such offence, and may order the costs and expenses to be paid out of the assets of the company. Sect. 168—Prosecution by liquidators with sanction of court, in case of voluntary winding-up—Expenses of prosecution.]—Where a company is being wound up altogether voluntarily, if it appear to the liquidators conducting such winding-up that any past or present director, manager, officer, or member of such company has been guilty of any offence in relation to the company for which he is criminally responsible, it shall be lawful for the liquidators, with the previous sanction of the court, to prosecute such offender, and all expenses properly incurred by them in such prosecution shall be payable out of the assets of the company, in priority to all other liabilities.

Indictment against a Director of a Public Company for fraudulently appropriating the Company's Money. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 81, ante, p. 585.)

Surrey, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present, that J. S. on the —— day of ——, in the year of our Lord ——, then being a director ["director, member, or public officer"] of a certain public company ["any body corporate or public company"] called the —— Company (Limited), unlawfully and fraudulently did take and apply for his own use and benefit ["for his own use or benefit, or for any use or purposes other than the use or purposes of such body corporate or public company"] certain money, to wit, one thousand pounds ["any property," see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 1, ante, p. 427] of and belonging to the said company; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

Misdemeanor: penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisoment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 81; 1 Edw. 7, c. 10, s. 2 (2) (ante, p. 576); 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to fining the offender and requiring him to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 431).

"Then being a director" is a sufficient averment of the fact that J. S. was a director: cf. R. v. Somerton, 7 B. & C. 463 (ante, p. 560).

As to the effect of omitting the word "limited," see R. v. Webb [1893] 9 T. L. R. 199 (C. C. R.).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 87 (ante, p. 579).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant was, at the time of the commission of the offence, a director of the public company mentioned in the indictment. Proof of his acting in that capacity will be sufficient primâ facie evidence of his being director (see post, p. 590). The statute does not define what is to be deemed a "public company" within these sections; but there can be no doubt that any company constituted by Act of Parliament or by charter, or registered under the Companies Acts, 1862–1900, would be held within them. See In Re Griffith, 12 Ch. D. 665. Prove also that he took and applied to his own use the money of the company, as stated in the indictment, or some part thereof, and that he did so fraudulently (see ante, pp. 303, 308). See Nelson v. R. [1902] App. Cas. 250; 20 Cox, 150. The provisions of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 85 (ante, p. 578), and 53 & 54 Vict. c. 71, s. 27 (ante, p. 579), apply to an indictment for this offence, where the defendant has been examined in bankruptcy: sed quære as to cases where the defendant has been examined in the winding-up of a company (see ante, p. 328).

Indictment against Directors and Members of a body corporate for making false entries in Books. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 83, ante, p. 586.)

Commencement as in last precedent.]—That A. B., C. D., and E. F. then being directors of a certain body corporate ("any body corporate or public company,") to wit, the —— Building Society; and G. H. then being a member of the said body corporate on the —— day of ——, in the year of our Lord ——, unlawfully, and with intent to defraud, did make and concur in the making of a false entry ("make or concur in the making of any false entry, or omit or concur in omitting any material particular,") in a book of account of the said body corporate ("in any book of account, or other document,") called the ledger, to wit, an entry of the sum of ——l., under the name of premium, to the credit of an account in the said ledger called the "Premiums" account, against the form (as ante, p. 465).

The above was the form of many of the counts in the indictment in R. v. Jabez Balfour and others, tried in the Queen's Bench Division in 1895, and has been often followed subsequently at the C. C. C. Semble: that the longer form "whereas in truth and in fact," etc., is unnecessary. Semble further: that it is unnecessary to describe the "book or other document" as being of the said body corporate, the word "such" not being in the statute.

Misdemeanor: penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 83; 1 Edw. 7, c. 10, ss. 1 (1), 2 (2) (ante, p. 576); 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to fining the offender and requiring him to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 431).

Indictment against Directors, etc., for publishing Fraudulent Statements.

Commencement as in the last precedent]—unlawfully did circulate and publish ["make, circulate, or publish, or concur in making, circulating, or publishing"] a certain written statement and account ["any written statement or account"], which said written statement was false in certain material particulars, that is to say, in this, to wit, that it was therein falsely stated that (state the particulars), he the said J. S. then well knowing the said written statement and account to be false in the several particulars aforesaid; with intent thereby then to deceive and defraud J. N., then being a shareholder of the said public company ["with intent to deceive or defraud any member, shareholder, or creditor of such body corporate or public company, or with intent to induce any person to become a shareholder or partner therein, or to intrust or advance any property to such body corporate or public company, or to enter into any security for the benefit thereof"] against the form [as ante, p. 465]. Add counts stating the intent to be deceived and defraud "certain persons to the jurors aforesaid unknown (or A. B. and others), then being shareholders of the said public company;" and also varying the allegation of the intent as above stated. It is safer to have a set of counts alleging an "intent to defraud," and another set alleging an "intent to deceive." See R. v. Birt, 63 J. P. 328; and Re London and Globe Finance Corporation (post, p. 589) and to add counts alleging an "intent to induce," etc.; and see last precedent above.

Misdemeanor: penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 84; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1 (ante, p. 235); 1 Edw. 7, c. 10, ss. 1 (1), 2 (2) (ante, pp. 575, 576). As to fining the offender and requiring him to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117, (ante, p. 431). See the last precedent.

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 87 (ante, p. 479.)

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant was a director. If the indictment be against a manager, it is sufficient to prove that the defendant in fact managed the business of the company; and it is not necessary to prove that he was duly appointed to the office of manager. R. v. Lawson, C. C. R. 31 Jan. 1905: Gibson v. Barton, L. R. 10 Q. B. 329. It is submitted that R. v. Lawson is equally applicable to directors and other officers. Prove also that he circulated and published, or concurred in circulating and publishing a statement in writing, or in print, relating to the affairs of the company, false in some material particular or particulars, as stated in the indictment (the materiality will be a question for the judge to determine: that it was false in such particular or particulars to the defendant's knowledge, which may be shown either expressly, by his acts or declarations, or impliedly, from the situation he filled in the company, the part he took in its management, and his opportunities of knowing its condition; and that he did so with the fraudulent intent set forth in the indictment, which will in general be inferred from its tendency to produce the effect alleged to have been intended; and prove his knowledge of the falsehood of the statement. This last head of evidence of course includes the proof that J. N. was a shareholder, etc., as stated in the indictment. It is not necessary to prove that any person was actually prejudiced by the fraudulent statement. On the indictment against the manager and secretary of a joint-stock bank, charging them in one set of counts with this offence, and in another set of counts with conspiracy to commit this offence, the prosecution was put to elect upon which set of counts it would proceed. R. v. Burch, 4 F. & F. 407, Montague Smith, J. As to the evidence necessary to prove such conspiracy, Id., and see R. v. Brown, 7 Cox, 442: S. C. sub. nom. R. v. Esdaile, 1 F. & F. 213. The provisions of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 85 (ante, p. 578), and of 53 & 54 Vict. c. 71, s. 27 (ante, p. 479), apply to an indictment for this offence; but see ante, pp. 328, 588. It would seem that if the statements are proved to be false to the knowledge of the accused, an intention to defraud may be presumed; see R. v. Birt, 63 J. P. 328, Ridley, J. (ante, p. 589).

Deceive or defraud.]—"To deceive is to induce a man to believe that a thing is true which is false, and which the person practising the deceit knows or believes it to be false. To defraud is to deprive by deceit; it is by deceit to induce a man to act to his injury. More tersely it may be put, that to deceive is by falsehood to induce a state of mind; to defraud is by deceit to induce a course of action:" Re London and Globe Finance Corporation [1903] 1 Ch. 728, 732, Buckley, J.

Sect. 3—Act to be read with 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96.]—This act shall be read as one with the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96).

City of Leeds in the West Riding of the county of York, to wit: The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present, that J. S. on the first day of June, in the year of our Lord ——, then being clerk and servant ["clerk, officer, or servant, or any person employed or acting in the capacity of a clerk, officer, or servant"] to J. B., whereas in truth and in fact the said sum of* 200*l. was not paid on the said day to the said A. B., as he the said J. S. well knew at the time when he made such false entry as aforesaid, and which said entry was in words and figures following* (setting it out)]; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. Add or substitute other counts, following the words of the statute and setting forth the facts and circumstances constituting the offence, ante, p. 68. If such facts and circumstances are not set forth with sufficient certainty, the defendant may demur to the indictment or move to quash it; but after verdict, no objection can be taken that the indictment does not set forth the facts and circumstances with sufficient certainty if it describes the offence in the words of the statute (ante, p. 591). It is sufficient to allege a general intent to defraud, without naming any particular person intended to be defrauded, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 24, s. 2. It is to be observed that the "document or account" mentioned in the latter part of the section differ from the "book" which immediately precedes them in that it need not "belong to or be in the possession of the employer," etc. As to the words "make and concur in making, see R. v. Bradlaugh, 15 Cox, 217, 223; R. v. Bowen, 1 Den. 21; and ante, p. 304. Semble, this indictment can be safely drawn in a shorter form similar to the precedent given (ante, p. 589), of an indictment under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 83, omitting the words "whereas in truth, etc."

Misdemeanor: penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 24, s. 1; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1 (ante, p. 235). As to fining the offender and requiring him to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 24, s. 3; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 431).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant at the time he committed the alleged offence was clerk or servant to J. N. The proof under this head will be the same as in cases of embezzlement, as to which see ante, p. 561. Prove that the book belonged to J. N. Prove, as to the first count, the destruction of the book by the defendant; and, as to the second count, that the defendant made the entry and that it was false to the defendant's knowledge. The intent to defraud would probably be implied by the jury if they were satisfied of the wilful destruction in the one case, or of the wilful false entry in the other (ante, pp. 303, 308). The proof of other facts, however, might render such implication irresistible, as that shortly before the defendant destroyed the book as alleged in the first count he had been questioned by his master about his accounts, and that the book contained or ought to have contained entries of such accounts, or that before he made the false entry as alleged in the second count he had received 200*l.* from his master to pay over to A. B. and had not paid it over. The question of intent to defraud is essentially one for the jury; and where a chairman of quarter sessions summed up a case of falsification in such a way as to withdraw from the jury circumstances bearing upon that question and a conviction ensued, the conviction was quashed. R. v. Drewett, 69 J. P. Rep. 37. A person may be guilty of making a false entry under this Act, although he does not make such entry with his own hands, but fraudulently and wilfully procures it to be made by a third person acting innocently and without any knowledge that the entry is otherwise than true. R. v. Butt, 15 Cox, 564 (C. C. R.).

A poor-rate collector in the accounts kept by him for the overseers, between them and the parish, made the only balance in hand 131*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.* He did not account to the overseers for the sum. Held that the entry as between the overseers and the parish being true, he was not liable to be convicted. R. v. Williams, 19 Cox, 239; 68 J. P. 103 (C. C. R.).

Sect. 88—Obtaining chattels, etc., by false pretences.]—Whosoever shall by any false pretence obtain from any other person any chattel, money, or valuable security, with intent to defraud, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude . . . or to be imprisoned . . .:

Provided, that if upon the trial of any person indicted for such misdemeanor it shall be proved that he obtained the property in question in any such manner as to amount in law to larceny, he shall not by reason thereof be entitled to be acquitted of such misdemeanor; and no person tried for such misdemeanor shall be liable to be afterwards prosecuted for larceny upon the same facts:

Provided also, that it shall be sufficient in any indictment for obtaining or attempting to obtain any such property by false pretences to allege that the party accused did the act with intent to defraud, without alleging an intent to defraud any particular person, and without alleging any ownership of the chattel, money, or valuable security; and on the trial of any such indictment it shall not be necessary to prove an intent to defraud any particular person, but it shall be sufficient to prove that the party accused did the act charged with an intent to defraud. Indictment for obtaining Goods, etc., by false Pretences (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 88, ante, p. 593).

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—unlawfully, knowingly, and designedly did falsely pretend to one J. N. [that the said J. S. then was the servant of one K. O., of St. Paul's Churchyard, in the city of London, tailor, and that the said J. S. was then sent by the said K. O. to the said J. N. for five yards of superfine woollen cloth]; by means of which said false pretences the said J. S. did then unlawfully obtain from the said J. N. five yards of superfine woollen cloth ["any chattel, money, or valuable security"] with intent to defraud; whereas in truth and in fact [the said J. S. was not then the servant of the said K. O.; and whereas in truth and in fact the said J. S. was not then sent by the said K. O. to the said J. N. for the said cloth or for any cloth whatsoever]; as he the said J. S. well knew at the time when he did so falsely pretend as aforesaid; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

Indictment for obtaining Goods or Money by means of a Cheque which the defendant knows will not be paid (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 88).

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—unlawfully, knowingly, and designedly did falsely pretend to C. D. that a certain paper writing which he the said A. B. then produced and delivered to the said C. D., then was a good and valid order for the payment of money, to wit, for the payment of the sum of 5*l.* in money, and that he the said A. B. then had authority to draw a cheque upon a certain bank known as the . . . Bank situate at . . . by means of which said false pretences the said A. B. did then, etc. (as in last precedent). Whereas in truth and in fact the said paper writing which the said A. B. then produced and delivered to the said C. D. was not then a good and valid order for the payment of the sum of 5*l.* in money. And whereas in truth and in fact the said A. B. had not then authority to draw a cheque upon the said bank known as the . . . Bank situate at . . . As he the said A. B., etc. (as in last precedent). [See R. v. Hazelton, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 134; 44 L. J. (M. C.) 11 (post, p. 605). For another precedent as to false pretences by means of cheques, see 11 Cox, App. XI.]

Indictment for Obtaining Goods by Means of Representations contained in a letter calculated to induce the prosecutor to believe that the writer was a dealer in a large way of business (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 88.)

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—unlawfully, knowingly, and designedly did [falsely] pretend to C. D. that he the said A. B. then was a dealer in potatoes, and that as such dealer in potatoes he then was in a large way of business, and that he then was in a position to do a good trade in potatoes, and that he then was able to pay for large quantities of potatoes as and when the same might be delivered to him: By means of which said false pretences, etc. (as in preceding precedents). See R. v. Cooper, 2 Q. B. D. 510; 46 L. J. (M. C.) 219 (post, p. 606); 13 Cox, 617:

R.* v. Bates, 3 Cox, 201. The indictment must state to whom the pretences were made, and from whom the goods, etc., were obtained. R. v. Sowerby [1894] 1 Q. B. 173; 63 L. J. (M. C.) 136; 17 Cox, 767, where the form of indictment in R. v. Hunter, 10 Cox, 642, was held bad, and that in R. v. Douglass, 1 Camp, 212, was approved. But an indictment is good which states that the pretence was made to all the King's subjects by an advertisement in a newspaper. R. v. Silverlock [1894] 2 Q. B. 766; 64 L. J. (M. C.) 233; 18 Cox, 104 (C. C. R.).

An indictment, which stated that the defendant "unlawfully, knowingly, and designedly did feloniously pretend," etc., was held bad. R. v. Walker, C. & P. 657. *The words "knowingly and designedly" are in* 30 G. 2, c. 24, s. 1 (rep.), but not in 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 53 (rep.), nor in the present statute; and their omission, if material, is cured by verdict. R. v. Bowen, 13 Q. B. 790; 19 L. J. (M. C.) 65; cf. R. v. Howarth, 3 Stark. (N. P.) 26. The pretences which form the main or sole inducement must be set out. R. v. Mason, 2 T. R. 581; 1 Leach, 487; 2 East, P. C. 837; 1 R. R. 545, and cf. 15 R. R. 282 n.; and their truth must be negatived. R. v. Perrott, 2 M. & Sel. 379; 15 R. R. 280: R. v. Kelleher, 2 L. R. (Ir.) 11. In Heymann v. R., L. R. 8 Q. B. 102, 12 Cox, 383, and R. v. Goldsmith, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 74; 42 L. J. (M. C.) 24; 12 Cox, 479, it was held that although an indictment for obtaining money by false pretences, without specifying them, would be bad on demurrer, or might be quashed on motion, yet that the defect would be cured by verdict. See ante, pp. 84, 165. And in indictments for a conspiracy to obtain money by false pretences, or receiving property obtained by false pretences, it is unnecessary to specify the false pretences. R. v. Gill, 2 B. & Ald. 204; 20 R. R. 407 (ante, p. 70): Taylor v. R. [1895] 1 Q. B. 25 (ante, p. 70). Matters of evidence upon which this false pretence is founded need not be referred to in the indictment. R. v. Lee, L. & C. 418; 332 L. J. (M. C.) 129; 9 Cox, 304 (C. C. R.). It is not necessary to state in what manner the false pretence was calculated to effect, or did effect, the obtaining of the money. Hamilton v. R., 9 Q. B. 271; 16 L. J. (M. C.) 9; 2 Cox, 11.

And the pretences must be set forth with sufficient certainty. But where the pretence alleged was a wager made "with a colonel in the army, then at Bath," without naming him—the court held it to be sufficient; for probably the defendant at the time did not mention the name of the colonel. Young v. R., 3 T. R. 98; 2 East, P. C. 828, 837, 838; 1 Leach, 505; 1 R. R. 660.

*The words "well knew" are essential. R.* v. Henderson, 2 Mood. C. C. 192; C. & Mar. 328; but see R. v. Bowen (ubi supra); Hamilton v. R. (ubi supra). *So are the words "with intent to defraud." R.* v. James, 12 Cox, 127. And it must be alleged that the goods, etc., were obtained by the pretences. R. v. Kelleher (ubi supra). Ownership of the goods need not be alleged, nor intent to defraud any particular person. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 88 (ante, p. 593). Where the false pretence charged was that the defendant pretended that a certain paper purporting to be a bank-note for the payment to the bearer of the sum of 5*l. was then a good, genuine, and available* order for the payment of the sum of 5*l., and was then of the value of* 5*l., it was held that the indictment, although inartificially framed, sufficiently alleged that the defendant represented the paper therein mentioned to be a good and genuine note of an existing bank and of the value of* 5*l. R.* v. Jarman, 14 Cox, 111 (C. C. R.). All persons who have concurred and assisted in the fraud may be indicted and convicted as principals, though not present at the time of making the pretence and obtaining the money or goods. R. v. Moland, 2 Mood. C. C. 276; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 98. If the goods, etc., are not obtained, or are not obtained through the false pretence, the accused can be convicted of the attempt. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 9 (ante, p. 219). See R. v. Hensler, 11 Cox, 570 (C. C. R.).

Venue.]—One who obtains goods by false pretences in one county, and afterwards brings them into another county, where he is apprehended with them, cannot be indicted for the offence in the latter county, but must be indicted in the county where the goods were obtained. R. v. Stanbury, L. & C. 128; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 88; see post, p. 609.

Misdemeanor: penal servitude for not less than three years and not exceeding five years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 88; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to fining the offender and requiring him to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 431).

No indictment can be preferred for obtaining money or other property by false pretences unless one or other of the preliminary steps required by 22 & 23 Vict. c. 17, s. 1 (ante, p. 7), has been taken: but additional counts can be inserted in an indictment for this offence if the provisions of 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, s. 1 (ante, p. 9), have been complied with. See R. v. Clarke, 59 J. P. 218, and ante, p. 10. But an indictment for attempting to obtain money or other property by false pretences may be preferred without taking any of such steps, as such an indictment is not within 22 & 23 Vict. c. 17. R. v. Burton, 13 Cox, 71 (C. C. R.).

For other frauds punishable by particular statutes, see Official Index to Statutes (ed. 1904) tit. "Fraud:" 2 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 552.

False pretences within the Act.]—The first statute on this subject, 33 H. 8, c. 1, extended only to cases where the money, etc., was obtained by means of a false token or counterfeit letter in the name of another; but this provision not being deemed sufficiently extensive, 30 G. 2, c. 24, was passed for the purpose of including all false pretences whatsoever. See 3 Chitty, Cr. L. 1000. These two statutes, the former entirely, and the latter so far "as relates to obtaining by false pretence or pretences any property therein mentioned:" and also the whole of 52 G. 3, c. 64, which extended the provisions of 30 G. 2, c. 24; and also so much of 3 G. 4, c. 114, as relates to the punishment for obtaining any property as therein mentioned by false pretences—were repealed by 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 27, and consolidated and amended by 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 53, which substituted the words "by any false pretence" for the words "by false pretence or pretences," which were in 30 G. 2, c. 14, s. 1. The same words are repeated in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 88 (ante, p. 593). The phrases in all these Acts are in substance the same, and consequently most of the decisions upon the repealed statutes are applicable to cases arising under the enactments of 1861.

As to existing fact.]—It may be laid down as a general rule for the interpretation of the statute, that wherever a person fraudulently represents as an existing fact that which is not an existing fact, and so gets money, etc., that is an offence within the Act. See R. v. Woolley, 1 Den. 559; 3 C. & K. 98; 19 L. J. (M. C.) 165; 4 Cox, 193. This rule has been recognized by the legislature in 62 & 63 Vict. c. 22 (The Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1899), which enacts (s. 3) that "Where a court of summary jurisdiction proposes to deal summarily in pursuance of this Act with a charge of obtaining by false pretences from any person any chattel, money, or valuable security, with intent to defraud the court shall, after the charge has been reduced to writing and read to the person charged, state in effect that a false pretence means a false representation by words, writing, or conduct, that some fact or facts existed, and that a promise as to future conduct not intended to be kept is not by itself a false pretence. . . ." Where a carrier falsely pretending that he had carried certain goods to A. B., demanded, and thereupon obtained from the consignor sixteen shillings for the carriage of them, it was held to be within the statute. R. v. Coleman, 2 East, P. C. 672: R. v. Airey, Id. 831; 2 East, 30. The defendant, on entering the service of a railway company, signed a book of rules, a copy of which was given to him. One of the rules was, "No servant of the company shall be entitled to claim payment of any wages due to him on leaving the company's service until he shall have delivered up his uniform clothing." On leaving the service, the defendant knowingly and fraudulently delivered up to an officer of the company, as part of his own uniform, a great-coat belonging to a fellow-servant, and so obtained the wages due to him. It was held that he was properly convicted of obtaining by false pretences the money so paid to him as wages. R. v. Bull, 13 Cox, 608 (C. C. R.) Where the defendant falsely pretended to J. N. that he was intrusted by the Duke de Lauzun to take some horses from Ireland to London for him, and that he had been detained so long by contrary winds that his money was all spent, by means of which representation he induced J. N. to advance him money; this was held to be within the Act. R. v. Villeneuve, 2 East, P. C. 830; 3 T. R. 104. So, where the defendant, who had actually taken premises and was doing a small business in coal, obtained forty coal bags on credit from the prosecutor by falsely pretending that he had a lot of trucks of coal at a railway station on demurrage and that he required forty coal bags, this was held to be a false pretence within the statute. R. v. Willot, 12 Cox, 68 (C. C. R.). So, where the defendants, falsely pretending that they had made a bet with A. B. that one of them should run ten miles within an hour, prevailed upon J. N. to join them in the bet, and obtained from him twenty guineas as his share in it; the judges held this to be within the statute, notwithstanding the pretence was probably one against which common prudence might have guarded. Young v. R., 3 T. R. 98; 1 Leach, 505; 1 R. R. 660. Cf. R. v. Asterley, 7 C. & P. 191. Where a servant, who had authority to buy goods, and was to be repaid on producing a ticket containing a statement of the purchase, produced such a ticket and obtained the amount stated therein, no purchase having in fact being made, this was held to be not larceny, but obtaining money by false pretences. R. v. Barnes, 2 Den. 59; 20 L. J. (M. C.) 34 (C. C. R.). And see R. v. Green, Dears. 323; 6 Cox, 296 (C. C. R.); R. v. Prince (post, p. 606). Where the foreman of a manufacturer, who was in the habit of receiving from his master money to pay the workmen, obtained from him by means of false written accounts of the wages earned by the men, more than the men had earned or he had paid them, the judges held it to be within the Act; they said that all cases where the false pretence creates the credit are within the statute; and here the defendant would not have obtained the excess above what was really due to the workmen, were it not for the false account he had delivered to his master. R. v. Witchell, 2 East, P. C. 830. It was the prisoner's duty to ascertain daily the amount of dock dues payable by his master, and, having ascertained it, to apply to his master's cashier for the amount, and then to pay it in discharge of the dues. On one occasion, by representing falsely to the cashier that the amount was larger than it really was, as he knew, the prisoner obtained from the cashier the sum he stated it to be, and then paid the real amount due, and appropriated the difference to his own use. This was held to be not larceny, but obtaining money by false pretences. R. v. Thompson, L. & C. 233; 32 L. J. (M. C.) 57; 9 Cox, 222 (C. C. R.). It is difficult to distinguish the essential facts of this case from those in R. v. Cooke, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 295; 40 L. J. (M. C.) 68 (ante, p. 461), where the prisoner was held to be guilty of larceny. R. v. Thompson was cited and observed upon in R. v. Cooke, although not overruled, Bovill, C.J., saying that the decision in R. v. Thompson went entirely on the question whether there was a larceny in the obtaining of the money in the first instance, and that the point was not considered whether the subsequent misappropriation was larceny. So, where the defendant obtained goods by falsely stating that he wanted them for J. S., who lived at N., and was a person whom he would trust with 1000*l.*, and who went out to New Orleans twice a year to take goods to his sons, this was held to be a sufficient false pretence within the statute. R. v. Archer, Dears. 449; 6 Cox, 515 (C. C. R.). So, where the false pretence alleged was, that a person who lived in a large house down the street, and had had a daughter married some time back, had been to him (the defendant) about some carpet, and had asked him to procure a piece of carpet, whereby the defendant obtained from the prosecutor twenty yards of carpet: this was held sufficient. R. v. Burnsides, Bell, 282; 30 L. J. (M. C.) 42; 8 Cox, 370 (C. C. R.). Receipt of a cheque by a clerk to a savings bank from the manager on a false representation that a depositor had given notice of withdrawal, and for the purpose of handing the cheque to the depositor, was held to be obtaining by false pretences and not larceny. R. v. Essex, Dears. & B. 371; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 20; 7 Cox, 384 (C. C. R.).

Where the secretary of an Odd Fellows' Lodge told a member that he owed the lodge 13*s.* 6*d.*, and thereby obtained that sum from him fraudulently, whereas the member owed 2*s.* 2*d.* only, he was held to be rightly convicted of obtaining money by false pretences. R. v. Woolley, 1 Den. 559; 3 C. & K. 98; 19 L. J. (M. C.) 165; 4 Cox, 193 (C. C. R.). A creditor who wilfully and fraudulently represents to a third person who holds money of his debtor that a larger sum is due to him from the debtor than is really the case, and thus obtains from such third person payment of the larger sum, is guilty of a false pretence within the statute, and that too although he may have obtained a judgment by default, not set aside, against his debtor for the larger sum. R. v. Taylor, 15 Cox, 265, 268 (Q. B. D.). Obtaining a gift of money by means of false statements of the name and circumstances of the defendant or any other person, in a begging letter, is within the statute. R. v. Jones, 1 Den. 551; 19 L. J. (M. C.) 162; 4 Cox, 198 (C. C. R.).

An indictment charging the prisoner with obtaining money from a wife, whose husband had run away, by falsely pretending to her that she, the prisoner, had power to bring him back, is good, and sufficiently states an indictable offence. R. v. Giles, L. & C. 502; 34 L. J. (M. C.) 50; 10 Cox, 44 (C. C. R.).

Mere promise of future conduct insufficient.]—A pretence that the party would do an act which he did not mean to do (e.g. a promise), to pay for goods on delivery, is not a false pretence within the Act, but merely a promise for future conduct. R. v. Goodhall, R. & R. 461; R. v. Burrows, 11 Cox, 258 (C. C. R.); 62 & 63 Vict. c. 22, s. 3, ante, p. 597). So, where the defendant obtained money from the prosecutor by the false pretence that he was going to pay his rent, whereas he had no intention of paying his rent, this was held to be no false pretence within the statute. R. v. Lee, L. & C. 309; 9 Cox, 304 (C. C. R.) So, also, a false pretence that the defendant wanted a loan of 30*l.* to enable him to take a public-house is not within the statute. R. v. Woodman, 14 Cox, 179, Mellor, J. And a pretence to a parish officer, as an excuse for not working, that the party had not clothes, when he really has, though it induced the officer to give him clothes, is not a pretence within the statute, the statement being rather a false excuse for not working than a false pretence to obtain goods. R. v. Wakeling, R. & R. 504. An indictment for obtaining money from A., under the false pretence that the defendant intended to marry A., and wanted the money to pay for a wedding suit he had bought, was held not sufficient to sustain a conviction. R. v. Johnston, 2 Mood. C. C. 254. And where the false pretence averred in the indictment was that there was a certain sum due and owing to the defendant on account of certain work executed by him, whereas only a smaller sum was due to him; this was held bad, as not sufficiently averring a false pretence of an existing fact, and being provable by evidence of a mere wrongful overcharge. R. v. Oates, Dears. 459; 24 L. J. (M. C.) 123; 6 Cox, 540 (C. C. R.). Where an indictment alleged that the defendant falsely pretended to P., who lived at one T.'s, that the said P. was to give the defendant 10*s.*, and that T. was going to allow him 10*s.* a week, it was held (Blackburn, J., and Piggot, B., dub.) that the indictment did not allege with sufficient certainty any false pretence respecting any existing fact. R. v. Henshaw, L. & C. 444; 33 L. J. (M. C.) 132 (C. C. R.)

False pretence as to existing fact, coupled with promise, sufficient.]—But where the statement consists partly of a fraudulent misrepresentation of an existing fact, and partly of a promise to do something in futuro—as, that the defendant kept a shop, and that the prosecutrix might go and live with her at the said shop until she obtained a situation; whereas the defendant kept no shop; and the jury find that the prosecutrix parts with her money or goods, relying wholly or in part upon the misrepresentation of fact; this is a sufficient false pretence within the act. R. v. Fry, Dears. & B. 449; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 68; 7 Cox, 394 (C. C. R.). R. v. Bates, 3 Cox, 201. So, where the false representation was that the defendant had bought certain skins, and would sell them to the prosecutor. R. v. West, Dears. & B. 575; 24 L. J. (M. C.) 227; 8 Cox, 12 (C. C. R.). And where a married man induced a woman to give him money by representing himself to be unmarried, and by promising that with the money he would furnish a house and return and marry her, he was held indictable for obtaining money by false pretences. R. v. Jennison, L. & C. 157; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 146; 9 Cox, 158 (C. C. R.): cf. Anon., Lofft, 146: R. v. Johnston, 2 Mood. C. C. 254; R. v. Williams, 62 J. P. 311. Where the defendant obtained money from a woman under the threat of an action for breach of promise of marriage, he being in fact a married man already, an indictment, laying as the false pretence that he was entitled to maintain an action against her for the breach of promise, was held to be good, for that this was a false pretence within the statute. R. v. Copeland, C. & Mar. 516. A promise to do a thing in futuro may involve a false pretence that the promissor has the power to do that thing, for which false pretence the promissor may be indictable. R. v. Giles, L. & C. 502; 34 L. J. (M. C.) 50; 10 Cox, 44 (C. C. R.). And where the false pretence charged was that the defendant said he had got a carriage and pair and expected it down, either that day or the next, this was held to be proved by evidence of his having said that he expected his carriage and pair down. R. v. Howarth, 11 Cox, 588 (C. C. R.). Where money was obtained by the defendant by the false representation that W. was about to publish a new directory, and that the defendant was collecting information for it, this was held to be a false pretence of an existing fact.

R. v. Speed, 15 Cox, 24 (C. C. R.). A false pretence by a prisoner of power to communicate with the spirits of deceased and other persons not present where he then was, and that he had power to cause such spirits to be present, was held a false pretence of an existing fact. R. v. Lawrence, 36 L. T. (N. S.) 404 : cf. Penny v. Hanson, 18 Q. B. D. 478; 56 L. J. (Q. B.) 41; 16 Cox, 173: R. v. Entwistle [1899] 1 Q. B. 846; 68 L. J. Q. B. 580; 19 Cox, 317: R. v. Giles (ante, p. 600): R. v. Stephenson, 68 J. P. Rep. 524.

As to business.]—Where the defendant pretended that he was carrying on an extensive business as a surveyor and house agent, and thereby induced the prosecutor to deposit with him 25*l.*, as a security for his (the prosecutor's) fidelity as a clerk, whereas the defendant was not carrying on any business as a surveyor or house agent, this was held to be a false pretence within the statute. R. v. Crab, 11 Cox, 85 (C. C. R.). But where the defendant pretended (1) that he was doing a good business, and (2) that he had recently sold a good business, and thereby induced the prosecutor to deposit with him 50*l.*, as a security for the prosecutor's fidelity as an assistant, whereas in truth defendant's business was worthless and the defendant was a bankrupt, it was held that neither of the false pretences alleged came within the statute, because the first pretence was a mere exaggerated representation of value (see post, p. 602) upon which, though fraudulent, an indictment would not lie, and because the second was too remote. R. v. Williamson, 11 Cox, 328, Byles, J. In the former of these two cases there was no existing business at all, whereas in the latter there appears to have been an existing, although a worthless, business. See also R. v. Watson, Dears. & B. 348; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 18 (C. C. R.), in which, although it was not necessary to decide the point, Erle, J., said :—"I wish not to be supposed to assent to the proposition that an indictment [for false pretences] can be sustained by proof of mere exaggeration of the prosperity of a business, where there is an original business. It is difficult to draw a decided line; but I think it has been decided that exaggerated praise does not render a person liable within the statute." As to the general doctrine that exaggerated praise does not render a prisoner liable within the statute, and the limitations of that doctrine, see R. v. Bryan, and other cases, post, p. 603. For instances of indictments for obtaining money by false pretences where the business carried on by the defendant was a "bogus" business, see R. v. Cooper, 2 Q. B. D. 510; 18 Cox, 617 (C. C. R.); R. v. King [1897] 1 Q. B. 214; 18 Cox, 447 (C. C. R.): R. v. Rhodes [1899] 1 Q. B. 77; 19 Cox, 182 (C. C. R.): and indictments charging defendants with obtaining money by falsely pretending that they "were then carrying on a genuine and bonâ fide business as —— at ——" are constantly preferred at the Central Criminal Court and County of London Sessions against persons publishing fraudulent advertisements and the like.

In R. v. Codrington, 1 C. & P. 661, where the prisoner sold to the prosecutor a reversionary interest which he had previously sold to another, and the prosecutor took a regular assignment of it, with the usual covenants for title, Littledale, J., ruled that he could not be convicted for obtaining money by false pretences; for if this were within the statute, every breach of warranty or false assertion at the time of a bargain might be treated as a false pretence. In R. v. Kenrick, 5 Q. B. 49; 1 Dav. & M. 208, that decision was much questioned; and it was strongly intimated that the execution of a contract between the same parties does not secure from punishment the obtaining of money under false pretences, in conformity with that contract. And in R. v. Abbott,

1 Den. 273; 2 C. & K. 630; 2 Cox, 430, it was decided unanimously by the judges, upon a case reserved, that the law was so. And see also R. v. Burgon, Dears. & B. 11; 25 L. J. (M. C.) 105; 7 Cox, 131 (C. C. R.): R. v. Dark, 1 Den. 276 (C. C. R.); and R. v. Goss, Bell, 208; 29 L. J. (M. C.) 86, in which, upon the authority of R. v. Abbott, the same law was laid down. In R. v. Meakin, 17 W. R. 683; 11 Cox, 270 (C. C. R.), where the defendant induced the prosecutor to lend him money on a bill of sale of furniture, and the joint and several promissory note of the defendant and another person, by representing that the furniture was unincumbered, whereas the defendant had previously given a bill of sale of the same furniture to another person, although not to its full value, this was held to be an indictable false pretence.

Quantity or weight.]—Where the indictment charged that the defendant, having in his possession a certain weight of twenty-eight pounds, falsely pretended to C. that a quantity of coals which he delivered to C. weighed 16 cwt. (meaning 1792 pounds weight), and were worth 1*l.*, and that the weight was fifty-six pounds, by means of which he obtained a sovereign from C. with intent to defraud him of part thereof, to wit, 10*s.*; whereas the coal did not weigh 1792 pounds, and were not worth 1*l.*, and whereas the weight was not fifty-six pounds, and whereas the coals were of the weight of 896 pounds only, and were not worth more than 10*s.*, and whereas the weight was twenty-eight pounds only: the judges (according to the report) held a conviction on the indictment wrong, on the ground that all the pretences, except that relating to the weight, were mere false affirmations, and that as to the weight, there was no allegation to connect the sale of the coals with the use of the weight. R. v. Reed, 7 C. & P. 848. Lord Denman, C.J., in Hamilton v. R., 9 Q. B. 271, 274, said that R. v. Reed was misreported, and that no such decision was given. This seems to have been a mistake; see Dears. & B. 35, note (e); but R. v. Reed can no longer be considered to be law since R. v. Sherwood, Dears. & B. 251; 26 L. J. (M. C.) 81; 7 Cox, 270 (C. C. R.). There the defendant, having contracted to sell and deliver to the prosecutrix a load of coal at 7*d.* per cwt., delivered to her a load of coals which he knew weighed only 14 cwt., but which he stated to her contained 18 cwt., and produced a ticket, showing 18 cwt. to be the weight, which he said he had himself made out when the coals were weighed; and she thereupon paid him the price as for 18 cwt., which was 2*s.* 4*d.* more than was really due; and it was held that the defendant was indictable for obtaining the 2*s.* 4*d.* by false pretences. This decision was approved and followed in R. v. Lee, L. & C. 418; 33 L. J. (M. C.) 129; 9 Cox, 460 (C. C. R.); and cf. R. v. Ridgway, 8 F. & F. 838, Bramwell, B. So, where the prosecutor bought of the defendant and paid him for a quantity of coal on a false representation by him that there were 15 cwt., whereas in fact there were only 8 cwt., but so packed in the cart as to have the appearance of a larger quantity, this was held to be an indictable false pretence. R. v. Ragg, Bell, 214; 29 L. J. (M. C.) 86; 8 Cox, 262 (C. C. R.). See also R. v. Eagleton (post, p. 617).

Quality or value.]—A person who obtains from a pawnbroker, upon an article which he falsely represents to be silver, a greater advance than would otherwise have been made, is guilty of a false pretence within the statute; although the pawnbroker have the opportunity of testing the article at the time. R. v. Ball, C. & Mar. 249: see R. v. Roebuck, Dears. & B. 24; 25 L. J. (M. C.) 101; 7 Cox, 126 (C. C. R.): R. v. Goss, Bell, 208 (infra). And a false representation that a stamp on a watch is the hall-mark of the Goldsmiths' Company, and that the number 18, part thereof, indicates that it is made of eighteen carat gold, is a false pretence, and is not the less so because accompanied by the representation that the watch is a gold one, and some gold is proved to have been contained in its composition. R. v. Suter, 10 Cox, 577 (C. C. R.). But a false representation of what is mere matter of opinion, falling within the category of untrue praise in the course of a contract for sale, is not indictable. The defendant was convicted on an indictment for obtaining money by false pretences, the pretences charged being that certain spoons were of the best quality, that they were equal to Elkington's A (meaning spoons made by Messrs. Elkington, and stamped by them with the letter A); that the foundations were of the best material, and that they had as much silver on them as Elkington's A. The representations were made to a pawnbroker for the purpose of obtaining, and the defendant did thereby obtain, advances of money on the spoons, which were in fact of inferior quality, and were of less value than the money advanced on them, and the pawnbroker stated that he was induced by the defendant's misrepresentations alone to advance the money, and that if he had known the real quality of the spoons he would have advanced no money on them. The jury found the defendant guilty of fraudulently and falsely representing that the spoons had as much silver on them as Elkington's A, and that the foundations were of the best material, etc., and that he thereby obtained the money. It was nevertheless held by a large majority of the judges, that the conviction could not be sustained. R. v. Bryan, Dears. & B. 265; 26 L. J. (M. C.) 84; 7 Cox, 312 (C. C. R.). See also R. v. Levine, 10 Cox, 374. The decision in R. v. Bryan is said by Erle, C.J., to have gone "upon the sound principle, that indefinite praise upon a matter of indefinite opinion cannot be made the ground of an indictment for false pretences;" R. v. Goss, 29 L. J. (M. C.) 86, 90 (infra); and by Byles, J., to have been governed by the maxim, simplex commendatio non obligat. R. v. Ardley, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 301, 306; 40 L. J. (M. C.) 88; 12 Cox, 23: cf. R. v. Lee, 8 Cox, 233: R. v. Williamson, 11 Cox, 328, (ante, p. 601). But a false representation respecting an alleged matter of definite fact knowingly made, is a false pretence within the statute, and that, too, although the representation is merely as to the quality of goods sold or pledged. Therefore, where the defendant induced the prosecutor to purchase a chain from him by fraudulently representing that it was fifteen carat gold, when, in fact, it was only of a quality a trifle better than six carats, knowing at the time that he was falsely representing the quality of the chain as fifteen carat gold, it was held that the statement that the chain was fifteen carat gold, not being mere exaggerated praise, nor relating to a mere matter of opinion, but a statement as to a specific fact within the defendant's knowledge, was a sufficient false pretence to sustain an indictment for obtaining money by false pretences. R. v. Ardley, ubi supra. And where the defendant induced a purchaser to buy and pay for a cheese of a very inferior description by the wilfully false statement that a taster of a different and superior cheese produced as a sample had formed part of and been taken out of the cheese sold, it was held that he might be convicted of obtaining money by false pretences. R. v. Goss, Bell, 208; 29 L. J. (M. C.) 86; 8 Cox, 262 (C. C. R.). So, where the defendant sold spurious blacking as "Everett's Blacking," he was held to be indictable for the false pretences. R. v. Dundas, 6 Cox, 380, Erle, J. Where the defendant falsely represented to the prosecutrix that certain packages which he sold to her contained good tea, whereas, in fact, each package contained a mixture of which only one-fourth part was tea, the remaining three-fourths consisting of sand and other articles unfit for food or drink, and the jury found that the defendant knew the real nature of the contents of the packages, that it was not tea, but a mixture of articles unfit for drink, and that he designedly falsely pretended that it was good tea with intent to defraud, and the defendant was convicted, it was held that the conviction was right. R. v. Foster, 2 Q. B. D. 301; 46 L. J. (M. C.) 128; 13 Cox, 393 (C. C. R.). In R. v. Spiro, 64 J. P. 794, Darling, J., the prisoner was convicted of obtaining money by false pretences where he had held an auction and had induced persons to hand up sovereigns to him by a representation that they would get them back and also watches offered by him for sale.

Selling goods in wrappers which are a colourable imitation of those of another firm would, it seems, be a false pretence (R. v. Smith, Dears. & B. 566; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 225; 8 Cox, 32 C. C. R.); but certainly falls within the Merchandize Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28), post, Book II. Part II. ch. v., s. 2.

As to false representations of the soundness of a horse, see R. v. Keighley, Dears. & B. 145; 7 Cox, 217 (C. C. R.).

The defendant and two other persons entered into articles of partnership, by the terms of which the profits were to be divided equally among them. By a subsequent verbal arrangement the defendant was to act as agent for the sale of the partnership goods, and was to receive a commission on all orders obtained by him, which commission was to be paid out of the partnership funds before any division of profits was made. The defendant, by falsely pretending that he had obtained some orders, got his partner to pay him a sum for commission. It was held that he was not indictable for false pretences, as his charges were payable out of the partnership funds, and his false statement was a misrepresentation concerning a partnership matter, and would have to be investigated, and the sum paid duly considered, in taking the partnership accounts, in order to ascertain the profits. R. v. Evans, L. & C. 252; 32 L. J. (M. C.) 38; 9 Cox, 238 (C. C. R.).

Form of pretence.]—When the false pretences are by letter the prosecutor may be asked his opinion as to its meaning, and as to his belief when he received it with respect to the truth of the statements contained in it: but the proper inferences to be drawn from the letter are for the jury. R. v. King [1897] 1 Q. B. 214; 66 L. J. (Q. B.) 87; 18 Cox, 447. It is not necessary that the pretence should be by words; the conduct and acts of the party will be sufficient, without any verbal or written representation: R. v. Barnard, 7 C. & P. 784; 62 & 63 Vict. c. 22, s. 3 (ante, p. 597): R. v. Hunter, R. v. Carter, 10 Cox, 642 (C. C. R.): R. v. Giles, L. & C. 502; 34 L. J. (M. C.) 50; 10 Cox, 44: R. v. Cooper, 2 Q. B. D. 510 (post, p. 606). Thus, if a person obtain goods from another upon giving him in payment his cheque upon a banker, with whom in fact he has no account, this (although not indictable as a fraud at common law, R. v. Lara, 6 T. R. 565 (post, p. 619): see R. v. Flint, R. & R. 460) is a false pretence within the meaning of the Larceny Act. R. v. Jackson, 3 Camp. 370; 14 R. R. 756; cf. R. v. Martin, 5 Q. B. D. 34; 49 L. J. (M. C.) 11; 14 Cox, 375 (C. C. R.): R. v. Garratt, 10 Times L. R. 167 (C. C. R.). But if the defendant, at the time he gives the cheque, believes, although he has no account at the bankers, that the cheque will be paid on presentation, he cannot be convicted of a false pretence. R. v. Walne, 11 Cox, 647 (C. C. R.). Thus, where the defendant bought a mare, and paid for her on Thursday by a cheque drawn on a banker with whom he had no account, but told the prosecutor not to present the cheque until Saturday, to which the prosecutor assented, but nevertheless did present it on Thursday, when it was dishonoured, and it appeared from the evidence that the defendant was on Thursday in daily expectation of having money paid to him which would have enabled him to place the banker in funds to meet the cheque on Saturday, this was held not to be criminal because the accused had no intent to defraud. Id. But a man who makes and gives a cheque for the amount of goods purchased in a ready-money transaction, makes a representation that the cheque is a good and valid order for the amount inserted in it; and if such person has only a colourable account at the bank on which the cheque is drawn without available assets to meet it, and has no authority to overdraw, and knows that the cheque will be dishonoured on presentation, and intends to defraud, he may be convicted of obtaining such goods by such false pretence. R. v. Hazleton, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 134; 44 L. J. (M. C.) 11; 13 Cox, 1. Where the prisoner was charged with falsely pretending that a post-dated cheque, drawn by himself, was a good and genuine order for 25*l.*, and of the value of 25*l.*, whereby he obtained a watch and chain; and the jury found that, before the completion of the sale and delivery of the watch by the prosecutor to the prisoner he represented to the prosecutor that he had an account with the bankers on whom the cheque was drawn, and that he had a right to draw the cheque, though he postponed the date for his own convenience, all which was false; and that he represented that the cheque would be paid on or after the day of the date, but that he had no reasonable ground to believe that it would be paid, and that he had no funds to pay it; he was held to be properly convicted. R. v. Parker, 2 Mood. C. C. 1; 7 C. & P. 825. Where the defendant obtained goods in exchange for a cheque on a bank at which he falsely represented that he had an account, though he knew that the account was closed, and the cheque would not be honoured, it was held that he obtained the goods and not merely credit by false pretences. R. v. Cosnett, 20 Cox, 6; 65 J. P. 472 (C. C. R.). But where the indictment stated that the defendant falsely pretended to A. B. that he was a captain in the East India Company's service, and that a certain promissory note, which he then delivered to A. B., was a valuable security for 21*l.*, by means of which false pretences he fraudulently obtained from A. B. 8*l.* 15*s.*; whereas the defendant was not a captain, etc., and the note was not a valuable security, etc., it was held, in error, that as it did not appear but that the note was the defendant's own promissory note, or that he knew it to be worthless, there was no sufficient false pretence in that respect; and, as the two pretences were to be taken together, that the indictment was bad. R. v. Wickham, 10 A. & E. 34; 2 Per. & D. 333; 8 L. J. (M. C.) 87. See also R. v. Philpotts, 1 C. & K. 112. Where the prisoner passed the note of a country bank, which he knew had stopped payment, it appearing that one of the partners was solvent, Gaselee, J., held that he could not be convicted for obtaining money under false pretences. R. v. Spencer, 3 C. & P. 420. It would seem, however, that an indictment which charged that the defendant obtained money by falsely pretending that a certain piece of paper was a bank note then current, and of the value for which it purported to be made, would be supported by evidence that it was the note of a bank which had stopped payment, and was no longer in existence, and that it had paid only a small dividend, and that these facts were known to the defendant. R. v. Evans, Bell, 187; 29 L. J. (M. C.) 20; 8 Cox, 257 (C. C. R.). But in that case an allegation that the note was of no value whatever was held not to be supported by the above evidence. Cf. R. v. Williams, 7 Cox, 351, Martin, B., where the indictment was for passing in 1857 as good a note of a bank which as the prisoner knew had in 1857 stopped payment; and R. v. Flint, R. & R. 460. Where an indictment charged the defendant with obtaining money, by falsely pretending that a piece of paper was a bank note then current and of the full value of 5*l.*, and the evidence was that the piece of paper was the note of a bank which had stopped payment forty years before, and had not been reopened, and that the defendant knew it, this evidence was held sufficient to justify a conviction, although it appeared from the cross-examination of a witness for the prosecution, that the bank had been made bankrupt, and the bankruptcy proceedings were not produced, and there was no evidence as to what dividend, if any, had been paid. R. v. Dowey, 37 L. J. (M. C.) 52; 11 Cox, 115 (C. C. R.): cf. R. v. Smith, 6 Cox, 314. Under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 12 (ante, p. 218), the prisoner can now be convicted of misdemeanor in cases where the facts given in evidence amount in law to a felony: e.g. to forgery, as in R. v. Evans, 5 C. & P. 553: cf. R. v. Anderson, 2 M. & Rob. 469. And where the cashier of a bank, who had a general authority to conduct the business of the bank, and to part with its property on the presentation of a genuine order from a customer, was deceived by a forged order, and parted with the property of the bank to the person who presented the order, and who knew the order to be forged, it was held that the latter was guilty of obtaining by false pretences the money so paid on the order. R. v. Prince, 38 L. J. (M. C.) 8; L. R. 1 C. C. R. 150. Fraudulently offering a "flash note" in payment under the pretence that it is a bank note, is a false pretence within the statute. R. v. Coulson, 1 Den. 592; 19 L. J. (M. C. 182; 4 Cox, 227 (C. C. R.). A person who fraudulently obtains goods by forwarding to the vendor the half of a bank note, having previously parted with the corresponding half to a third person, is guilty of obtaining goods by false pretences, as by forwarding the half-note he represents that he has the corresponding half ready for the vendor's satisfaction. R. v. Murphy, Ir. Rep., 10 C. L. 508; 13 Cox, 298 (C. C. R. Ir.): cf. R. v. Freeth, R. & R. 127. So, where a person at Oxford, who was not a member of the university, went, for the purpose of fraud, wearing a commoner's gown and cap, and obtained goods, this was held a sufficient false pretence to satisfy the statute, though nothing passed in words. R. v. Barnard, 7 C. & P. 784. So, where the prisoner, who had previously pledged ingots of silver with the prosecutor, brought bars of worthless metal similar in appearance, and laid them down, saying eight ounces each at 4*s.* an ounce, the same as before. R. v. Stevens, 1 Cox, 83.

Ordering a meal at a restaurant without the means to pay is not a false pretence within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 88 (ante, p. 593), but is a fraud within s. 13 (1), of the Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62). R. v. Jones [1898] 1 Q. B. 119; 67 L. J. (Q. B.) 41; 19 Cox, 87; post, Book II. Part II. ch. v., s. 1.

Indeed, it may be laid down generally that, as it is not necessary that the statement of the existing facts should be in words, but it may be conveyed by the conduct and acts of the party (ante, p. 598), so also if made by words or writing it is not necessary that such statement should be made expressly, if the statement may be naturally and reasonably, although not necessarily, inferred from such words or writing, and the defendant intended the prosecutor to put upon them a construction supporting the pretences charged in the indictment. R. v. Cooper, 2 Q. B. D. 510; 46 L. J. (M. C.) 219; 13 Cox, 617 (C. C. R.): R. v. King [1897] 1 Q. B. 214; 18 Cox, 447 (C. C. R.). Thus, where C. was convicted of obtaining potatoes from the prosecutor by falsely pretending that he was then in a large way of business, that he was in a position to do a good trade in potatoes, and that he was able to pay for large quantities of potatoes as and when the same might be delivered to him, and the evidence that C. had so pretended was the following letter written by him to the prosecutor:—"Send me one truck of regents and one truck of rocks, as samples, at your prices named in your letter; let them be good quality, then I am sure a good trade will be done for both of us. I will remit you cash on arrival of goods and invoice. I may say if you use me well I shall be a good customer." It was held, affirming the conviction, that the words of the letter were fairly and reasonably capable of a construction supporting the pretences charged, and that it was a question for the jury whether the writer intended the prosecutor to put that construction upon them. R. v. Cooper (ubi supra). So, where the defendant was convicted of obtaining money from the prosecutor by falsely pretending that there was a person named A. Brient, living at Holt, Trowbridge, in the county of Wilts, who was a minister of religion, and that the said A. Brient had instituted a "bonâ fide competition for the production of the greatest number of words from the word 'Barnardo,' and that the said A. Brient had made arrangements to present prizes to the successful competitors, of the respective values of two pounds, one pound, and ten shillings, and had further arranged to give the proceeds derived from the entrance fees of competitors, after deducting the said prizes, to a charitable institution known as Dr. Barnardo's Home for Destitute Children,—and the evidence that the defendant had so pretended was that he had inserted the following advertisement in a newspaper:—'Barnardo. 2*l.*, 1*l.*, 10*s.* for most words from Barnardo. Proceeds to go to Dr. Barnardo's Home for Destitute Children. Alphabetical lists, with 1*s.* 3*d.* to Revd. A. Brient, Holt, Trowbridge, Wilts.'" It was held, affirming the conviction, that the words in the advertisement were reasonably capable of the construction put upon them in the indictment and that it was a question for the jury whether the defendant intended the prosecutor to put that construction upon them. R. v. Randell, 16 Cox, 335 (C. C. R.).

Obtaining as a loan (see post, p. 608), from the drawer of a bill accepted by the prisoner and negotiated by the drawer, part of the amount, for the purpose of paying the bill, under the false pretence that the prisoner was prepared with the residue of the amount, was held to be an offence within the statute, the prisoner being shown not to be prepared, and not intending so to apply the money. R. v. Crossley, 2 M. & Rob. 17, Patteson, J. In like manner, where the defendant obtained goods by a false statement that a bill, drawn on and accepted by himself, and purporting to be payable at the London and Westminster Bank, which he gave the prosecutor for the price of the goods, would be paid at the bank the next day, and that he had made arrangements for it, this was held a false pretence within the Act. R. v. Hughes, 1 F. & F. 355.

"Prepared to pay"—Intention.]—"A promise as to future conduct not intended to be kept is not by itself a false pretence." (62 & 63 Vict. c. 22, s. 3, ante, p. 597.) On the special facts of R. v. Gordon, 23 Q. B. D. 354 (post, p. 618), an averment that the prisoner falsely pretended that he was "prepared to pay" money to the prosecutor was held to be a sufficient statement of an existing fact: cf. R. v. Bates, 3 Cox, 201, where the pretences that the prisoner "then had the means of paying," and "was able and willing to pay" were held sufficient by Platt, B. "There must be a misstatement of an existing fact: but the state of a man's mind is as much a fact as the state of his digestion." Edyington v. Fitzmaurice, 29 Ch. D. 459, 483, Bowen, L.J. The court in R. v. Gordon (ubi supra), however, specially refrained from deciding the question there raised by Wills, J., whether a statement of present intention is a sufficient representation of an existing fact, and semble, that it would certainly be unsafe to base an indictment under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 88, upon such a statement alone. Cf. R. v. Johnston, 2 Mood. C. C. 254.

A false pretence actually made to A. in B.'s hearing, whereby money is obtained from B., may be laid as made to B. R. v. Dent, 1 C. & K. 249, Rolfe, B. And where the indictment alleged the false pretence to have been made to B. and others, and it was proved that B. was one of a firm, and that the false pretence was made to him alone, but with intent to defraud the firm, it was held sufficient, the words "and others" being rejected as surplusage. R. v. Kealey, 2 Den. 68; 20 L. J. (M. C.) 57; 5 Cox, 193 (C. C. R.). The jury may connect together representations made in several distinct conversations (if from their nature they can be connected), and convict the defendant for obtaining money, etc., by means of false pretences made in those several conversations. R. v. Welman, Dears. 188; 22 L. J. (M. C.) 118; 6 Cox, 153 (C. C. R.). A false pretence made through an innocent agent is the same as if made by the defendant himself, and may be so charged. R. v. Butcher, Bell, 6; 28 L. J. (M. C.) 14; 8 Cox, 77 (C. C. R.). K. represented to B. that he had a quantity of good tobacco, and induced B. to agree to buy some. P. was with K. at the time, and it was arranged that P. was to deliver the tobacco to B., and that B. was to pay P. for K. P. afterwards delivered to B. two bales purporting to be tobacco, as in pursuance of the contract, and received payment from B. The bales contained little else but rubbish; K. and P. were parties to the fraud. It was held on these facts that K. was liable to be convicted on an indictment charging him with obtaining money from B. by falsely pretending that he was possessed of a quantity of good tobacco. R. v. Kerrigan, L. & C. 383; 33 L. J. (M. C.) 71; 9 Cox, 441 (C. C. R.).

It is not necessary to allege that the money, etc., obtained was the property of the person whom it was intended to defraud (see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 88, ante, p. 593), nor to allege that the pretence was made with intent of obtaining the money, etc.; it is sufficient to show that the pretence was made, that the money, etc., was obtained thereby, with intent to defraud, and that the pretence was false to the knowledge of the defendant. Hamilton v. R., 9 Q. B. 271. It is still, however, necessary to allege in the indictment and to prove that the defendant obtained the money, etc., "with intent to defraud," and if those words be omitted the indictment is bad, and cannot be amended under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 1 (ante, p. 52), by inserting them. R. v. James, 12 Cox, 127, Lush, J. If it be a valuable security that was obtained, the indictment need not, it seems, show it to be still unsatisfied; at all events, it is good after verdict without such averment. Id.

Loans.]—The offence is completed by the obtaining of the money, etc., and it is no defence, where the indictment charges the obtaining of money, that the money had been obtained only by way of a loan, and that the defendant intends to repay it; R. v. Crossley, 2 M. & Rob. 17; because the property in money that is lent passes as much in a case of loan as on a sale, there being no expectation that the same money which is lent will be returned. See R. v. Burgon, Dears. & B. 11, 20, Crompton, J. Where, however, a chattel is obtained by way of loan, the property in the chattel does not pass (see per Crompton, J., supra), and since to constitute an obtaining by false pretences it is equally essential, as in larceny, that there shall be an intention to deprive the owner wholly of his property, if it appears that the defendant had no such intention, but merely intended to obtain the use of the chattel for a limited time, he cannot be convicted of obtaining the chattel by false pretences. R. v. Kilham, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 261; 39 L. J. (M. C.) 109: 11 Cox, 561. And therefore where the defendant, by false pretences, obtained from a livery stable keeper a horse on hire, rode it himself during the time of hiring, and afterwards returned it to the stables, it was held that he could not be convicted of obtaining the horse by false pretences. Id. See R. v. Boulton (post, p. 611). As to obtaining credit under false pretences, see 32 & 33 Vict. c. 62, s. 13 (1), post, Book II. Part II. ch. v. s. 1, tit. "Frauds upon Creditors."

Venue.]—The offence is completed by the obtaining of the money; and therefore where it was transmitted in a letter, posted by the defendant's request in county A., but which reached him in county B., it was held that this was an obtaining of the money in county A., and that the venue was rightly laid there. R. v. Jones, 1 Den. 551; 19 L. J. (M. C.) 162; 4 Cox, 198 (C. C. R.). See R. v. Buttery, 4 B. & Ald. 179 cit.: R. v. Ellis [1899] 1 Q. B. 230; 68 L. J. (Q. B.) 103; 19 Cox, 210 (C. C. R.), where it was held that a bankrupt who, by means of false representations made verbally in Scotland, obtained goods and credit for goods delivered in the county of Durham, was guilty of an offence in Durham, and was rightly tried in that county. Again, where the defendant, by means of a false pretence contained in a letter written by him in the county of C., received there the money obtained thereby, which money was sent to him by the prosecutor in a registered letter; the letter containing the false pretence being received by the prosecutor in the county of the borough of C., and the registered letter being posted by him in the county of the borough of C., the venue was held to be well laid in the county of the borough. R. v. Leech, Dears. 642; 25 L. J. (M. C.) 77; 7 Cox, 100 (C. C. R.): R. v. Allington, 9 Times L. R. 199 (C. C. R.). See R. v. Cooke, 1 F. & F. 64, in which case Coleridge, J., held that the defendant could be tried at Northampton, where he wrote the letter containing the false pretence, although the money was paid over in Westminster. And where the defendant wrote and posted at Nottingham a letter, addressed to G. at a town in France, containing a false pretence, by means of which he induced G. to send from France to Nottingham a draft for 150*l.*, which defendant there cashed, it was held that there was jurisdiction to try the defendant at Nottingham, the pretence having been made at Nottingham, where also the money obtained by means of it was received. R. v. Holmes, 12 Q. B. D. 23; 53 L. J. (M. C.) 37 (C. C. R.); and see ante, p. 43.

Evidence.

The prosecutor must prove the making of the pretence, as stated in the indictment: and any variance in substance between the pretence laid and that proved will be fatal. On the trial of an indictment, charging that the defendant obtained a horse of the prosecutor by falsely pretending that he was the servant of Hardman of S., the evidence was that the defendant at first represented himself as a servant of Hardman of S., but that afterwards learning that the prosecutor had supposed that he had said that he was the servant of Harding of B., he adopted that view, and virtually said that he was the servant of Harding, late of B., and now of S. It was proved that the prosecutor parted with his horse in the belief that the defendant was the servant of Harding. On these facts it was held that the defendant could not be convicted on the indictment, as the real pretence that operated on the prosecutor's mind was not alleged therein. R. v. Bulmer, L. & C. 476; 33 L. J. (M. C.) 171; 9 Cox, 492 (C. C. R.). Where the pretence laid was, that the defendant said "that he had paid a sum of money into the Bank of England," and the proof was, that he said that the money had been paid into the Bank, without saying by whom, the defendant was acquitted for the variance; Lord Ellenborough holding that the assertions were different in substance. R. v. Plestow, 1 Camp. 494. See R. v. Douglass, Id. 212. But it is not necessary to prove the whole of the pretence charged; proof of part of the pretence and that the money was obtained by such part, is sufficient. R. v. Hill, R. & R. 190; R. v. Lince, 12 Cox, 451 (C. C. R.). It is sufficient if the actual substantial pretence which was the main inducement to part with the money, etc., is alleged in the indictment and proved, although it may be shown by the evidence that other matters not laid in the indictment in some measure operated as an inducement upon the prosecutor's mind. R. v. Hewgill, Dears. 315 (C. C. R.): R. v. English, 12 Cox, 171, Cockburn, J.: R. v. Lince, 12 Cox, 451 (C. C. R.). If, however, two false pretences are laid as together conducing to the fraud, and the jury find a general verdict of guilty, and it afterwards appear that one of them is not a sufficient false pretence within the statute, that will invalidate the indictment altogether on a writ of error. R. v. Wickham (ante, p. 605). If the false pretence be in writing, it may be proved by secondary evidence, if the paper be lost before the trial. R. v. Chadwick, 6 C. & P. 181. The opinion formed by the prosecutor as to the position or occupation of the prisoner upon the receipt of a letter from the prisoner respecting the goods the subject of the indictment (such letter being put into the prosecutor's hands at the trial) is admissible in evidence. R. v. King [1897] 1 Q. B. 214 (C. C. R.), (ante, p. 604).

He must next prove that the goods, etc., stated in the indictment, or some part of them (for the rule in this respect is the same as in larceny) (see ante, p. 434, et seq.), were obtained from him by means of the pretences alleged. Proof that money was actually paid to the defendant by the wife of A. B. in her husband's absence, but by his authority, in consequence of false pretences made by the defendant to A. B., is sufficient to support an indictment charging the defendant with obtaining money by false pretences from A. B. R. v. Moseley, L. & C. 92; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 24; 9 Cox, 16 (C. C. R.). Where a false pretence was made to the secretary of a friendly society, and the secretary accompanied the prisoner to the treasurer, who paid over the money, it was held that the treasurer was merely a mechanical medium, and that the false pretence to and obtaining from the secretary was proved. R. v. Rouse, 4 Cox, 7, Erle, J.: cf. R. v. Taylor, 65 J. P. 547 (C. C. R.). The words in the statute are "any money, chattel, or valuable security."

Intent to defraud.]—This may be implied sufficiently from the facts of the case. Where A. owed B. a debt, of which he could not get payment, and C., B.'s servant, went to A.'s wife, and obtained from her two sacks of malt, saying that B. had bought them of A., and C. knew this to be false, but took the malt to B., his master, to enable him to pay himself the debt, it was ruled that C. could not be convicted of obtaining the malt by false pretences. R. v. Williams, 7 C. & P. 354, Coleridge, J. The fact that the defendant at the time he obtained goods by false pretences intended to pay for them when it should be in his power to do so affords no defence to an indictment for obtaining such goods by false pretences. R. v. Naylor, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 4; 35 L. J. (M. C.) 61; 10 Cox, 149. As to the effect of a verdict of guilty, to which the jury add that there is not sufficient evidence of an intent to defraud, and therefore recommend the prisoner to mercy, see R. v. Gray, 17 Cox, 299 (C. C. R.) (ante, p. 221).

As to where evidence of other obtainings is admissible in order to prove guilty knowledge, see post, p. 615.

It is sufficient to show that the pretence was made, that the money, etc., was obtained thereby, with intent to defraud, and that the pretence was false to the knowledge of the defendant. Hamilton v. R., 9 Q. B. 271.

Falsity.]—Lastly, it must be proved that the pretences made use of were false in fact: or, in other words, the averments negativing the pretences must be proved. But it does not seem to be essential that they should all be proved; if so many of them as show the falsity of the substance of the pretence be proved, it would seem to be sufficient. Thus, under the precedent (ante, p. 595), if it were to appear in evidence that the defendant was really the servant of K. O., yet if it were also to appear that he had no directions from him to get the cloth in question, and that, after he had obtained it, he converted it to his own use, it would be sufficient. Nor is it necessary that the falsity of the pretences should be shown by direct evidence. Thus, where the pretences charged were, that the defendant had a carriage and pair, and expected it down in a few days, and that he had large property abroad, and there was no direct evidence to show that he had no carriage or no property abroad, but it was proved that three days before he made the pretence he was in another place assuming to be a man of position and wealth, but was in a destitute condition and unable to pay his hotel and other bills, this was held to be evidence from which the jury might well infer that the pretences were false. R. v. Howarth, 11 Cox, 588 (C. C. R.). Where the defendant, the agent of a life assurance company, had received from the prosecutor a premium for the renewal of a life policy for the year 1883, but had not paid over such premium to the company, and had represented to them that it had not been paid by the prosecutor, in consequence of which the company had treated the policy as lapsed, and the defendant afterwards represented to the prosecutor that the policy was still in existence, and so induced him to pay to him the premium for its renewal for the year 1884, it was held that he was guilty of obtaining such last-mentioned premium by false pretences. R. v. Powell, 54 L. J. (M. C.) 26; 15 Cox, 568. Where the defendants were charged with obtaining money by colour and pretence of their being collectors of the property-tax, and it appeared in evidence that they had in fact been appointed collectors by the commissioners, though in an informal manner; the pretence was held not to be false within the meaning of the Act. R. v. Dobson, 7 East, 218. Upon an indictment for obtaining money by a false pretence made by the defendant that he was an attorney, it is not necessary to prove the negative in any other way than by the production of the Law List in which the defendant's name does not appear. R. v. Wenham, 10 Cox, 222 (ante, p. 355).

Chattel.]—A railway ticket which enabled the defendant to travel free by the railway from B. to H., and was to be given back to the railway company at H., was held to be a "chattel" within this section. R. v. Boulton, 1 Den. 508; 2 C. & K. 917; 19 L. J. (M. C.) 67 (C. C. R.) This case seems to conflict with R. v. Kilham, ante, p. 609), as the defendant did not intend, nor was it necessary for his purpose to intend, wholly to deprive the railway company of their property in the ticket; but it is distinguishable from R. v. Kilham, in this respect, that the defendant by using the ticket for the purpose of travelling on the railway entirely converted it to his own use, for the only purpose for which it was capable of being applied. See the judgment in R. v. Kilham (ubi supra). A dog, not being the subject of larceny at common law, is not a chattel within this Act. R. v. Robinson, Bell, 34 (ante, p. 473).

Valuable security.]—The defendant, who was the secretary to a burial society, had, by the false pretence of a death, obtained from the president of the society an order on the treasurer in the following form:—"B. United Burial Society, No. 23. Bolton, Sept. 1, 1853. Mr. A. E., treasurer:—Please to pay the bearer 2*l.* 10*s.*, Greenhalgh, and charge the same to the above society, R. L., president:" this was held to be a "valuable security" within 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 53 (rep.), as explained by s. 5 of that Act (see now 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 1, ante, p. 427). R. v. Greenhalgh, Dears. 267; 6 Cox, 257 (C. C. R.) Where, in order to induce his bankers to pay his cheques, a defendant drew a bill on a person on whom he had no right to draw, and which had no chance of being paid, in consequence of which the bankers paid money for him, it was held not to be within the Act, because he only obtained credit, not any specific sum on the bill. R. v. Wavell, 1 Mood. C. C. 224. See R. v. Crosby, 1 Cox, 10: R. v. Garrett, Dears. 232; 23 L. J. (M. C.) 20; 6 Cox, 260 (C. C. R.). This, however, would seem to come under s. 13, sub-s. 1 of the Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), which is expressly aimed at the obtaining of credit under false pretences, or other fraud. (See post, p. 613.) Where the prisoner was charged with obtaining a filly by the false pretence that he was a gentleman's servant, and had lived at Bream, and had bought twenty horses at Bream fair; and it appeared that he bought the filly of the prosecutor for 11*l.*, making him this statement, which was false, and telling him also that he would come down to the Cross Keys and pay him: and the prosecutor stated that he parted with the filly because he expected the prisoner would come to the Cross Keys and pay him, and not because he believed that the prisoner was a gentleman's servant, etc.; the prisoner was held to be entitled to an acquittal. R. v. Dale, 7 C. & P. 352. Where the prisoner had fraudulently obtained goods on approval, and had falsely represented to the prosecutor that she was the daughter of a Mrs. Jones of C., but there was no evidence to show that the prosecutor knew Mrs. Jones of C., or that the goods had not been delivered to the prisoner before she made the false representation, or that the goods were parted with by the prosecutor on the faith of the false representation, it was held that the conviction of the prisoner for obtaining goods by false pretences could not be sustained. R. v. Jones, 15 Cox, 475 (C. C. R.); cf. R. v. Hazzlewood, 48 J. P. 151 (C. C. R.). But where the grantor of a bill of sale sold the goods subject to the bill, without disclosing its existence, it was held that the onus of proof that he had authority from the grantee to sell the goods was upon him, and that the act of selling constituted a false pretence that he was absolute owner of the goods sold. R. v. Sampson, 52 L. T. 772; 49 J. P. 807 (C. C. R.), in which R. v. Hazzlewood was not followed.

Conviction for attempt where prosecutor not deceived.]—Where the defendant offered a chain in pledge to a pawnbroker, which he falsely stated to be silver, but the pawnbroker stated that he advanced money on it, not in consequence of the defendant's statement, but in reliance on its withstanding a test which he himself applied to it, it was held that the defendant could not be convicted of obtaining the money by means of the false pretence, but that he was properly convicted of attempting to obtain money by false pretences. R. v. Roebuck, Dears. & B. 24; 25 L. J. (M. C.) 101; 7 Cox, 126 (C. C. R.). So, also, wherever the prosecutor himself knows the falsehood of the pretence, but parts with his money or goods notwithstanding, the defendant cannot be convicted of obtaining by false pretences. R. v. Mills, Dears. & B. 205; 26 L. J. (M. C.) 79; 7 Cox, 263 (C. C. R.). In R. v. Ady, 7 C. & P. 140, the head note is to the effect that "if the defendant obtained the money by a false presence, knowing it to be false, it is no answer to show that the party from whom he obtained it laid a plan to entrap him into the commission of the offence." In R. v. Mills, R. v. Ady was cited, and it was pointed out that Patteson, J., left to the jury the question whether the prosecutor parted with his money in belief in the pretence. And a defendant in such a case as R. v. Ady may be convicted of attempting to obtain by false pretences, even where the indictment charges him with obtaining; 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 9 (ante, p. 219: R. v. Roebuck, ubi supra; or he may, under such a state of facts, be indicted for the attempt simply. R. v. Hensler, 11 Cox, 570 (C. C. R.). But the fact of the prosecutor having the means of such knowledge will not of itself excuse the defendant from being convicted of obtaining by false pretences; for example, where the defendant falsely represented a 1*l.* Irish bank note to be a 5*l.* note, and thereby obtained the full value of a 5*l.* note; though the prosecutor could read, and the note on the face of it furnished obvious means of detecting the fraud, the defendant was held to be properly convicted. R. v. Jessop, Dears. and B. 442; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 70; 7 Cox, 399 (C. C. R.). Where the defendant was indicted for conspiring with others to obtain money by false pretences, it was held to be no bar to his conviction that the prosecutor had the intention of cheating the defendant if he could. R. v. Hudson, Bell, 263; 29 L. J. (M. C.) 145; 8 Cox, 305 (C. C. R.).

Obtaining board and lodging.]—Where the prisoner was received as a lodger into a house without making any false pretence, but afterwards falsely stated to his landlady that he had come directly from the house of a person whom she knew, and that he had left clothes there, and at the time of making this statement requested to be provided with board as well as lodging, and the landlady knowing the person to whom the prisoner referred, and believing his statement that he had come from that person's house and had clothes there, supplied him with meat and drink as a boarder, it was held that on these facts he was rightly convicted of obtaining goods—the meat and drink supplied to him as board—by false pretences. R. v. Burton, 16 Cox, 62 (C. C. R.). The defendant, by falsely pretending that he was a naval officer, induced the prosecutrix to enter into a contract with him to board and lodge him at a guinea a week, under which contract he was lodged and supplied with various articles of food. It was held that a conviction for obtaining the articles of food by false pretences could not be supported, for that the obtaining of the food was too remotely the result of the false pretence. R. v. Gardner, Dears. & B. 40; 25 L. J. (M. C.) 100; 7 Cox, 136 (C. C. R.): R. v. Bryan, 2 F. & F. 567. See, however, the comments on R. v. Gardner and R. v. Bryan, in R. v. Martin, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 56; 36 L. J. (M. C.) 20. These cases can now be dealt with as obtaining credit by means of fraud within s. 13 of the Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62, post, Book II. Part II. ch. v. s. 1). See R. v. Jones [1898] 1 Q. B. 119; 67 L. J. (Q. B.) 41; 19 Cox, 87 (C. C. R.), where the defendant went to a restaurant and ordered and ate a meal knowing that he could not pay for it. See also R. v. Wyatt [1904] 1 K. B. 188 (C. C. R.)

pretences, it is not necessary that the chattel should have been in existence when the false pretence was made, but that the obtaining is within the statute, if the pretence is a continuing one, so that the chattel is made and delivered in pursuance of the pretence, and that the question whether the pretence is or is not a continuing one, is one of fact for the jury. Another instance of a continuing false pretence is where the defendant by a false pretence obtained a cheque from the prosecutor, which the banker upon whom it was drawn refused to pay, owing to there being a material omission in the body of it. The defendant thereupon returned the cheque to the prosecutor, who immediately tore it up, drew another for the same amount, and gave it to the defendant, who got it cashed and appropriated the money to his own use. It was held that the false pretence which induced the prosecutor to give the first cheque continued in force, and induced him to give the second cheque, and that therefore the money which the defendant obtained by getting it cashed, was obtained by him by false pretences. R. v. Greathead, 14 Cox, 108 (C. C. R.).

On an indictment for attempting to obtain property by false pretences, it was proved that entries for two handicap races in athletic sports were sent to the secretary of the sports in the name of S., containing statements as to the last four races in which S. had run. The prisoner personated S. at the sports and came first in both races. The entries sent in were not in the writing either of S. or the prisoner. After the first race the prisoner was asked whether he was S., and whether the performances specified in the entry were really prisoner's. He answered both questions falsely in the affirmative. Held that the attempt to obtain the prizes was not too remote from the pretence, and that the prisoner was rightly convicted. R. v. Button [1900] 2 Q. B. 597; 69 L. J. (Q. B.) 901; 19 Cox, 568 (C. C. R.), disapproving R. v. Larner, 14 Cox, 497; and following R. v. Dickenson, 2 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 511: Roscoe Cr. Ev. (12th ed.) 432. Where the defendant, by false and fraudulent representations as to the value and profits of his business, induced the prosecutor to enter into partnership with him, and to advance 500*l.* as part of the capital of the concern, and the prosecutor, after such advance, recognized and acted in the partnership; it was held that this was not obtaining money by false pretences within the meaning of the statute, for the prosecutor, as partner, continued to be interested in the money. R. v. Watson, Dears. & B. 348; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 18; 7 Cox, 364 (C. C. R.) Parol evidence may be given of the false pretences laid in the indictment, though a deed between the parties, stating a different consideration for parting with the money, be put in evidence for the prosecution; such deed having been made for the purpose of the fraud. R. v. Adamson, 2 Mood. C. C. 286; 1 C. & K. 192.

Distinction between larceny and obtaining by false pretences.]—Formerly, if the evidence proved not only an intent to cheat or defraud, but also established a pre-existing animus furandi, and a constructive taking, such as to constitute larceny, the misdemeanor being merged in the felony, the defendant was entitled to his acquittal. R. v. Pear, 2 East, P. C. 685; 1 Leach, 212; 4 R. R., 703. But now, under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 88 (ante, p. 593), the defendant may be convicted, although it appear at the trial that the offence amounts to larceny, and not merely to obtaining money, etc., by false pretences. The safer course, therefore, to adopt, where it is doubtful whether the offence is larceny or obtaining goods under a false pretence, is to indict for the misdemeanor: in which case, if the offence should turn out to be larceny, the prisoner may nevertheless be convicted by force of the statute. These two offences are sometimes difficult to be distinguished, in cases where there has been a constructive taking. R. v. Essex, Dears. & B. 371; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 20; 7 Cox, 384 (C. C. R.). R. v. Solomons, 17 Cox, 93 (ante, p. 451); but the difficulties arising from this circumstance appear to be obviated by this provision of the statute. It is not, however, sufficient under this provision to prove any larceny. The true meaning of the provision is, that if the misdemeanor is proved as it is laid in the indictment, the defendant is not to be acquitted of the misdemeanor simply because the case amounts to larceny. R. v. Bulmer, L. & C. 476; 33 L. J. (M. C.) 171; 9 Cox, 492 (C. C. R.). Where the indictment averred an obtaining of a particular sum of money, with intent to defraud the prosecutor of the same, and it appeared that the intent was to defraud him of a part only of that sum, the rest being really due, it was held that the prisoner might nevertheless be convicted. R. v. Leonard, 1 Den. 304; 2 C. & K. 514; 3 Cox, 284. Where goods obtained on a contract induced by the false pretences of the prisoner that he is another person, it would seem that the contract is null (Cundy v. Lindsay, 3 App. Cas. 459; 47 L. J. (Q. B.) 581, and that the offence might be treated as larceny by a trick, see R. v. George, 65 J. P. 729. It is only necessary to allege in the indictment, and to prove, an intent to defraud generally, without alleging or proving an intent to defraud any particular person. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 88 (ante, p. 593).

Guilty knowledge—Evidence of other obtainings.]—On an indictment for attempting to obtain money by falsely pretending that a ring was composed of diamonds, which in fact was composed of crystals, evidence is admissible of a false pretence by the defendant on a prior occasion to another person that a chain was gold, whereas it was plated, and on another distinct occasion, that a ring was of diamonds, which it was not, on the ground that these previous transactions are evidence of the guilty knowledge of the prisoner at the time he made the false pretence charged in the indictment. R. v Francis, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 128; 43 L. J. (M. C.) 97; 12 Cox, 612. And where the prisoner was indicted for obtaining eggs by false pretences, he having falsely represented by advertisements in newspapers that he was carrying on a bonâ fide dairyman's business, whereas in truth and in fact the business was a "bogus" one, evidence that on occasions subsequent to the transactions the subject of the charge he had obtained eggs from other persons by means of similar advertisements was held admissible. R. v. Rhodes [1899] 1 Q. B. 77; 19 Cox, 182 (C. C. R.) where R. v. Holt, Bell, 280; 30 L. J. (M. C.) 11; 8 Cox 411 (C. C. R.) is distinguished. And see the remarks on R. v. Holt, made by Blackburn, J., in R. v. Francis, and the general rules as to admission of such evidence (ante, pp. 310, 311).

The prisoner, having been acquitted on an indictment charging him with obtaining from A. a cheque by falsely pretending that another cheque which he then gave to A. was a good and valid order for the payment of money, was tried on a second indictment charging him with obtaining money from B. and C. by similar false pretences as to three other cheques: it was held that the evidence of A. which had been given on the first indictment, upon which the prisoner had been tried and acquitted, was admissible upon the trial of the second indictment. R. v. Ollis [1900] 1 Q. B. 758; 19 Cox 555 (C. C. R.). "The evidence was relevant as showing a course of conduct on the part of the accused, and a belief on his part that the cheques would not be met," Id. per Lord Russell of Killowen, L.C.J. It "tended to show that the conduct of the prisoner was not inadvertent or accidental, but was part of a systematic fraud:" Id. per Wright, J. On the same principle, where the prisoner was charged with obtaining credit by fraud under s. 13 (1) of the Debtors Act, 1869, in respect of food and lodging obtained by him from A., evidence of similar obtainings from B., C., and D. immediately preceding the commission of the alleged offence were held admissible. R. v. Wyatt [1904] 1 K. B. 188; 68 J. P. 34. And see R. v. Smith, 28th Jan. 1905, C. C. R.

The prisoner was indicted in four counts for obtaining money by false pretences from four persons named, the four statements alleged being the same in all these counts; in a fifth count, for inserting, with intent to defraud the Queen's subjects, an advertisement in a newspaper containing the false statements mentioned in the previous counts, and obtaining money thereby. It was shown at the trial that the prisoner had inserted in a newspaper an advertisement containing statements found to be false, offering permanent employment in the preparation of carte-de-visite papers, and adding, "Trial paper and instructions, 1*s.*," and giving an address. Six envelopes were found in the possession of the prisoner on his being apprehended, each directed to the address given, and containing an answer to the advertisement, and twelve postage stamps. Two hundred and eighty-one other letters were produced by a post-office clerk. These letters had been addressed to the prisoner under the address given in the advertisement, and had been received at the post office like the other letters; but, having been stopped by the post-office authorities, none of them had ever been in the prisoner's possession or custody; nor was any proof adduced that they were written by the persons from whom they purported to come. Each letter had been opened at the post-offie before production at the trial, and each contained twelve stamps. The two hundred and eighty-one letters were admitted in evidence. It was held that, under the circumstances, the letters were rightly received in evidence. R. v. Cooper, 1 Q. B. D. 19; 45 L. J. (M. C.) 15; 13 Cox, 123 (C. C. R.). In Re Pinter, 17 Cox, 497, an extradition case, it was held that dealing in 1890 under a false name with bonds stolen in 1883 and stopped, was some evidence to support a charge of falsely representing that they were current bonds, and honestly held. For other decisions on this subject, see ante, pp. 308–312.

Attempt.]—As every attempt to commit a crime is itself an indictable misdemeanor at common law (see ante, p. 2), wherever the intention to obtain money or goods by false pretences is manifested by any overt act, the party may be indicted for the attempt to commit the statutable misdemeanor. R. v. Hensler, 11 Cox, 570 (C. C. R.). And he may be convicted of the attempt to obtain, although the indictment charges an actual obtaining. See R v. Roebuck, Dears. & B. 24 (ante, p. 612). 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 9 (ante, p. 219). But where the indictment charges an attempt only, the nature of the attempt must be set forth in the indictment with reasonable certainty. And where the indictment stated that the defendant "did unlawfully attempt and endeavour fraudulently, falsely, and unlawfully to obtain from an insurance company a large sum of money, to wit, the sum of 22*l.* 10*s.*, with intent thereby then and there to cheat and defraud the said company," etc.; this was held insufficient. R. v. Marsh, 1 Den. 505; 19 L. J. (M. C.) 12. The defendant had contracted with the guardians of a poor-law union to deliver loaves of a specified weight to any poor person bringing a ticket from the relieving officer. The tickets were to be returned by the defendant at the end of each week, together with a statement of the number of tickets sent back, whereupon he would be credited for the amount, and the money would be paid at the time stipulated in the contract. The defendant delivered to certain poor people who brought tickets loaves of less than the certified weight, returned the tickets with a note of the number sent, and obtained credit in account for the loaves so delivered, but before the time for payment had arrived the fraud was discovered. It was held that the mere delivery of a less quantity of bread than that contracted for was a mere private fraud, no false weights or tokens having been used, and therefore not an indictable offence; but that the defendant was properly convicted of attempting to obtain money by false pretences; for although he had only obtained credit in account, and could not, therefore, have been convicted of the offence of actually obtaining money by false pretences, yet he had done all that was depending on himself towards the payment of the money, and was therefore guilty of the attempt; and that this was a case within 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 53 (rep.), because it was an attempt to obtain money by a false and fraudulent representation of an antecedent fact; it was not a mere sale of goods by a false pretence of their weight. R. v. Eagleton, Dears. 376, 515; 24 L. J. (M. C.) 158; 6 Cox, 559 (C. C. R.); and semble, that he could now be convicted of obtaining credit under false pretences under s. 13 (1) of the Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62).

Indictment for obtaining the Acceptance to a Bill of Exchange by False Pretences. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 90, ante p. 594.)

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—unlawfully, knowingly, and designedly did falsely pretend to one J. N., that [state the false pretence used, as in the precedents, ante, p. 595], by means of which said false pretence the said J. S. did then unlawfully and fraudulently induce the said J. N. to accept a certain valuable security, that is to say, a bill of exchange for one hundred pounds, purporting to be [describe the bill], with intent thereby then to defraud and injure the said J. N.; whereas in truth and in fact [here negative the false pretences, as ante, pp. 595, 596]; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

In this indictment it is necessary to name the person intended to be injured or defrauded, as 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 88 (ante, p. 593) does not apply to the offence.

Misdemeanor: penal servitude for not less than three years and not exceeding five years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 90 (ante, p. 594); 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to fining the offender and requiring him to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 431).

Evidence.

The evidence will be governed by the like rules as would apply to an indictment under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 88 (see ante, p. 597, et seq.). The prosecutor must prove the pretences as stated in the indictment: that by means of them or some of them he was induced to accept the bill of exchange; their falsehood; and the intent to defraud, which of course will generally be implied from the circumstances of the case.

Where the prisoner was convicted on an indictment charging that by the false pretence to the prosecutor that he "was prepared to pay him" 100*l.*, he did then unlawfully and fraudulently induce the prosecutor to "make a certain valuable security," to wit, a promissory note for 100*l.*, with intent thereby to defraud the prosecutor, it was held that the indictment was good, as it must be taken by necessary inference to allege a false pretence by the prisoner of an existing fact, viz. that he was prepared to pay the prosecutor 100*l.*, and had the money ready for him on his signing the promissory note; and that the indictment showed an offence within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 90, of fraudulently causing a person to "make a valuable security," although the promissory note in question might not be of value until it had been delivered into the prisoner's hands. R. v. Gordon, 23 Q. B. D. 354; 58 L. J. (M. C.) 117; 16 Cox, 622 (C. C. R.). The facts of this case would bring it within the Money Lenders Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 51), s. 4, ante, p. 594.

Indictment for winning Money at Cards, etc., by Fraud. (8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 17, ante, p. 593.)

Berks, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present, that W. M., on the 9th day of June, in the year of our Lord, 1904, by fraud, unlawful device and ill-practice in playing at and with cards ("cards, dice, tables or other game, or in bearing a part in the stakes, wagers, or adventures, or in betting on the sides or hands of them that do play, or in wagering on the event of any game, sport, pastime, or exercise") unlawfully did win from one H. F. B., to a certain person, whose name is to the jurors unknown ("to himself or any other or others") a sum of money (to wit), fifty pounds ("any sum of money or valuable thing") of the monies of the said H. F. B. And so the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do say that the said W. M., then in manner and form aforesaid, unlawfully did obtain the said sum of money (to wit), fifty pounds, so being of the monies of the said H. F. B. as aforesaid, from the said H. F. B. by a false pretence with intent to cheat and defraud the said H. F. B. of the said sum of money (to wit), fifty pounds, against the form [as ante, p. 465]. (Second Count.)—And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present that the said W. M. afterwards (to wit), on the day and year aforesaid, by fraud, unlawful device, and ill-practice in playing at and with cards, unlawfully did win from the said H. F. B., to a certain person, whose name is to the jurors unknown, a certain sum of money with intent to cheat him, the said H. F. B., to the evil example of all others in the like case offending, against the form [as ante, p. 465]. [An indictment in the form contained in the second count was held good after verdict, although it was objected that it should have alleged that the money won was the property of the person defrauded. R. v. Moss, Dears. & B. 104; 26 L. J. (M. C.) 9; 7 Cox, 200 (C. C. R.). Where the offence was committed by two or more, and there is any doubt whether the game or fraud comes within 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 17, a count should be added as in R. v. Hudson, Bell, 263; 29 L. J. (M. C.) 145; 8 Cox, 305 (C. C. R.), charging a conspiracy to cheat.]

Misdemeanor: punishable as obtaining money by false pretences. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 17 (ante, p. 593).

Evidence.

To maintain the indictment, it is necessary not only to prove that W. M. won of H. F. B. the money, etc., laid in the indictment, or some part of it, see R. v. Darley, 1 Stark. (N. P.) 359, but also to prove that it was won by "fraud or unlawful device or ill-practice." See R. v. Rogier, 1 B. & C. 272; 2 D. & R. 431; 25 R. R. 393. A variance between the indictment and evidence as to the game played (if stated) would be fatal, unless amended. See Cooke v. Stratford, 13 M. & W. 379. It does not seem, however, to be necessary to state the name of the game. As to what frauds and games come within 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 17, see R. v. Bailey, 4 Cox, 390: R. v. Hudson, ubi supra: R. v. O'Connor, 15 Cox, 3, Lush, J., where a watch was obtained by tossing coins for a wager.

Common Law Cheats.

It is a cheat punishable on indictment at common law to obtain money from another by a false message or token; 1 Hale, 506, and see 3 Chit. Cr. L. 994, et seq. For other cheats indictable at common law, see 2 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 454; Tremaine, P.C. 85 to 110. They include wilful sale of unwholesome food. R. v. Dixon, 4 Camp. 12; 3 M. & Sel. 11; 15 R. R. 381; selling a forged picture, R. v. Closs, Dears. & B. 460; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 54; and the fraudulent use of devices or tokens to support a false and fraudulent statement. R. v. Lara, 6 T. R. 565; 2 Leach, 647, 652; 2 East, P. C. 819: R. v. Ward, 2 Str. 747; and cf. R. v. Vreones [1891] 1 Q. B. 360; 60 L. J. (M. C.) 62; 17 Cox, 267; and post, tit. "Perjury;" and see also 1 Hawk. c. 71; Fabian's case [1664] Kel. (J.) 89; 1 East, P. C. 194; and see 2 East, P. C. 816. But it is not an offence at common law to make short delivery under a contract, unless false weights, measures or tokens are used as the general course of dealing or to all or many customers, or there is a conspiracy to cheat. R. v. Wheatly, 2 Burr. 1125, 1127, Ld. Mansfield, L.C.J.

Indictment for Selling by False Scales (common law).

Middlesex, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present, that J. S., on the first day of August, in the year of our Lord ——, and from thence until the taking of this inquisition, did use and exercise the trade and business of a [grocer], and during that time did deal in the buying and selling by weight of [teas, sugars, spices], and of divers other goods, wares, and merchandise; and that the said J. S., being a person of a wicked and depraved mind, and contriving and fraudulently intending to cheat and defraud the subjects of our said lord the King, whilst he was and continued to be a [grocer] as aforesaid, to wit, on the said first day of August, in the year aforesaid, and on divers other days and times between that day and the day of the taking of this inquisition, knowingly, wilfully, falsely, fraudulently, and deceitfully did keep in a certain shop wherein he, the said J. S., did so as aforesaid carry on his said trade, a certain false pair of scales for the weighing of goods, wares, and merchandises by him sold in the way of his said trade, and which said scales were then, by artful and deceitful means and contrivance, so made and constructed as to cause the goods, wares, and merchandises weighed and sold thereby to appear of greater weight, to wit, of a greater weight by two ounces in every quantity of goods weighed thereby, than the real and true weight thereof: and that the said J. S., well knowing the said scales to be false as aforesaid, did then, to wit, on the several days and times aforesaid, wilfully, falsely, fraudulently and deceitfully sell and utter to divers subjects of our lord the King, divers goods, wares and merchandises in the way of his said trade, weighed in and sold by the said false scales, and which goods, wares and merchandises were very much deficient and short of the weight at and for which the same were so sold by the said J. S., as aforesaid, to wit, by the weight of two ounces: to the great damage and deceit of his Majesty's said subjects, to the evil example of all others in the like case offending, and against the peace of our lord the King, his crown and dignity. If you can prove any particular instance of a sale by those scales to a particular person you may add a count upon it; or, if you think your evidence not sufficiently specific to maintain the count above given, you may add a count or counts in a more general form. See 6 Went. 389. Stating the sale to have been "to divers subjects of our said lord the King to the jurors unknown" has been held sufficient. R. v. Gibbs, 1 Str. 497. An indictment for selling by false weights or measures may readily be framed from the above precedent. For other precedents, Trem. P. C. 85–110; 3 Chit. Cr. L. 1000.

Misdemeanor at common law, punishable by fine or imprisonment (with or without hard labour for the whole or any part of such imprisonment, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 29, ante, p. 238), or both. It is also summarily punishable under the Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 49).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant carried on the business mentioned in the indictment; that the false scales described in the indictment were found in his shop or warehouse, etc., and that he has used them in weighing goods sold by him to his customers. If you have proof that the scales were used by his shopman or servants, it will be sufficient, as it will be presumed that they were used by his orders (see ante, p. 35).

Where a cheat or fraud at common law against a private individual is charged, there are two conditions precedent to the offence: (1) that the Act has been completed; (2) that there has been injury to the individual. R. v. Vreones [1891] 1 Q. B. 360; 60 L. J. (M. C.) 62, per Pollock, B.

If a man in the course of his trade or business publicly carried on, puts a false mark or token upon a spurious article, so as to pass it off as a genuine one, and the article is sold and money obtained by means of the false mark or token, he is indictable for a cheat at common law. R. v. Closs, Dears. & B. 460; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 54. See R. v. Worrell, Trem. 106; R. v. Farmer, Id. 197. The forgery of a trade-mark is also punishable as a misdemeanor under the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28), post, Book II. Part II. chap. v. s. 2. And the forgery of initials and frauds in the sale of paintings, etc., are punishable in a summary way under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68. As to frauds in the stamping and sale of chain cables and anchors, see 62 & 63 Vict. c. 28, ss. 13, 14, 15, 16, which supersede previous enactments on the same subject.

Indictment for Burglary, and Larceny to the value of 5*l.* (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 52, ante, p. 621.)

Surrey, to wit: The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present, that J. S., on the first day of June, in the year of our Lord ——, about the hour of eleven of the clock in the night of the same day, the dwelling-house of J. N., situate at the parish of B., in the county of S., feloniously and burglariously did break and enter, with intent the goods and chattels of one K. O., in the said dwelling-house then being, feloniously and burglariously to steal, take, and carry away; and then in the said dwelling-house, one silver sugar-basin of the value of three pounds, six silver table-spoons of the value of three pounds, and twelve silver tea-spoons of the value of two pounds, of the goods and chattels of the said K. O., in the said dwelling-house then being found, feloniously and burglariously did steal, take, and carry away; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

This form of count charges two offences. R. v. Hungerford, 2 East, P. C. 518: R. v. Withal, 1 Leach, 88; but has always been held good, notwithstanding the rules against duplicity (vide ante, p. 82). The second felony should be specifically stated. R. v. Bailey, 23 L. J. (M. C.) 13; Dears. 224. As to indictments for burglary with intent to commit "rape," see R. v. Watkins, C. & Mar. 264, 2 Mood. C. C. 217. The name of the owner or occupier of the house must be stated. R. v. White, 1 Leach, 252; 2 East, P. C. 513, 780. The word "burglariously" has been held sufficient to describe the offence without stating nocturnal entry. R. v. Thompson, 2 Cox, 377, 445, Patteson, J.: sed cont. cf. R. v. Waddington, 2 East, P. C. 513.

If there be any doubt as to the ownership of the house or goods, you may add other counts accordingly. It seems, however, that no ownership of the goods need be stated. R. v. Clarke, 1 C. & K. 421. Also, as burglary is a breaking and entering of a dwelling-house, with intent to commit any felony (and whether a felony at common law or by statute is immaterial, 1 Hawk. c. 38, s. 38), if there be any doubt of the intent with which the offence was committed, it may be varied in different counts accordingly. The intent to steal, as well as the stealing, ought to be charged; 1 Hale, 559; but where an indictment for burglariously breaking and entering a dwelling-house, and then and there stealing goods therein, omitted to state the intent, it was held that the defendant might be convicted of the burglary if the larceny were proved, but not otherwise. R. v. Furnival, R. & R. 445. Further, if it be doubted whether the building is in strictness a dwelling-house a count should be added under s. 55 (post, p. 644). An indictment under section 54 will be in the same form, omitting the words "break and," and the words "and burglariously." Venue: 7 G. 4, c. 64, s. 12 (ante, p. 43), applies to burglary: R. v. Ruck, 2 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 45, 46, n.

Felony (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 52): penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 52; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 431). As to the punishment for the larceny, see s. 60 (ante, p. 622).

This offence is now triable at quarter sessions, but the justices may commit for trial at assizes if to do so appears to be in the interests of justice. 59 & 60 Vict. c. 57, s. 1 (ante, p. 623): and see ante, p. 126.

Evidence.

Burglary, at common law, is the breaking and entering of the dwelling-house of another in the night-time, with intent to commit a felony therein: 1 Hale, 549, 556; 1 Hawk. c. 38, ss. 1, 2; 4 Bl. Com. 224; 3 Co. Inst. 63; 2 Stephen Hist. Cr. L. 56, 3 Id. 150; R. v. Polly, 1 C. & K. 77. A man cannot be indicted for burglary in his own house. Kel. (J.), 84: 2 East, P. C. 502, 506. At common law it would seem that a church may be the subject of burglary: 3 Co. Inst. 64; 1 Hale, 559: R. v. Baker, 3 Cox, 581; but church breaking is now dealt with under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 50 (ante, p. 621). By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 51 (ante, p. 621), the breaking out of the dwelling-house of another in the night-time, having entered it with intent to commit felony, or having committed a felony while in it, is also declared to be a burglary. In order to maintain the above indictment, the prosecutor must prove that the defendant broke and entered the dwelling-house of J. N., in the night-time, with an intent to steal the goods of K. O.: and whether he succeed or fail in this, he may proceed to prove a larceny of the goods of K. O. in the dwelling-house of J. N. to the value of 5*l.*, in the manner directed post, p. 642, and if he succeed in proving the larceny, but fail in proving it to have been committed in the dwelling-house of J. N., or the goods to have been of the requisite value, the defendant may be convicted of the simple larceny.

Having made these few general observations, we shall now proceed to state the evidence in burglary more particularly.

About the hour of eleven in the night.]—Until 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 86, s. 4 (rep.), which first declared that, for the purpose of burglary, the night should be considered to commence at 9 p.m., and to conclude at 6 a.m. of the next day, many nice questions arose as to what fell within the meaning of "the night-time." By the old authorities with reference to this subject, the day was divided into three parts: daylight, twilight, and night. If the breaking and entering were in the night, it was burglary, if in daylight it was not. If it were committed during twilight, then, if there were not daylight, or crepusculum, enough, begun, or left, to discern a man's face withal, it was a burglary; otherwise not. 3 Co. Inst. 63; 1 Hale, 550; 1 Hawk. c. 38, s. 2; 4 Bl. Com. 224. But this not to extend to moonlight; for then many midnight burglaries would go unpunished. 4 Bl. Com. 224; 1 Hale, 551. The time appears now to be ascertained by reference to Greenwich mean time (see ante, p. 620).

The breaking and entering must both be committed in the night-time: if the breaking be in the day, and the entering in the night, or the breaking in the night, and entering in the day, it is no burglary. 1 Hale, 551. But the breaking may be on one night, and the entry on another, Id., provided the breaking be with intent to enter, and the entry with intent to commit a felony. Id.: R. v. Smith, R. & R. 417: R. v. Jordan, 7 C. & P. 432.

The dwelling-house of J. N.]—To prove this allegation, the prosecutor must prove that the defendant broke and entered the dwelling-house of J. N., in which he was in the habit of residing; 4 Co. Inst. 64; or some building between which and the dwelling-house there was a communication, either immediate, or by means of a covered and enclosed passage leading from the one to the other. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 53 (ante, p. 621). And evidence of a breaking and entering of such a building will sustain an indictment charging a breaking and entry of the dwelling-house. R. v. Garland, 1 Leach, 144; 2 East, P. C. 493, 512.

Every permanent building in which the tenant or owner and his family dwell and lie, is deemed a dwelling-house, and burglary may be committed in it. Even a set of chambers in an inn of court or college is deemed a distinct dwelling-house for this purpose. 1 Hale, 556; 3 Co. Inst. 65; 1 Hawk. c. 38, s. 18: see Monks v. Dykes, 4 M. & W. 567: Fenn v. Grafton, 2 Bing. (N. C.) 617; 3 Scott, 56. And it will be sufficient if any part of the family reside in the house. Thus, where a servant boy of the prosecutor always slept over his brewhouse, which was separated from his dwelling-house by a public passage, but occupied therewith, it was held, upon an indictment for burglary, that the brewhouse was a distinct dwelling-house of the prosecutor, although, being separated by the passage it could not be deemed to be part of the house in which he himself actually dwelt. R. v. Westwood, R. & R. 495. So, where upon an indictment for burglary in a shop, it appeared that the prosecutor had left his house without an intention of returning, and had let some of the rooms to lodgers, but continued his business there, and his apprentice and foreman and the foreman's wife, who was also his servant, employed in keeping the apartments clean, dwelt there, but received weekly wages, it was held to be the dwelling-house of the prosecutor. R. v. Gibbons, R. & R. 442. And where a counting-house, over which there were two rooms communicating by a trap door, which was never used, was broken open, and it appeared that the prosecutor's cooper and his family lived in the two rooms, upon a contract that they should have the rooms to live in and firing, and weekly wages, it was held that the counting-house was the dwelling-house of the prosecutor. R. v. Stock, R. & R. 185; 11 R. R. 605. The mere temporary absence of the owner and his family will not deprive the house of this protection the law gives it; as, for instance, if a man have a town and a country house, in which he resides alternately, and whilst he and his family are residing for the season in the country house, the town-house is broken and entered; 1 Hale, 556; or if a man lock up his house and go a journey, and, during his absence, it is broken and entered: R. v. Murray, 2 East, P. C. 496; or if a barrister have a set of chambers, in which he resides during the term only, and during the vacation they may be broken and entered: 1 Hale, 556; in these and the like cases the houses and set of chambers respectively, even although no person actually resided in them at the time, must be deemed dwelling-houses, and the breaking and entering of them, burglary; provided it appear that the owners, when they left them, had an intention to return to them. 1 Hale, 556; Fost. 77: R. v. Nutbrown, Fost. 76. But burglary cannot be committed in a tent or booth in a market or fair, even although the owner lodge in it; 1 Hawk. c. 38, s. 35; 1 Hale, 557; because it is a temporary, not a permanent edifice. But if it be a permanent building, though used only for the purposes of a fair, it is a dwelling-house. R. v. Smith, 1 M. & Rob. 256. Breaking open a house in which no man resides, or is in the habit of residing, is no burglary, even though the owner use it for his meals and the purposes of his businesses; for it is not a dwelling-house. R. v. Martin, R. & R. 108. If a porter lie in a warehouse for the purpose of protecting goods, R. v. Smith, 2 East, P. C. 497; 2 Leach, 1019, n.; or a servant lie in a barn in order to watch thieves, R. v. Brown, 2 East, P. C. 501; 2 Leach 1018, n.; this does not make the warehouse or barn a dwelling-house, in which burglary can be committed. So, where the landlord of a dwelling-house, after the tenant had quitted it, put a servant into it, to sleep there at night, until he should re-let it to another tenant, but had no intention to reside in it himself: the judges held that it could not be deemed the dwelling-house of the landlord. R. v. Davies, 2 Leach, 876; 2 East, P. C. 499. And where the prosecutor left his house without an intention of returning to live in it, but retained it as a workshop and warehouse, and two women employed in his business, not as domestic servants, slept in the house merely for the purpose of taking care of it; but did not take their meals there, or use the house for any other purpose, it was held not to be the dwelling-house of the prosecutor. R. v. Flannagan, R. & R. 187. So, where the tenant had put all his goods and furniture into the house, preparatory to his removing to it with his family, but neither he nor any of his family had as yet slept in it: it was held not to be a dwelling-house in which burglary could be committed. R. v. Hallard, 2 East, P. C. 498: R. v. Thompson, Id.; 2 Leach, 771. And the same has been ruled, where, under such circumstances, the tenant had put a person (not being one of the family) into the house, for the protection of the goods and furniture in it, until it should be ready for his residence. R. v. Harris, 2 Leach, 701; 2 East, P. C. 498: R. v. Fuller, 2 East, P.C. 498; 1 Leach, 186, n. See R. v. Jones, 2 East, P. C. 499: R. v. Flannagan, R. & R. 187: and where a house was under repair and was not inhabited though containing property of the owner. R. v. Lyons, 1 Leach, 185; 2 East, P. C. 497.

A dwelling-house may be divided so as to form two or more dwelling-houses (within the meaning of the word in the definition of burglary), by letting a part of it to a tenant: provided there be no internal communication between the part so let and the remainder of the dwelling-house. Upon an indictment for burglary it appeared that the house in which the burglary was alleged to have been committed formed the centre of a building, having two wings; in one of which A. lived, and the other consisted of the dwelling-houses of B. and C. respectively; the centre consisted of three manufactories, in one of which A., B., D. and other persons were jointly concerned, and of the remaining two D. was the sole proprietor,

C. was merely in the employment of D. There was no internal communication between the centre building and the houses of A. and B., nor between it and the house of C., except a window in the house of C., which looked into a passage that ran the whole length of the centre building. One of the counts in the indictment alleged the centre building to be the dwelling-house of C.; but the judges held that the window merely was not such an internal communication as could make the centre building be deemed parcel of C.'s house. R. v. Egginton, 2 B. & P. 508; 5 R. R. 689. Whether a part of a dwelling-house let separately from the rest can be considered a distinct dwelling-house and the subject of burglary depends on the mode of its user. Thus if a man hire a shop, parcel of another man's house, and unconnected with it by internal communication, and the tenant work or trade in it, but never lie there, it is no dwelling-house, and burglary cannot be committed in it. 1 Hale, 557, 558. If, on the contrary, he or any part of his family lie there it is deemed his dwelling-house, and may be laid to be so in an indictment for burglary. Id.; and see R. v. Rogers, 1 Leach, 89, 428; 2 East, P. C. 506. So, if he let off part, and do not by himself or any of his family dwell in the other part, the part let off is the dwelling-house of the tenant, whether it communicate with the other part or not, but the part not let off is not the subject of burglary. But if the owner of the dwelling-house let the shop, which is unconnected by internal communication with the house, and also let some rooms in the house, which are connected with the other parts of it, to the same person; and the tenant or some of his family sleep in the rooms; a breaking and entering of the shop, in that case, will be burglary, and it may be laid to be committed in the dwelling-house of the landlord. R. v. Gibson, 1 Leach, 357; 2 East, P. C. 508. See Lee v. Gansel, 1 Cowp. 1, 8: R. v. Stock, R. & R. 185; 11 R. R. 605; 2 Leach, 1015: R. v. North Collingham, 1 B. & C. 578: R. v. Great Bolton, 8 B. & C. 71: R. v. Ditcheat, 9 B. & C. 176: R. v. Macclesfield, 2 B. & Ad. 870: Fenn v. Grafton, 2 Bing. (N. C.) 617; 3 Scott, 56.

The term "dwelling-house" includes in its legal signification all outhouses occupied with and immediately communicating with the dwelling-house. But by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 53 (ante, p. 621), no building, although within the same curtilage (see post, p. 645) with the dwelling-house, and occupied therewith, shall be deemed to be part of such dwelling-house for any of the purposes of that Act, unless there be a communication between such building and dwelling-house, either immediate or by means of a covered and enclosed passage leading from the one to the other.

Where the prosecutor's house consisted of two living-rooms, another room used as a cellar, and a washhouse on the ground-floor, and of three bedrooms upstairs, one of them over the washhouse, and the bedroom over the house-place communicated with that over the washhouse, but there was no internal communication between the washhouse and any of the rooms of the house, but the whole was under the same roof, and the defendant broke into the washhouse, and was breaking through the partition wall between the washhouse and the house-place, it was held that the defendant was properly convicted of burglary in breaking the house. R. v. Burrowes, 1 Mood. C. C. 274. But where adjoining to the house was a kiln, one end of which was supported by the wall of the house, and adjoining to the kiln a dairy, one end of which was supported by the wall of the kiln, the roofs of all three being of different heights, and there being no internal communication from the house to the dairy, it was held that burglary was not committed by breaking into the dairy. R. v. Higgs, 2 C. & K. 322, Wilde, C.J. To be within the meaning of this section, the building must be occupied with the house in the same right; and therefore where a house let to and occupied by A. adjoined and communicated with a warehouse let to and occupied by A. and B., it was held that the warehouse could not be considered a part of the dwelling-house of A. R. v. Jenkins, R. & R. 244. If the building be not proved to be a dwelling-house the defendant must be acquitted of burglary. If there be any doubt as to the nature of the building broken and entered, a count may be inserted for breaking and entering a building within the curtilage. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 55, ante, p. 621; and see post, p. 645.

Ownership of the dwelling-house.]—It has been already stated that the house must be occupied; and occupation rather than legal ownership must be proved. Occupation by a tenant at will is enough to make him owner for the purpose of this indictment. R. v. Collett, R. & R. 498. The person described as owner must be proved to occupy in his own right, however precarious his tenure. Thus, an insolvent has been held to be rightly described as owner of a house in which he lived, although it was rented by his daughter, and she carried on business but did not live there. R. v. Bridges, 1 Cox, 261, Erle, J.

Where it is laid to be the dwelling-house of J. N., proof that it was occupied by his wife and her establishment alone will support the indictment. In such a case it was at common law necessary to allege it to be the dwelling-house of the husband, even although the wife lived separate from him, and the house had been taken by her, and she paid the rent, taxes, etc. R. v. Farre, Kel. (J.) 43; 1 Leach, 1064, n.: and see Boggett v. Frier, 11 East, 301: R. v. Smyth, 5 C. & P. 201; 1 M. & Rob. 155, Tenterden, C.J.: R. v. French, R. & R. 491: R. v. Wilford, R. & R. 517. This rule does not apply where the wife has obtained a judicial separation under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 25, or a protection order under s. 21 of that Act, or a justice's separation order under 58 & 59 Vict., c. 39, ss. 4, 5. And since the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), a wife can hold her separate property without the intervention of trustees (s. 1), and has the same remedies and redress by way of criminal proceedings, for the protection and security of her own separate property, as if such property belonged to her as a femme sole. (See s. 12, ante, p. 60.) If, therefore, the house in which a burglary is committed is the separate property of a married woman and in her occupation, it should be described in the indictment as hers.

If a man occupy a dwelling-house by his servants, and do not reside in it himself, the indictment must allege it to be the dwelling-house of the master; and evidence of an occupation by his servants will maintain the indictment. But a difficulty very frequently arises in such cases, to ascertain whether the occupation by the servant is in his own right or in that of his master. Where three persons were in partnership in a bank and brewhouse, the business of which was transacted in the lower rooms of the house in question, and a cooper in the service of the partnership, at weekly wages, lived with his family in the upper rooms, which communicated with the lower rooms by means of a trap-door and a ladder but there was also a separate entrance to these rooms from without; the lower rooms were broken and entered, and property stolen from them; and the judges held that the house was well laid in the indictment to be the dwelling-house of the partners. R. v. Stock, R. & R. 185; 2 Leach, 1015; 2 Taunt, 339; 11 R. R. 605. Where a warehouseman, with his family, lived in a dwelling-house upon his master's premises, for which and for coals he paid his master a rent of 11*l.* a year, and the master let the house, which was worth 20*l. per annum* to an ordinary tenant, to the warehouseman at the lower rent, that he might reside upon the premises as a security, it was held that the warehouseman stood in the character of tenant, for the master might have distrained upon him for rent, and could not arbitrarily have removed him. R. v. Jarvis, 1 Mood. C. C. 7. See R. v. Smyth (ante, p. 628.) So where, with certain wages, a workman had a cottage rent-free to live in, it was held that, as the workman occupied this cottage for his own benefit, and not for the benefit of his master, it was well described as the dwelling-house of the workman. R. v. Jobling, R. & R. 525. Where a toll-gate house, occupied by a person employed by the lessee of the tolls to collect the tolls, at weekly wages, with the privilege of living in the toll-gate house erected by the trustees of the road for that purpose, was broken and entered in the night-time, it was held that the house was well described as the dwelling-house of the toll-gate keeper, because he had the exclusive possession, and it was unconnected with the premises of the lessee, who did not appear to have any interest in it. R. v. Camfield, 1 Mood. C. C. 42. So, where a gardener lived in the house of his master, quite separate from the dwelling-house of his master, and had the entire control of the house he lived in, and kept the key, it was held that it might be laid either as his or his master's house. R. v. Rees, 7 C. & P. 568, Denman, C.J. And where a servant lived rent-free in a house belonging to his master, and his master paid the taxes, and his master's business was carried on in the house, but the servant and his family were the only persons who slept in the house, and that part of the house in which his master's business was carried on was at all times open to those parts in which the servant lived; upon an indictment for breaking and entering that part of the house in which the master's business was carried on, it was held that it might be described as the servant's house; but it was not decided that it might not also be described as the house of the master. R. v. Witt, 1 Mood. C. C. 248; and see R. v. Courtenay, 5 Cox, 218 (Ir.). Where the house was described as the house of J. B., and it appeared that J. B. worked for one W., who did carpenter's work for a public company, and put J. B. into the house in question, which belonged to the company, to take care of it, and some mills adjoining, J. B. receiving no more wages than before he went to live in the house, it was held not rightly laid. R. v. Rawlins, 7 C. & P. 150. Where apartments in the house of a corporation are appropriated as lodgings for servants of the corporation, a burglary committed in them must be laid to have been committed in the dwelling-house of the corporation. R. v. Picket, 2 East, P. C. 501: R. v. Hawkins, Fost. 38; 2 East, P. C. 485: and see R. v. Maynard, 2 East, P. C. 501. So, a club-house cannot be laid as being a dwelling-house of the house-steward, who sleeps in it, and had charge of the property stolen. R. v. Ashley, 1 C. & K. 198. So, where apartments are assigned to any person in a royal palace, a burglary committed in them must be laid to have been committed in the mansion of the King. R. v. Williams, 1 Hale, 522; and see R. v. Burgess [1663], Kel. (J.) 27. But where a company in the country rented a house in London for their agent, in the upper part of which he resided with his family, and in the lower part transacted his business, it is reported to have been held by Graham, B., and Grose, J., that a burglary in the house was well laid to have been committed in the dwelling-house of the agent. R. v. Margetts, 2 Leach, 930. Where a house rented by A. and B., partners, was divided into two houses for the convenience of their respective families, the family of A. residing in one, the family of B. in the other, and there was no internal communication between them; a burglary in the part occupied by A. was held to be well laid to have been committed in the dwelling-house of

A., and not of the partners, although the rent of both houses was paid jointly out of the partnership funds. R. v. Jones, 1 Leach, 537; 2 East, P. C. 504. But a house, the joint property of partners in trade, in which their business is carried on, may be described as the dwelling-house of all the partners, though only one of the partners reside in it. R. v. Athea, 1 Mood. C. C. 329.

Where the room occupied by a guest in an inn is broken and entered in the night-time, an indictment for the burglary must lay it to have been committed in the dwelling-house of the innkeeper; 1 Hale, 557: R. v. Prosser, 2 East, P. C. 502; and the same in all other cases where the occupier has the use merely, and no interest in the apartment he occupies. See 1 Hawk. c. 38, s. 26. Apartments let to lodgers, however, admit of a different consideration. If part of a house be let to a lodger, who sleeps there, and no other person resides in the remainder of the house, a burglary in the lodgings must be laid to have been committed in the dwelling-house of the lodger. Where a coachman rented the loft over a coach-house and stables, and he and his family resided in it, a burglary committed in it was held to be well laid to have been committed in the dwelling-house of the coachman. R. v. Turner, 1 Leach, 305; 2 East, P. C. 492. So, if the house be let out to several lodgers, and the owner do not reside in it, a burglary in it must be alleged to have been committed in the dwelling-house of that person whose lodgings were broken and entered. R. v. Rogers, 1 Leach, 89; 2 East, P. C. 506: and see R. v. Trapshaw, 1 Leach, 427; 2 East, P. C. 506, 780. So, where the shop of a dwelling-house is divided into two shops, with a door in each opening towards the street, and another into a common passage leading to the common staircase, and the whole of the house is occupied by the two occupiers of the shops, the separate shop of each may be described as the dwelling-house of each. R. v. Bailey, 1 Mood. C. C. 23. And where a lodger occupied a sleeping-room on the first-floor, and the workshop in the attic, and the rest of the house was occupied by other lodgers, a burglary in the workshop was held by the judges to be well laid to have been committed in the dwelling-house of the lodger who rented it. R. v. Carroll, 1 Leach, 237; 2 East, P. C. 506. But if the owner of the house reside in a part of it, and let the rest out in lodgings —then, if the part occupied by the lodger be severed from that occupied by the owner, that is, if there be no internal communication between them, and the lodger and owner enter the house by different outer doors, a burglary in the part occupied by each respectively must be laid to have been committed in the dwelling-house of the person so occupying it; but if they be not severed, and the lodger and the owner enter by the same outer door, then the burglary must be laid to have been committed in the dwelling-house of the owner. 1 Leach, 90, n.; Kel. (J.) 83, 84; 2 East, P. C. 503. Where, therefore, the servant of the prosecutor dwelt in part of the house, and the rest, excepting the shop, was let off to lodgers; it was held that the shop in the prosecutor's occupation was properly described as the dwelling-house of the prosecutor. R. v. Gibbons, R. & R. 442. And where the prosecutor let to his son a shop, which had a separate entrance from the street, but communicated with the dwelling-house of the prosecutor by a back door, and the son used the shop as a place of business only, and did not reside there, it was held that the shop was properly described as the dwelling-house of the prosecutor. R. v. Sefton, R. & R. 202. If a person let off part of his house, but do not dwell in the part reserved, the part let is the dwelling-house of the tenant, but the part reserved is not the subject of burglary; it is not the dwelling-house of the tenant, because it forms no part of his holding, and it is not that of the owner, because he does not dwell in it. R. v. Wilson, R. & R. 115. The governor of a workhouse, under a contract for seven years with the guardians and overseers of the poor, occupied and dwelt in the governor's house, with the exception of one room reserved to the guardians and overseers, as their office, of which the governor had one key, and the clerk of the guardians and overseers the other, but the governor's servant cleaned the room; upon an indictment for breaking and entering this room, it was held that it could not be described as the dwelling-house of the governor. Id.: and see R. v. Frowen (infra).

If there be any doubt whether the house broken and entered should be described as the dwelling-house of A., B., or C. the pleader should obviate the difficulty by inserting counts alleging it to be the dwelling-house of A., B., and C. respectively; although there can be little doubt that a variance in this respect would be amended at the trial (see ante, pp. 52, 296, 300).

Situation of dwelling-house.]—The local description of the house must be proved as laid; if there be a variance between the indictment and evidence, in the parish, etc., where the house is alleged to be situate, the defendant, unless the variance is amended (ante, pp. 52, 300), must be acquitted of the burglary (although he may, if the indictment charge a burglary and stealing, be convicted of the simple larceny); R. v. Brookes, C. & Mar. 543, Patteson, J.: R. v. Jackson, 2 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 45. If it be not stated in the indictment where the house is situate, it shall be taken to be situate at the place laid as special venue. R. v. Napper, 1 Mood. C. C. 44. And if, two parishes having been named, the house is stated to be "at the parish aforesaid," the last parish shall be intended. R. v. Richards, 1 M. & Rob. 177. Where a parish and a union were named it was held that the words "there situate" referred to the parish. R. v. Frowen, 4 Cox, 266. It is sufficient to allege that the burglary was committed at a place named (as "at N., in the county aforesaid"), without stating it to be a parish, vill, chapelry, or the like. R. v. Brookes, C. & Mar. 543. In R. v. Bennett, R. & R. 289, upon an indictment for breaking and entering a dwelling-house in the parish of A., it appeared that the outhouse broken and entered was in the parish of B., but the dwelling-house with which it was connected and occupied was in the parish of A., and the point was raised, but not decided, whether under such circumstances the indictment was satisfied. In R. v. Howell, 1 Cox, 190, where a house was situate in two parishes, it was held sufficient to describe it as in the parish in which lay the part broken into.

To avoid difficulty, different counts should be inserted, varying the local description.

Break.]—There must be a breaking of the house, either actual or constructive, to constitute burglary. If a man leave his doors or window open, and another enter therein with intent to commit a felony, it is no burglary. 1 Hale, 551; 3 Co. Inst. 64. So if there be an aperture in a cellar window to admit light, through which a thief enters in the night, this is not burglary. R. v. Lewis, 2 C. & P. 628: R. v. Spriggs, 1 M. & Rob. 357.

An actual breaking is, where the offender for the purpose of getting admission for any part of his body, or for a weapon or other instrument, in order to effect his felonious intention, breaks a hole in the wall of a house, breaks a door or window, picks the lock of a door, or opens it with a key, or even by lifting a latch, or unlooses any other fastening to doors or windows which the owner has provided. 3 Co. Inst. 64; 1 Hale, 552. Pugh v. Griffith, 7 A. & E. 827, 836, Coleridge, J. Thus, an entry effected by taking out the glass from a door, was held to be burglary. R. v. Smith, R. & R. 417. So also where a pane of glass was broken, R. v. Perkes, 1 C. & P. 300; 15 R. R. 280; R. v. Tucker, 1 Cox, 73: or a cut pane of glass was pushed out. R. v. Bird, 9 C. & P. 44. And where the defendant pulled down the sash of a window which had no fastening, and was only kept in its place by the pulley-weight, it was held to be burglary, although there was an outer shutter which was not put to. R. v. Haines, R. & R. 451. So, where he raised a sash-window which was shut down close, but not fastened, though it had a hasp which might have been fastened. R. v. Hyams, 7 C. & P. 441. And where a window opening upon hinges, and fastened with wedges, but so that by pushing against it, it could be opened, was opened; it was held to be burglary. R. v. Hall, R. & R. 355. So, where a party thrust his arm through the broken pane of a window, and in so doing broke some more of the pane, and thus got at and removed the fastening of the window and opened it, it was held to be a sufficient breaking. R. v. Robinson, 1 Mood. C. C. 327: and see Ryan v. Shilcock, 7 Ex. 72. In R. v. Callan, R. & R. 157, the prisoner after committing larceny in a dwelling-house by night broke out of the premises by lifting up a heavy flap of a cellar, which was not bolted, and upon a question reserved whether this was a sufficient breaking out to constitute a burglary, the judges were equally divided. Cf. R. v. Lawrence, 4 C. & P. 231. But in R. v. Russell, 1 Mood. C. C. 377, it was decided that lifting up the flap of a cellar usually kept down by its own weight is a sufficient breaking for the purpose of burglary. See R. v. Brown, 2 East, P. C. 487; 2 Leach, 1016, n. If a window be partly open, but not sufficiently to admit a person, the raising of it so as to admit a person, is not a breaking of the house. R. v. Smith, 1 Mood. C. C. 178. Obtaining admission to a house by getting down the chimney is burglary; for the chimney is as much closed as the nature of things will admit. R. v. Brice, R. & R. 450; and see 1 Hawk, c. 38, s. 6; 1 Hale, 552.

A constructive breaking is where the offender, with intent to commit a felony, obtains admission by some artifice, trick, or threat, for the purpose of effecting it. As, for instance, if a man knocks at a door, and upon its being opened, rushes in with a felonious intent: or upon pretence of taking lodgings, falls upon the landlord and robs him: or procures a constable to gain admittance in order to search for traitors, and then binds the constable and robs the house; all these entries have been adjudged burglaries, although there were no actual breaking; for the law will not suffer itself to be trifled with by such evasions, especially under the cloak of legal process. 1 Hawk. c. 38, ss. 9, 10; Bl. Com. 226. So, where the defendants frightened the inmates of the house into admitting them. R. v. Swallow, 2 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.), 8. So, where the defendant obtained admission by promising a boy, who was in care of the house, some ale; and whilst the boy was gone for the ale, robbed the house: this was held to be burglary. R. v. Hawkins, 2 East, P. C. 485; Fost, 38. Nay, if a servant conspires with a robber, and let him into the house by night, this is burglary in both; 1 Hale, 553; 1 Hawk. c. 38, s. 14: R. v. Cornwall, 2 Str. 881. But if a servant pretending to agree with a robber, opens the door and let him in for the purpose of detecting and apprehending him, this is no burglary, for the door is lawfully open. R. v. Johnson, C. & Mar. 218, Maule, J., and Rolfe, B.

And the breaking necessary to constitute burglary is not restricted to the breaking of the outer wall, or doors, or windows of a house; if the thief gets admission into the house by the outer door or window being open, and afterwards breaks or unlocks, etc., an inner door, for the purpose of entering one of the rooms, etc., in the house, it is burglary. 1 Hale, 553; R. v. Johnson, 2 East, P. C. 488. So, if a servant opens his master's chamber-door, or the door of any other chamber not immediately within his trust, with a felonious design; or if any other person lodging in the same house, or in a public inn, open and enter another door with such evil intent, it is burglary. 1 Hale, 553, 554. It is doubted, whether breaking open cupboards, etc., in the inside of a house, affixed to the freehold, is burglary: see 1 Hale, 527; Fost. 108; and Mr. Justice Foster, in favorem vitæ, recommended that it should not be so considered. Fost. 109. And clearly, the breaking open chests, etc., in a dwelling-house is not burglary. 1 Hale, 553, 554. The breaking must be of some part of the house; and, therefore, when the defendant opened an area gate with a skeleton key, and thence passed through an open door into the kitchen, it was held not to be a breaking, there being no free passage from the area to the house in the hours of sleep. R. v. Davis, R. & R. 322. And upon the same principle it was held that the breaking of a door which was in the outward fence of the curtilage of a dwelling-house, and opened, not into any building, but into the yard only, was not a breaking of the dwelling-house. R. v. Bennett, R. & R. 289. Where a shutter-box partly projected from a house, and adjoined the side of the shop-window, which side was protected by wooden panelling, lined with iron; it was held that the breaking and entering the shutter-box did not constitute burglary. R. v. Paine, 7 C. & P. 135.

And enter.]—And there must be an entry, as well as a breaking, to constitute burglary; although we have seen that the entry need not be on the same night as the breaking. (Ante, p. 625.) Any the least degree of entry, however, with any part of the body, or with any instrument held in the hand, is sufficient; as, for instance, after breaking the door or window, etc., to step over the threshold, to put a hand, or a finger, R. v. Davis, R. & R. 499, or a hook or other instrument in at a window to draw out goods, or a pistol, with intent to kill or demand money, are all of them burglarious entries. 1 Andr. 114; 1 Hale, 555; 1 Hawk. c. 38, ss. 11, 12; 3 Co. Inst. 54: R. v. Gibbons [1752] Fost. 107. See R. v. Meal, 3 Cox, 70, as to the amount of evidence necessary. So, if the defendant introduce his hand through a pane of glass broken by him, between the outer window and an inner shutter, for the purpose of undoing the window-latch, it is a sufficient entry. R. v. Bailey, R. & R. 341: and see R. v. Tucker, 1 Cox, 73. So, an entry down a chimney is a sufficient entry into a house, for the chimney is part of the house. R. v. Brice, R. & R. 450. But an entry through a hole in the roof left for the purpose of admitting light is not a sufficient entry to constitute burglary; for a chimney is a necessary opening and needs protection; whereas, if a man choose to leave a hole in the wall or roof of his house, instead of a fastened window, he must take the consequences. R. v. Spriggs, 1 M. & Rob. 357. It has even been said that discharging a loaded gun into a house is a sufficient entry. 1 Hawk. c. 38, s. 11; secus 1 Hale, 555. But there must be an entry: if, for instance, a man assault a house, or even break a hole in it, and before the entry the owner fling his money to the thief, it would not be burglary. 1 Hawk. c. 38, s. 3; 1 Hale, 555. So, if the instrument with which the house is broken happen to enter the house, but without any intention on the part of the burglar to effect his felonious intent (as, for instance, to draw out the goods) with it, this will not be a sufficient entry to constitute a burglary. R. v. Hughes, 1 Leach, 406; 2 East, P. C. 491. See R. v. Roberts, 2 East, P. C. 487: R. v. O'Brien, 4 Cox, 398. Where, therefore, the defendant threw up a window, and introduced a crow-bar to force the shutters, which were three inches from the window, but no part of his hand was within the window, this was held not to be an entry, although the jury found that the defendant did this with intent to steal. R. v. Rust, 1 Mood. C. C. 183. Where the breaking with intent to commit a felony is proved, but there is no proof of entry, the jury may convict the prisoner of the attempt to commit burglary. R. v. Spanner, 12 Cox, 155, per Bramwell, B., after consultation with Martin, B.

Entry without breaking.]—The cases as to what constitutes entry are equally applicable to offences under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 54 (ante, p. 621), which punishes entry by night into a dwelling-house without breaking with intent to commit a felony therein.

With intent, etc.]—The intent laid in the indictment must be to commit some felony (and whether a felony at common law or by statute is immaterial; Kel. (J.), 46, 67; 1 Hawk. c. 38, s. 38; 2 East, P. C. 513) in the dwelling-house, such as larceny, murder, rape, etc.; and the intent must be proved as laid. Where the intent is at all doubtful it may be laid in different ways in different counts. R. v. Thompson, 2 East, P. C. 515; 2 Leach, 1105, n.

Where the intent laid was to kill a horse, and the intent proved was merely to lame him, in order to prevent him from running a race, the variance was held fatal. R. v. Dobbs, 2 East, P. C. 513. If the intent laid be to murder, and the intent proved be to beat the party merely, the variance is fatal. 1 Hale, 561. So, where the intent laid was to steal, and the intent proved was to rescue uncustomed goods which had been seized, the judges held that the indictment was not sustained by the evidence. R. v. Knight, 2 East, P. C. 510. But where the indictment alleged the intent to be generally "the goods and chattels in the said dwelling-house then and there being" to steal, and charged the defendant with stealing the goods of A. therein, it was held to be satisfied by proof of a breaking into the house, with intent to steal the goods there generally, though the goods actually stolen did not belong to A. alone. R. v. Clarke, 1 C. & K. 421: R. v. Lawes, 1 C. & K. 62.

The best evidence of the intent is, that the defendant actually committed the felony alleged to have been intended by him: see R. v. Locost, Kel. (J.) 30: or you may give in evidence any other facts from which the intent may be presumed by the jury. (See ante, p. 308.) Where the defendant was discovered in the chimney of a shop in the night-time, and the jury found him guilty of the burglary with intent to steal, it was held that the evidence was sufficient to warrant the conviction. R. v. Brice, R. & R. 450.

And then and there in the said dwelling-house, etc.]—There must be an actual and not merely a constructive taking, but in all other respects the larceny must be proved in the manner directed (ante, p. 434, et seq.). Then prove that it was committed in the dwelling-house of J. N., situate as described in the indictment, or in some building occupied therewith and connected or communicating therewith, either immediately or by means of a covered and enclosed passage. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 53 (ante, p. 621; post, p. 645). It seems, however, that to convict the defendant of the felony charged to have been committed, it must appear to have been concurrent with the burglary; you cannot give evidence of a felony committed at a different time. Where it appeared in evidence, that, upon entering the house at three o'clock in the day, the owner found that some person had removed certain goods to a different part of the house from that in which he had placed them, seemingly for the purpose of stealing them; and the defendants afterwards, on the same evening, having broken and entered the house, were taken in it, before they had attempted to move or carry away anything: having failed at the trial to prove the burglary, the prosecutor was proceeding to prove the defendants guilty of the antecedent larceny: but the court refused to receive the evidence, saying, that the transactions were perfectly distinct, and that the prosecutor might as well attempt to prove a larceny committed seven years before. R. v. Vandercomb, 2 Leach, 708; 2 East, P. C. 514.

If you succeed in proving a larceny, but fail in proving it to have been committed in the dwelling-house, or the goods to be of the value of five pounds, and if you also fail in proving the burglary, the defendant may be convicted of the simple larceny, or of stealing in the dwelling-house. R. v. Withal, 1 Leach, 88; 2 East, P. C. 515, 517: and see R. v. Compton, 3 C. & P. 418. If two or more are indicted, one may be found guilty of the burglary and larceny, and the other of the larceny only. R. v. Butterworth, R. & R. 520 (see ante, p. 87); R. v. Turner, 1 Sid. 171, contra. Where a room-door was latched, and a person lifted the latch and entered the room, and concealed himself for the purpose of committing a larceny there, which he afterwards effected; and two other persons were present with him when he lifted the latch, for the purpose of assisting him to enter, and screened him from observation by opening an umbrella, it was held that those two were in law parties to the breaking and entering, and were answerable for the larceny which afterwards took place, though they were not near the spot when it was perpetrated. R. v. Jordan, 7 C. & P. 432. Where the breaking is on one night, and the entry the night after, a person present at the breaking, though not present at the entering, is in law guilty of the whole offence. Id.

Indictment for Burglary by breaking out of a House after stealing therein. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 51, ante, p. 621.)

Surrey, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present, that J. S., on the first day of June, in the year of our Lord ——, about the hour of eleven in the night of the same day, being in the dwelling-house of J. N., situate in the parish of B., in the county of S., one silver sugar-basin of the value of three pounds, six silver table-spoons of the value of three pounds, and twelve silver tea-spoons [of the value of two pounds], of the goods and chattels of one J. O., in the said dwelling-house of the said J. N. then being, in the said dwelling-house feloniously did steal, take and carry away; and that he the said J. S. being so as aforesaid in the said dwelling-house, and having committed the felony aforesaid, in manner and form aforesaid, afterwards, to wit, on the same day and year aforesaid, about the hour of eleven in the night of the same day, feloniously and burglariously did break out of the said dwelling-house of the said J. N.; against the form [as ante, p. 465.]

An indictment stating that the prisoner "did break to get out," or "did break and get out," was held bad, the words of the statute being "break out." R. v. Compton, 7 C. & P. 139.

Felony: 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 51 (ante, p. 621). This section of the statute declares, that "whosoever shall enter the dwelling-house of another, with intent to commit any felony therein, or being in such dwelling-house shall commit any felony therein, and shall in either case break out of the said dwelling-house in the night, shall be guilty of burglary." The punishment is the same as stated in the last precedent (ante, p. 624).

This offence is now triable at quarter sessions. 55 & 56 Vict. c. 57, s. 1 (ante, pp. 126, 623).

Evidence.

Prove a larceny in the dwelling-house of J. N., as directed ante, pp. 434, 634. And prove a breaking of the house by the defendant, in the night-time in order to get out of the same. In R. v. Lawrence, 4 C. & P. 231, Bolland, B., held that escaping from a house by lifting a heavy flap-door which had no fastening, but was kept down by its own weight, was not a sufficient breaking out of a house, although, as we have seen (ante, p. 632), it would constitute a good breaking into a house. But in R. v. McKearney, Jebb (Circ. Ct. Ir.) 96, it was held that a man was properly convicted of burglary by breaking out, who broke a skylight from within and put his head out but was struck and captured before he could get out. It is not the less a burglary, because the defendant was lawfully in the house, as a lodger, or a guest at an inn. R. v. Wheeldon, 8 C. & P. 747.

If it be doubtful whether a felony can be proved, but there be sufficient evidence of an intent to commit a felony, a count may be added stating the intent. To prove this count, the prosecutor must prove the entry, the intent as in other cases, and the breaking out.

Indictment for being found by Night armed, with intent to break into a Dwelling-house and to commit a Felony therein. (24 & Vict. c. 96, s. 58, ante, p. 622.)

Central Criminal Court, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present, that J. S., on the first day of December, in the year of our Lord ——, about the hour of eleven in the night of the same day, at the parish of ——, in the county of London, and within the jurisdiction of the said Court, was found unlawfully armed with a certain dangerous and offensive instrument, that is to say a crow-bar [any dangerous or offensive weapon or instrument whatsoever], with intent then to break and enter [break or enter] into a certain dwelling-house of J. S. there situate, and the goods and chattels in the said dwelling-house then being feloniously to steal, take, and carry away; against the form (as ante, p. 465). It is not necessary to aver that the goods and chattels were the property of any particular person; R. v. Lawes, 1 C. & K. 62 (post, p. 639). The indictment must, as in burglary, allege the ownership and situation of the premises intended to be broken into, R. v. Jarrald, L. & C. 301; 32 L. J. (M. C.) 258; 9 Cox, 307 (C. C. R.); and it seems also that it ought to allege the particular felony intended to have been committed. Id. per Crompton, J. For the form of an indictment after a previous conviction, under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 59 (ante, p. 622), see post, Book II. Part V., tit. "Offences after previous convictions."

Misdemeanor: penal servitude for not less than three years and not exceeding five years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 58; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to fining the offender and requiring him to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 431). And for the like offence after a previous conviction for felony or such misdemeanor, penal servitude for not more than ten nor less than three years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 59; 54 & 55

Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 431).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant was found by night, that is, between nine o'clock p.m. and six o'clock a.m., see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 1 (ante, p. 620), and armed as alleged in the indictment. Then prove the intent, which may be inferred from the nature of the weapon or instrument with which the defendant is found armed, the place in which he is found, or from his declarations, or from other circumstances (see ante, pp. 303, 308, 341). It is necessary that the defendant should be proved to have had the intent of breaking into or entering some particular building, and proof of a general intent to break into houses will be insufficient. R. v. Jarrald, ubi supra.

Indictment for having in Possession, by Night, Implements of Housebreaking. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 58, ante, p. 622.)

Commencement as in last precedent]—about the hour of eleven in the night of the same day, at the parish of ——, etc. (see last precedent), was found, he the said J. S., then and there, by night as aforesaid, unlawfully having in his possession, without lawful excuse, certain implements of housebreaking, that is to say, ten picklocks, ten keys, and two crows; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. In the printed copies of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 58, as also in those of the repealed enactment, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 19, s. 1, the words are thus punctuated,—"any picklock key, crow, jack, bit, or other implement of housebreaking:" but it seems that there should be a comma between the words "picklock" and "key;" see R. v. Oldham, 2 Den. 472; 3 C. & K. 249; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 134 (C. C. R.) An indictment on this part of the section need not allege an intent to commit a felony. R. v. Bailey, Dears. 244; L. J. (M. C.) 13; 6 Cox, 241 (C. C. R.).

Misdemeanor: 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 58 (ante, p. 622). See the last precedent.

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant was found by night (that is, between nine p.m. and six a.m., see supra), having in his possession one or more of the implements of housebreaking mentioned in the indictment. Every instrument which from its nature is capable of being used for housebreaking, although ordinarily used for lawful purposes, e.g. a house door-key, or a pair of pincers, is an implement of housebreaking within the statute, if the jury are of opinion, from the circumstances, that at the time when the defendant was found in possession of it, it was his intention to use it as such. R. v. Oldham, 2 Den. 472; 3 C. & K. 249; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 134 (C. C. R.). The lawful excuse for possession, if any, must be proved by the defendant. Where several persons are found at night acting in pursuance of a common purpose to break into houses, but one only has housebreaking implements, all may be convicted of possessing them. R. v. Thompson, 11 Cox, 362 (C. C. R.).

Semble, that it was a misdemeanor at common law to have possession of instruments of housebreaking, with intent to break into a house and steal the goods therein: see R. v. Lee, Cas. (K. B.) temp. Hardw. 371 (cit.); sed quære; see ante, p. 3.

Indictment for breaking and entering a Church or Chapel and stealing therein. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 50, ante, p. 621.)

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—the church of the parish of ——, in the county of ——, [or a certain chapel, situate in the parish of ——, in the county of ——] ("any church, chapel, meeting-house, or other place of divine worship") feloniously did break and enter, and then, in the said church, one silver cup, of the goods and chattels of the parishioners of the said parish, feloniously did steal, take, and carry away; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

If a chapel which is private property be broken and entered, lay the property as in other cases of larceny.

If a parish church be broken and entered, add a count stating the chattel to be the chattel of the rector, and another stating it to be the chattel of the churchwardens. See 2 East, P. C. 651.

As to burglary in a church, see R. v. Baker, 3 Cox, 581. As to breaking into a church with intent to commit felony, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 57 (ante, p. 622).

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 50 (ante, p. 621); 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances, and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 431).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant broke and entered the church or chapel described in the indictment, in the same manner as in burglary (ante, p. 631), except that it need not be proved to have been done in the night-time. The vestry is part of the church for this purpose. R. v. Evans, C. & Mar. 298. So is a church tower, unless it is a structure quite separate from the church. R. v. Wheeler, 3 C. & P. 585. If the evidence fail in this respect, the defendant may be convicted for simple larceny. Then prove the larceny, as directed (ante, p. 434, et seq.) The words "any goods" in 1 Edw. 6, c. 12 (rep.), were held not to be confined to goods used for divine service, but to extend to articles used in the church to keep it in repair, as a pot used to hold charcoal for airing the vaults, and a snatch-block used to raise weights if the bells wanted repair. R. v. Rourke, R. & R. 386. 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 10 (rep.), contained the word "chattel": but the present enactment extends to the commission of any felony in a church. In R. v. Nicholas, 1 Cox, 218, on an indictment for breaking into a church in the night-time, it was held unnecessary to lay the ownership of the property in the church in any person. The allegation of property in the parishioners, rector or churchwardens, will be sufficiently proved by evidence that the church is a parish church; but the property in goods in a chapel must be proved as in ordinary cases. Upon an indictment for stealing goods from a dissenting chapel, the first count of the indictment described them as the property of the trustees of the chapel, and the second as the property of a person who was employed to take care of the chapel, kept the keys of the chapel, and received a salary for so doing; the first count was not proved, and the judges held that the second could not be sustained, because the goods could not be considered as belonging to the chapel-keeper. R. v. Hutchinson, R. & R. 412. Where a prisoner was indicted for stealing a Bible, a hymn-book, and a pair of brass sconces, the property of J. B. and others, which it appeared had been stolen from a Methodist chapel at Fakenham, and the Bible and hymn-book had been presented to the Society of Methodists there, of which J. B. was one, and also a trustee of the chapel, but the trust deed was not produced, Parke, J., held, that as J. B. was one of the society, the property was well laid in him. R. v. Boulton, 5 C. & P. 537. Where the property stolen was a box containing money collected for the poor, which was screwed to the outside of a pew in the centre aisle of a church, the box was held not to be affixed to the freehold, and the property was held to be well laid in the churchwardens in their individual names. R. v. Wortley, 1 Den. 162; 2 C. & K. 283; 2 Cox, 32. Lastly, prove that the church or chapel is situate as described in the indictment.

The words "meeting-house, or other place of divine worship," in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 50, which were not contained in 7 & 8 G. 4. c. 29, s. 10 (rep.), apply to places of worship not belonging to the Church of England.

Indictment for stealing in and breaking out of a Church or Chapel. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. s. 50, ante, p. 621.)

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—one silver cup, of the goods and chattels of the parishioners of the parish of ——, in the county of ——, in the church of the said parish, there situate, feloniously did steal, take, and carry away; and that the said J. S., so being in the said church as aforesaid, afterwards, and after he had committed the said felony in the said church as aforesaid, on the day and year aforesaid, feloniously did break out of the said church; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. See the last precedent.

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove the larceny, as directed (ante, p. 434); prove the breaking out as in burglary (ante, p. 631), except that it need not be proved to have been done in the night-time; and prove the local situation of the church or chapel, as described in the indictment.

Indictment for Housebreaking. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 56, ante, p. 621.)

Commencement as ante, p. 433.]—the dwelling-house of J. N., situate in the parish of ——, in the county of ——, feloniously did break and enter, with intent the goods and chattels of the said J. N., in the said dwelling-house then being, feloniously to steal, take, and carry away, and one dressing-case of the value of five pounds, of the goods and chattels of the said J. N., then in the said dwelling-house then feloniously did steal, take, and carry away; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. See as to the form of the indictment, R. v. Andrews, C. & Mar. 121, overruling R. v. Smith, 2 M. & Rob. 115 (post, p. 641). An indictment was held sustainable, which charged as a misdemeanor that the defendant unlawfully broke and entered the dwelling-house of J. N., with intent the goods and chattels in the said dwelling-house then being to steal, without stating whose goods he intended to steal. R. v. Lawes, 1 C. & K. 62. See now 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 57 (ante, p. 622). If the evidence fail to prove the actual stealing, but the breaking, entry and intent to steal be proved, the prisoner may be convicted under this indictment of the felony described in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 57, supra. If the evidence fail to prove the breaking, but if the stealing in the dwelling-house to the amount of 5*l. be proved, the prisoner may be convicted of the felony described in* 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 60 (ante, p. 622).

Felony 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 56 (ante, p. 621): penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 56; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2, (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, 117 (ante, p. 431).

Evidence.

The dwelling-house of J. N.]—This must be proved in the same manner as in burglary. As to what buildings are included in the term dwelling-house, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 53 (ante, p. 621).

Did break and enter.]—This must be proved in the same manner as in burglary; 1 Hale, 596; Fost. 108 (see ante, p. 631); except that it need not be proved to have been done in the night-time, but if it be proved to have been done in the night-time, so as to amount to burglary, the defendant may notwithstanding be convicted upon this indictment.

In the said dwelling-house, etc.]—There must be an actual and not merely a constructive taking, but in all other respects the larceny may be proved in the manner directed ante, p. 434, et seq. Where the prosecutor, in consequence of the threat of an armed mob, fetched provisions out of his house and gave them to the mob, who stood outside the door, this was held not to be stealing in the dwelling-house. R. v. Leonard, Cheshire Special Commission, 1842. Where it appeared that the prisoner, after breaking and entering the house, took two half-sovereigns from a bureau in one of the rooms, but, being immediately detected, threw them under the grate in that room, Park, J., held that this was a sufficient asportation to constitute a stealing within this section of the statute. R. v. Amier, 6 C. & P. 344. The value of the goods is immaterial, if a breaking and entry be proved.

If the prosecutor succeed in proving the larceny, but fail in proving any of the other circumstances above mentioned, the defendant may be convicted of simple larceny; or if the prosecutor fail in proving the breaking and entry, and the goods be laid and proved to be of the value of five pounds, the defendant may be convicted of stealing in the dwelling-house. The defendant cannot, on this indictment, be convicted of breaking and entering the dwelling-house, and attempting to steal the prosecutor's goods, when it appears that the goods specified in the indictment were not in the house at the time, though other goods of the prosecutor's were. R. v. M'Pherson, Dears. & B. 197; 36 L. J. (M. C.) 134; 7 Cox, 281 (C. C. R.). He may, however, it would seem, under such circumstances, be convicted of breaking and entering with intent to commit a felony under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 57 (ante, p. 622); and see R. v. Ring, 61 L. J. (M. C.) 116 (ante, p. 464).

Indictment for breaking into and stealing in a Shop. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 56 (ante, p. 621.)

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—the shop of J. N., situate in the parish of ——, in the county of ——, feloniously did break and enter with intent the goods and chattels of the said J. N., in the said shop then being, feloniously to steal, take, and carry away, and twenty yards of muslin of the goods and chattels of the said J. N., then in the said shop, then feloniously did steal, take, and carry away; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. The indictment need not allege expressly that the defendant stole the goods in the shop: R. v. Andrews, C. & Mar. 121: overruling R. v. Smith, 2 M. & Rob. 115.

Felony: see the last precedent. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 56 (ante, p. 621).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant broke and entered the shop, etc., in question, in the same manner as upon an indictment for burglary (ante, p. 631), except that it is immaterial whether the breaking and entry be by night or by day; if this proof fail, the defendant may be convicted of the simple larceny. Prove that the shop, etc., was at the time, etc., the shop of J. N., that is, that he occupied it, and carried on the business there: then prove the larceny of the goods enumerated in the indictment, in the same manner as upon an indictment for housebreaking (supra), or stealing in the dwelling-house (post, p. 642). The value is immaterial. And, lastly, prove that the shop, etc., is situate as described in the indictment.

A "warehouse," to be within the meaning of 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 15 (rep.), need not be such as factors or traders keep their goods for sale in, and where customers go to view them, but includes such as are used for the safe keeping of goods merely: R. v. Hill, 2 M. & Rob. 458, Rolfe, B. There is a dictum of Alderson, B., upon 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 15 (rep.), that a shop, to be within it, must be a shop for the sale of goods, and that a mere workshop (such as a carpenter's or blacksmith's shop) would not be sufficient: R. v. Sanders, 9 C. & P. 79; but in R. v. Carter, 1 C. & K. 173, Lord Denman, C.J., dissented from that dictum, and held that a blacksmith's shop, used as a workshop only, was within 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 15 (rep.).

As to what building is a counting-house within the statute, see R. v. Potter, 2 Den. 235; C. & K. 179; 20 L. J. (M. C.) 170; 5 Cox, 187 (C. C. R.), decided on 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 15 (rep.).

Opening by a servant of the door of a shop under the same roof as the house in which he served, was held a breaking and entering within 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 12 (rep.). R. v. Wenmouth, 8 Cox, 348.

Indictment for stealing in a Dwelling-house, some Person therein being put in fear. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 61, ante, p. 622.)

Commencement as ante, p. 433.]—one silver basin, of the value of five pounds, of the goods and chattels of J. N., in the dwelling-house of the said J. N., situate in the parish of ——, in the county of ——, feloniously did steal, take, and carry away; one J. L. and M. his wife then, to wit, at the time of the committing of the felony aforesaid, being in the said dwelling-house, and therein by the said J. S. by a certain menace and threat then used by the said J. S. then being put in bodily fear; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. The indictment must expressly allege that some person in the house was put in fear by the defendant. R. v. Etherington, 2 Leach, 671; 2 East, P. C. 635. The value if amounting to 5*l.*, had better always be inserted, as the prisoner may be convicted on this indictment of stealing to the value of 5l., in the dwelling-house, if no menace or threat should be proved.

Felony: penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour —24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 61 (ante, p. 622); 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 431).

Evidence.

Prove the larceny in the dwelling-house as directed (ante, pp. 434, 625). The value is immaterial, if some person was in the house at the time, and was put in bodily fear by a menace or threat of the defendant; which may be either by words or gestures. R. v. Jackson, 1 Leach, 267. Lastly, prove that the person mentioned in the indictment was in the house at the time, and was put in fear by the menaces or threats of the defendant or his accomplices. R. v. Etherington (ante, p. 641). It is not necessary that all the accused should be in the house if some entered and all acted together. R. v. Murphy, 6 Cox, 340. On the former statutes, which did not require that the party should be put in fear by a menace or threat, it does not appear to have been settled whether it was necessary to prove an actual sensation of fear; but now, by the express words of the present statute, it must be proved that the putting in fear was by an actual menace or threat.

If the prosecutor fail to prove that the person mentioned in the indictment was in the dwelling-house, and was put in fear, the defendant may still be convicted of simple larceny; or if the goods stolen in the dwelling-house be laid and proved to be of the value of five pounds, he may be convicted of stealing in the dwelling-house.

Indictment for stealing in a Dwelling-house to the value of 5l.

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—one silver sugar basin, of the value of three pounds, six silver table-spoons, of the value of three pounds, and twelve silver tea-spoons, of the value of two pounds, of the goods and chattels of J. G., in the dwelling-house of J. N., situate in the parish of ——, in the county of ——, feloniously did steal, take, and carry away; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. As to local description, see 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 23 (ante, pp. 67, 298).

For forms of indictment for the attempt, see R. v. Johnson, L. & C. 489; 34 L. J. (M. C.) 24; 10 Cox, 13 (C. C. R.).

Felony: see the last precedent. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 60 (ante, p. 622).

Evidence.

Prove the larceny as directed ante, p. 434, et seq. Prove it to have been committed in the dwelling-house of J. N., or in some building occupied therewith, and connected or communicating therewith, either immediately or by means of a covered and enclosed passage leading from the one to the other (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 53, ante, p. 621); and prove the goods stolen to be of the value of five pounds or more.

If you fail to prove the larceny, the defendant must be acquitted altogether, unless you prove an attempt to commit larceny, in which case the defendant may be convicted of such attempt under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 9 (ante, p. 219). If you fail to prove the larceny to have been committed in a dwelling-house or some building communicating therewith (such as burglary might be committed in, 2 East, P. C. 644; and see ante, p. 625), or fail to prove that it was the dwelling-house of J. N., R. v. White, 1 Leach, 252: R. v. Woodward, Id. 253, n.; or fail to prove the goods (stolen at any one time, R. v. Petrie, 1 Leach, 294: see R. v. Hamilton, Id. 348; R. v. Jones, 4 C. & P. 217: R. v. Dunn, 1 Mood. C. C. 146: R. v. Smith, Id. 178) to be of the value of five pounds, the defendant must be acquitted of the compound offence, and may be found guilty of simple larceny only, without a separate count for that offence. See Campbell v. R., 11 Q. B. 799, at p. 812, and ante, p. 88.

It was held in several early cases, that if a man steal the goods of another in his own house (R. v. Thompson, 1 Leach, 338), or a woman steal the goods of a stranger in the house of her husband (R. v. Gould, 1 Leach, 217), it is not within the statute, which was not intended to protect property which might be in a house from the owner of the house, but from the depredations of others; but these cases appear to be overruled by R. v. Bowden, 1 C. & K. 147; 2 Mood. C. C. 285, where all the judges agreed that stealing in a dwelling-house to the value of 5*l.*, by the owner of the house, was within 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 12 (rep.). Cf. R. v. Taylor, R. & R. 418.

If the goods be under the protection of the person of the prosecutor at the time they are stolen, the case will not be within the statute. As, for instance, where the defendant procured money to be delivered to him for a particular purpose and then ran away with it; R. v. Campbell, 2 Leach, 564; 2 East, P. C. 644, and where the prosecutor, by the trick of ring dropping, was induced to lay down his money upon a table, and the defendant took it up and carried it away; R. v. Owen, 2 Leach, 572; 2 East, P. C. 645; these cases were held not to be within the statute. For a case to be within the meaning of the statute, it is necessary that the goods should be under the protection of the house, and be deposited in it for safe custody. But property left at a house for a person supposed to reside there, will be under the protection of the house, and the stealing of it will be within the statute. Two boxes belonging to A., who resided at 38, Rupert Street, were delivered by a porter (whether by mistake or design did not appear) at No. 33 in the same street; the owner of the house, imagining that they were for the defendant, who lodged there, delivered them to him; the defendant converted the contents of the boxes to his own use, and absconded; it was doubted at the trial whether the goods were sufficiently within the protection of the dwelling-house to bring the case within the statute, but the judges held that they were, and that the conviction for the capital offence was therefore correct. R. v. Carroll, 1 Mood. C. C. 89. If one, on going to bed, put his clothes and money by his bedside, these are under the protection of the dwelling-house, and not of the person. R. v. Thomas, Car. Supp. 295. So, where a man went to bed with a prostitute having put his watch in his hat on a table, and the woman stole the watch while he was asleep; this was held to be a stealing in the dwelling-house, and not a stealing from the person. R. v. Hamilton, 8 C. & P. 49. It is a question for the court and not for the jury, whether goods are under the protection of the dwelling-house, or in the personal care of the owner. R. v. Thomas, supra.

Indictment for breaking and entering a Dwelling-house, etc., with intent to commit any Felony therein. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 57, ante, p. 622.)

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—the dwelling-house of J. N. ("any dwelling-house, school-house, church, chapel, meeting-house, or other place of divine worship, or any building within the curtilage, school-house, shop, warehouse or counting-house"), situate in the parish of ——, in the county of ——, feloniously did break and enter, with intent to commit a felony therein, to wit, the goods and chattels of the said J. N., in the said dwelling-house then being, then feloniously to steal, take, and carry away; against the form of the statute in such case made and provided.

Felony, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 57 (ante, p. 622): penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 57; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 431).

Evidence.

Prove that the prisoner broke and entered the dwelling-house in question, and that it was at the time in the occupation of J. N., and also the prisoner's intent to steal. Lastly, prove that the dwelling-house is situate as described in the indictment. The intent to steal may no doubt often be reasonably inferred from the mere fact of breaking and entering.

Where the prisoner was indicted under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 27, for breaking and entering a shop with intent to commit a felony, viz., to steal, and it appeared that the prisoner broke in the roof, intending to enter and steal, and was then disturbed, but there was no evidence that he ever actually entered the shop, he was held to have been rightly convicted of the misdemeanor of attempting to commit a felony. R. v. Bain, L. & C. 129; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 88; 9 Cox, 98 (C. C. R.).

Indictment for breaking into a Building within the curtilage of a Dwelling-house, etc. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 55, ante, p. 621); and see s. 53 (ante, p. 621.)

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—a certain building of one J. N., situate in the parish of ——, in the county of ——, feloniously did break and enter (the said building then being within the curtilage of the dwelling-house of the said J. N., there situate, and by the said J. N. then and there occupied therewith, and there being then [and there] no communication between the said building and the said dwelling-house, either immediate or by means of any covered and enclosed passage leading from the one to the other), with intent the goods and chattels of the said J. N. in the said building then being, feloniously to steal, take, and carry away, and that the said J. S. then [and there] in the said building, one silver watch, of the goods and chattels of the said J. N., feloniously did steal, take, and carry away; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. This count may be added to an indictment for burglary, house-breaking, or stealing in a dwelling-house to the amount of five pounds, and should be added whenever it is doubtful whether the building is in strictness a dwelling-house. If the evidence fail to prove the actual stealing, but the breaking, entry, and intent to steal be proved, the prisoner may be convicted under this indictment of the felony described in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 57 (ante, p. 623).

Felony: penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 55 (ante, p. 622); 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 431).

Evidence.

To support this indictment, you must prove that the defendant broke and entered the building in question; that the building so broken and entered was occupied, at the time when the offence was committed, by J. N., together with his dwelling-house, and was within the curtilage thereof; that the defendant there stole the goods, etc., enumerated in the indictment; and that the building is situate as described in the indictment.

The breaking and entering must be proved in the same manner as in burglary (ante, p. 631), except that it is immaterial whether it be done in the day or night. If this proof fail, the defendant may be convicted of simple larceny.

Within the curtilage.]—The building described in the statute is "any building within the curtilage of a dwelling-house, and occupied therewith, not being part of the dwelling-house," that is, "not communicating with the dwelling-house, either immediately or by means of a covered and enclosed passage leading from the one to the other." In "Termes de la Ley," curtilage is defined as a "garden, yard, or piece of void ground lying near to or belonging to the messuage;" so also "Shepherd's Touchstone," 94, with the further explanation, "something which would pass by conveyance of the messuage." To break and enter a building within the curtilage was, before the present statute, burglary, or house-breaking. If the barn, stable, or warehouse be parcel of the mansion-house, and within the same common fence, though not under the same roof and contiguous, a burglary may be committed therein; 4 Bl Com. 224; but if the buildings be removed at any distance from the house, "it has not been usual of late to proceed against offences therein as burglaries;" 1 Hawk. c. 38, s. 22: see 28 L. J. Newsp., 858; and although the present enactment, which expressly defines the building meant thereby to be a building within the curtilage, excludes many buildings which were formerly deemed parcel of the dwelling-house, from their adjoining to the dwelling-house, and being occupied therewith, although not within any common enclosure or curtilage; yet some of the cases decided upon these subjects may afford some guide to the construction of the present section. Where the defendant broke into a goose-house, which opened into the prosecutor's yard, into which yard the prosecutor's house also opened, and the yard was surrounded, partly by other buildings of the homestead, and partly by a wall in which there was a gate leading to the road, and some of the buildings had doors opening into the lane, as well as into the yard, the goose-house was held to be part of the dwelling-house. R. v. Clayburn, R. & R. 360. Where the prosecutor's house was at the corner of a street, and adjoining thereto was a workshop, beyond which a coach-house and stable adjoined, all of which were used with the house, and had doors opening into a yard belonging to the house, which yard was surrounded by adjoining buildings, and was altogether enclosed, but the shop had no internal communication with the house, had a door opening into the street, and its roof was higher than that of the house, the workshop was held to be parcel of the dwelling-house. R. v. Chalking, R. & R. 334. So, a warehouse, which had a separate entrance from the street, and had no internal communication with the dwelling-house, with which it was occupied, but was under the same roof, and had a back-door opening into the yard into which the house also opened, and which enclosed both, was held to be part of the dwelling-house. R. v. Lithgo, R. & R. 357. So, where in one range of buildings the prosecutor had a warehouse and two dwelling-houses, formerly one house, all of which had entrances into the street, but had also doors opening into an enclosed yard belonging to the prosecutor; and the prosecutor let one of the houses between his house and the warehouse together with certain easements in the yard; it was held that the warehouse was parcel of the dwelling-house of the prosecutor before the division of the house, and remained so afterwards. R. v. Walters, 1 Mood. C. C. 13. And where the dwelling-house of the prosecutor was in the centre of a space of about an acre of land, surrounded by a garden wall, the front wall of a factory, and the wall of the stable-yard, the whole being the property of the prosecutor, who used the factory, partly for his own business and partly in a business in which he had a partner; and the factory opened into an open passage, into which the outer door of the dwelling-house also opened; it was held that the factory was properly described as the dwelling-house of the prosecutor. R. v. Hancock, R. & R. 170. See R. v. Egginton, 2 Leach, 913; 2 B. & P. 508; 5 R. R. 689: R. v. Sefton, R. & R. 202 (ante, p. 630). But a building separated from the dwelling-house by a public thoroughfare cannot be deemed to be part of the dwelling-house. R. v. Westwood, R. & R. 495; nor, semble, to be within the curtilage. So, neither is a wall, gate, or other fence, being part of the outward fence of the curtilage, and opening into no building, but into the yard only, part of the dwelling-house. R. v. Bennett, R. & R. 289; nor is a gate of an area, which opens into the area only, if there be a door or fastening to prevent persons from passing from the area into the house, although that door or other fastening may not be secured at the time. R. v. Davis, R. & R. 322. Where the building broken into was in the fold-yard of the prosecutor's farm, to get to which from the house it was necessary to pass through another yard called the pump-yard, into which the back door of the house opened, the pump-yard being divided from the fold-yard by a wall four feet high, in which there was a gate, and the fold-yard being bounded on all sides by the farm buildings, a wall from the house, a hedge and gates; it was held that the building was within the curtilage. R. v. Gilbert, 1 C. & K. 84. As to the meaning of "curtilage" in connexion with a will or conveyance of lands: see Wright v. Wallaseg Local Board, 18 Q. B. D. 783; Marson v. L. C. & D. R. Co., L. R. 6 Eq. 101; 37 L. J. (Ch.) 433 and Stroud Jud. Dict. (2nd ed.) s. v.

From analogy to the authorities cited, ante, p. 80, it would seem to be unnecessary to negative, in the indictment, that the building communicated with the dwelling-house, either immediately or by means of a covered and enclosed way: and from the same analogy it would seem that the defendant might be convicted upon this indictment, though the building should appear in fact to be part of the dwelling-house, and the evidence amount to proof of a burglary. But as this point has not been directly decided, the analogy between this and the cases alluded to may be questioned; the prosecutor should therefore be prepared with evidence to prove that the building did not so communicate with the dwelling-house, and if it be doubtful whether the building be in fact part of the dwelling-house, a count should be added for burglary or housebreaking.

The larceny in the building must be proved in the same manner as upon an indictment for housebreaking (ante, p. 640), or stealing in a dwelling-house (ante, p. 642).

ARSON.

SETTING FIRE TO HOUSES AND OTHER BUILDINGS, ETC.

Common Law.

At common law, arson is the malicious and voluntary burning of the house of another by night or day: 1 Hale, 566; 1 Hawk. c. 39, ss. 1, 7–15. "House" includes not only the dwelling-house but all outhouses which are present thereof, though not contiguous nor under the same roof, such as the barn, stable, cow-house, sheep-house, dairy-house, or mill-house. 1 Hale, 567. The common law has been supplemented by the enactments given below. Under the statute it is immaterial whether the house be that of a third person or be in the possession of the person charged with setting fire to it. R. v. Newboult, L. R. 1 C. C. R., 344: 41 L. J. (M. C.) 62; 12 Cox, 148.

[This section re-enacts 14 & 15 Vict. c. 19, s. 8, with the addition of the words italicized.]

Sect. 5.—Setting fire to public buildings.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously set fire to any building, other than such as are in this Act before mentioned, belonging to the [King], or to any county, riding, division, city, borough, poor law union, parish or place, or belonging to any university, or college or hall of any university, or to any inn of court, or devoted or dedicated to public use or ornament, or erected or maintained by public subscription or contribution, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for life . . . or to be imprisoned . . . and, if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping. [This section was new law in 1861; see R. v. Donnavan, 1 Leach, 69; 2 W. Bl. 683; 2 East, P. C. 1020.]

Sect. 6—Setting fire to other buildings.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously set fire to any building other than such as are in this Act before mentioned shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding fourteen years . . . or to be imprisoned . . . and, if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping. Sect. 8—Attempt to fire buildings.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously by any overt act attempt to set fire to any building, or any matter or thing in the last preceding section mentioned, under such circumstances that if the same were thereby set fire to the offender would be guilty of felony, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding fourteen . . . years, or to be imprisoned . . . and, if a male, under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping.

[This section re-enacts 9 & 10 Vict. c. 25, s. 7, with the addition in italics. For indictment, see post, p. 656].

Sect. 56—Accessories, etc.]—In the case of every felony punishable under this Act, every principal in the second degree, and every accessory before the fact, shall be punishable in the same manner as the principal in the first degree is by this Act punishable; and every accessory after the fact to any felony punishable under this Act shall on conviction be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement; and every person who shall aid, abet, counsel, or procure the commission of any misdemeanor punishable under this Act, shall be liable to be proceeded against, indicted, and punished as a principal offender. [See ante, pp. 12–21.]

Sect. 57—Persons loitering at night, and suspected of felony against this Act may be apprehended.]—Any constable or peace officer may take into custody, without warrant, any person whom he shall find lying or loitering in any highway, yard, or other place, during the night, and whom he shall have good cause to suspect of having committed or being about to commit any felony against this Act, and shall take such person as soon as reasonably may be before a justice of the peace, to be dealt with according to law. [This section is an extension of 9 & 10 Vict. c. 25, ss. 13, 14.]

Sect. 58—Malice against owner of property unnecessary.]—Every punishment and forfeiture by this Act imposed on any person maliciously committing any offence, whether the same be punishable upon indictment or upon summary conviction, shall equally apply and be enforced, whether the offence shall be committed from malice conceived against the owner of the property in respect of which it shall be committed or otherwise. [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 Vict. c. 30, s. 25, and 8 & 9 Vict. c. 44, s. 2.]

Sect. 59—Act to apply to persons in possession of property injured.]—Every provision of this Act not hereinbefore so applied shall apply to every person who, with intent to injure or defraud any other person, shall do any of the acts hereinbefore made penal, although the offender shall be in possession of the property against or in respect of which such act shall be done. [This was new law in 1861, and intended to bring tenants and bailees within the Act. As to the former law, see Mills v. Collett, 6 Bing. 85.]

Sect. 60—Indictment—Intent to injure or defraud.]—It shall be sufficient in any indictment for any offence against this Act, where it shall be necessary to allege any intent to injure or defraud, to allege that the party accused did the act with intent to injure or defraud (as the case may be), without alleging an intent to injure or defraud any particular person; and on the trial of any such offence it shall not be necessary to prove an intent to injure or defraud any particular person, but it shall be sufficient to prove that the party accused did the act charged with an intent to injure or defraud (as the case may be). [This section was new law as to malicious damage in 1861.]

Sect. 61—Apprehension of offenders.]—Any person found committing any offence against this Act, whether the same be punishable upon indictment or upon summary conviction, may be immediately apprehended, without a warrant, by any peace officer, or the owner of the property injured, or his servant, or any person authorized by him, and forthwith taken before some neighbouring justice of the peace, to be dealt with according to law. [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 30, s. 28.]

Sect. 67—Summary conviction a bar to other proceedings.]—When any person convicted of any offence punishable upon summary conviction by virtue of this Act shall have paid the sum adjudged to be paid, together with costs, under such conviction, or shall have received a remission thereof from the crown, or the lord-lieutenant . . . of Ireland, or shall have suffered the imprisonment awarded for non-payment thereof, or the imprisonment awarded in the first instance, or shall have been so discharged from his conviction by any justice as aforesaid, he shall be released from all further or other proceedings for the same cause. [This section was framed from 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 30, s. 36, and 22 & 23 Vict. c. 32.]

Sect. 72—Admiralty offences.]—All indictable offences mentioned in this Act which shall be committed within the jurisdiction of the admiralty of England or Ireland shall be deemed to be offences of the same nature and liable to the same punishments as if they had been committed upon the land in England or Ireland, and may be dealt with, inquired of, tried, and determined in any county or place in England or Ireland in which the offender shall be apprehended or be in custody, in the same manner in all respects as if they had been actually committed in that county or place; and in any indictment for any such offence, or for being an accessory to such an offence, the venue in the margin shall be the same as if the offence had been committed in such county or place, and the offence shall be averred to have been committed "on the high seas:" provided that nothing herein contained shall alter or affect any of the laws relating to the government of [his] Majesty's land or naval forces. (See ante, pp. 39–43.)

Sect. 73—Fine and sureties.]—Whenever any person shall be convicted of any indictable misdemeanor punishable under this Act, the court may, if it shall think fit, in addition to or in lieu of any of the punishments by this Act authorized, fine the offender, and require him to enter into his own recognizances, and to find sureties, both or either, for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour; and in case of any felony punishable under this Act, the court may, if it shall think fit, require the offender to enter into his own recognizances, and to find sureties, both or either, for keeping the peace, in addition to any punishment by this Act authorized; provided that no person shall be imprisoned under this clause for not finding sureties for any period exceeding one year. (See ante, p. 240.)

Sect. 75—Whipping.]— . . . whenever whipping may be awarded for any indictable offence under this Act, the court may sentence the offender to be once privately whipped; and the number of strokes, and the instrument with which they shall be inflicted, shall be specified by the court in the sentence. (See ante, p. 239.)

Sect. 77—Cost of prosecutions.]—The court before which any indictable misdemeanor against this Act shall be prosecuted or tried may allow the costs of the prosecution in the same manner as in cases of felony; and every order for the payment of such costs shall be made out, and the sum of money mentioned therein paid and repaid upon the same terms and in the same manner in all respects as in cases of felony. [This was new law in 1861; see ante, p. 246, et seq.]

Indictment for setting Fire to a House, with Intent, etc. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 3, ante, p. 647.)

Central Criminal Court to wit:—The jurors of our lord the King upon their oath present, that J. S., on the first day of June, in the year of our Lord ——, feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously did set fire to a certain house ("any house, stable, coach-house, outhouse, warehouse, office, shop, mill, malt-house, hop-oast, barn, store-house, granary, hovel, shed, or fold, or any farm-building, or building or erection used in farming land or in carrying on any trade or manufacture, or any branch thereof") situate in the parish of B., and county of L., and within the jurisdiction of the said Court, with intent thereby to injure [or to defraud ("to injure or defraud any person")]; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. Where the indictment omitted the word "unlawfully," the judges held it to be bad. R. v. Reader, 4 C. & P. 245; 1 Mood. C. C. 239. It is not necessary to state the ownership of the house, and if it is stated it is immaterial and need not be proved. R. v. Newboult, L. R., 1 C. C. R. 344; 41 L. J. (M. C.) 63; 12 Cox, 148. It is sufficient to allege that the party accused did the act with intent to injure or defraud (as the case may be) without alleging an intent to injure or defraud any particular person. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 60 (ante, p. 649): R. v. Newboult, ubi supra.

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and, if a male under sixteen years of age, with or without whipping. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 3; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 73 (ante, p. 650).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

On the first day of June, etc.]—The time here stated need not be proved as laid: if the offence be proved to have been committed at any time before or after, provided it be some day before the finding of the indictment, it is sufficient. (See ante, p. 297.)

The parish is material, for it is stated as part of the local description of the house burnt. (Ante, p. 298.) Therefore, if the house be proved to be situate in another parish, the defendant must be acquitted, unless the variance be amended.

Feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously.]—The burning must be done wilfully and maliciously, in order to be an offence, either at common law or under the statute; and therefore no negligence or mischance amounts to it. 4 Bl. Com. 222: 3 Co. Inst. 67; 1 Hawk. c. 39, s. 19; 1 Hale, 566; unless the prisoner does the act recklessly, without caring whether the house is set on fire or not. R. v. Child, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 307; 40 L. J. (M. C.) 127: R. v. Pembliton, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 119; 43 L. J. (M. C.) 91: R. v. Welch, 1 Q. B. D. 23; 45 L. J. (M. C.) 17; 13 Cox, 121 (and see post, p. 701). For which reason, though an unqualified person, by shooting with a gun, happen to set fire to the thatch of a house, this Lord Hale determines not to be felony, contrary to the opinion of former writers. 1 Hale, 569. But see R. v. Dossett, 2 C. & K. 306 (post, p. 653). But if a man, intending to commit a felony, by accident set fire to another's house, this, it has been said, would be arson at common law, and also within the old statutes. But see R. v. Faulkner, 13 Cox, 550; Ir. Rep. 11 C. L. 8 (post, p. 659). If, intending to set fire to the house of A., he accidentally set fire to that of B., it is felony. 1 Hale, 569. And if a man, by wilfully setting fire to his own house, burn also the house of one of his neighbours, it will be felony (see R. v. Probert, 2 East, P. C. 1030; R. v. Isaac, Id. 1031); for the law, in such a case, implies malice, particularly if the party's house were so situate that the probable consequence of its taking fire was that the fire would communicate to the houses in its neighbourhood; and generally, if the act be proved to have been done wilfully, it may be inferred to have been done maliciously, unless the contrary be proved. Bromage v. Prosser, 4 B. & C. 247, 255 (ante, p. 343). The absence of malice or spite against the owner or occupier is no answer to the charge. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 58 (ante, p. 649); see R. v. Salmon, R. & R. 26; R. v. Davies, 1 F. & F. 69.

Set fire to.]—The words in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, ss. 1-7, are "set fire to," merely; and therefore it is not necessary to aver in the indictment that the house, etc., was burnt; nor need it be proved that the house, etc., was actually consumed, nor that any flame was visible. R. v. Salmon, R. & R. 26: R. v. Stallion, 1 Mood, C. C. 398. But within this Act, as well as to constitute the offence of arson at common law, there must be an actual burning of some part of the house; a bare intent, or attempt to do it, is not sufficient. Where, upon an indictment under 9 G. 1, c. 22 (rep.), for setting fire to a paper-mill, it appeared that the defendant set fire to some paper that was drying in one of the lofts, but that no part of the mill itself was burnt; the judges held, that it did not amount to an offence within the Act. R. v. Taylor, 1 Leach, 49. And where the defendant set fire to a parcel of unthreshed wheat it was held not to be within that statute. R. v. Judd, 2 T. R. 255; 1 R. R. 477. But the burning and consuming of any part of the house, however trifling, was sufficient, although the fire be afterwards extinguished. 1 Hawk. c. 39, s. 17; 3 Co. Inst. 66; 1 Hale, 569; Dalt. c. 159. Where, on an indictment under 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 89. s. 3 (rep.), it was proved that the "floor of a room was scorched; that it was charred in a trifling way; it had been at a red heat, but not in a blaze," this was held a sufficient burning to support the indictment. R. v. Parker, 9 C. & P. 45, Bosanquet, J., and Parke, B. But where, a small faggot having been set on fire on the boarded floor of a room, the boards were thereby "scorched black, but not burnt," and no part of the wood was consumed: this was not held sufficient. R. v. Russell, C. & Mar. 541, Cresswell, J. By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 7 (ante, p. 648), the maliciously setting fire to "any matter or thing being in, against, or under any building, under such circumstances that if the building were thereby set fire to the offence would amount to felony," is itself made a felony. The prisoner maliciously set fire to goods in a dwelling-house with intent to injure the owner of the goods, who was a lodger in the house, and not to injure the house or the landlord. The house, though endangered, was not set fire to. The prisoner was indicted for the offence described in section 7, supra, and the jury found him "guilty, but not so that if the house had caught fire, the setting fire to the house would have been wilful and malicious." This was held to be equivalent to a finding that the prisoner was not aware that what he was doing would probably set the house on fire, and so necessarily injure the owner; and that he was not reckless as to whether it took fire or not;

and that upon such finding the prisoner was not properly convicted. R. v. Child, L. R., 1 C. C. R. 307; 40 L. J. (M. C.) 127; 12 Cox, 64. If a person maliciously, with intent to injure another by merely burning his goods, sets fire to such goods in his house, that does not amount to a felony under section 7, even although the house catches fire, unless the circumstances are such as to show that the person setting fire to the goods knew that by so doing he would probably cause the house also to take fire, and was reckless whether it did so or not, in which case there would be abundant evidence that he intended to bring about the probable consequence of his act, namely, the burning of the house. R. v. Nattrass, 15 Cox, 73: R. v. Harris, Id. 75; 95 Cent. Cr. Ct. Sess. Pap. 523, Hawkins, J. It is not necessary in an indictment under section 7 to allege an intent to defraud, and it is sufficient to follow the words of the section without setting forth the particular "circumstances" relied on as constituting the offence. R. v. Heseltine, 12 Cox, 404, Pollock, B., after consulting with Archibald, J. Wilfully throwing a light into a post-office letter-box in a house with intent to burn the letters, but not the house, is not a felony within section 7. R. v. Batstone, 10 Cox, 20.

It is seldom that a wilful burning by the defendant can be made out by direct proof; the jury, in general, have to presume the defendant's guilt from circumstantial evidence. (See ante, p. 340.) Where a house was robbed and burnt, the defendant being found in possession of some of the goods which were in the house at the time it was burnt, was admitted as evidence tending to prove him guilty of the arson. R. v. Rickman, 2 East, P. C. 1035. So, where the question is whether the burning was accidental or wilful, evidence is admissible to show that on another occasion the defendant was in such a situation as to render it probable that he was then engaged in the commission of the like offence against the same property. R. v. Dossett, 2 C. & K. 306; 2 Cox, 243, Maule, J. And see R. v. Taylor, 5 Cox, 138: R. v. Harris, 4 F. & F. 342, Willes, J.: R. v. Gray, 4 F. & F. 1102, Willes, J. (ante, p. 310). But on a charge of arson, where the question was as to the identity of the prisoner, evidence that a few days previous to the fire in question another building of the prosecutor's was on fire, and that the prisoner was then standing by with a demeanor which showed indifference or gratification, was rejected. R. v. Harris, ubi supra. As to the admissibility of evidence of the commission of other offences in support of a charge of arson, see ante, p. 309.

Evidence of experiments made after a fire are admissible to show how the building was set on fire. R. v. Heseltine, 12 Cox, 404, Pollock, B.

A certain dwelling-house.]—As to the common law, see ante, p. 647. The present statute extends to the burning of any house, stable, coach-house, outhouse, warehouse, office, shop, mill, malt-house, hop-oast, barn, storehouse, granary, hovel, shed, or fold, or of any farm-building, or any building or erection used in farming land or in carrying on any trade or manufacture, or any branch thereof. Upon an indictment for burning a dwelling-house, either at common law or under the statute, it would, perhaps, be sufficient to prove a burning of a building, parcel of the dwelling-house. (See ante, p. 625.) Outhouse seems to mean some building annexed or accessory to a dwelling-house. R. v. Hammond, 1 Cox, 60, Alderson, B. Where an outhouse was burnt, and an indictment under 9 G. 1, c. 22 (rep.), described it as a "certain outhouse," an objection, that the offence should have been described as a burning of the dwelling-house (the word "outhouse" in the statute meaning, as it was suggested, an outhouse which is not parcel of the dwelling-house), was overruled by the judges. R. v. North, 2 East, P. C. 1021. So, where the indictment described the house, in some of the counts, as "a certain outhouse," in others as a "certain house," and the evidence was of a burning of a school-room, separated from the dwelling-house by a small passage, but the roof of one extending over the roof of the other; it was held that the evidence satisfied the description in both sets of counts. R. v. Winter, R. & R. 295. Where the indictment under 9 G. 1, c. 22 (rep.), charged the burning of "a certain house" of the corporation of Liverpool, and the proof was of a burning of a gaol belonging to the corporation, the judges held it to be sufficient. R. v. Donnavan, 1 Leach, 69; 2 East, P. C. 1020; 2 W. Bl. 683. But in R. v. Connor, 2 Cox, 65, a gaol was held by Parke, B., not to be a dwelling-house, and it falls rather within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 5 (ante, p. 648). An unfinished building, intended, when finished, to be used as a house, is not a "house" within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 3 (ante, p. 647). R. v. Edgell, 11 Cox, 132. But an unfinished house, of which all the walls, external and internal, are built and finished, the roof on and finished, the flooring of a considerable part laid, and the internal walls and ceilings prepared for plastering, is a "building" within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 6 (ante, p. 648); R. v. Manning, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 338; 41 L. J. (M. C.) 11; quære, however, whether an unfinished house, the walls of which had only been raised a short distance from the ground, would be a "building" within s. 6. Id. Many of the distinctions raised in the older cases were rendered immaterial by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 62, s. 1 (rep.), (of which 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 3, is in this respect a re-enactment), which extends to "any hovel, shed, or fold, or any farm building, or any building or erection used in farming land: and arson in respect of "any building other than such are in this Act before mentioned" is specifically dealt with in section 6 of the present statute. A building twenty-four feet square, with wooden sides, glass windows, slated roof, and commonly called the workshop, used as a storehouse for seasoned timber, as a place for the deposit of tools, and for the working up of timber, was held to be well described as a "shed" under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 62, s. 1 (rep.), ubi supra. R. v. Amos, 2 Den. 65; 20 L. J. (M. C.) 103; 5 Cox, 222; cf. R. v. Munson, 2 Cox, 186, Coleridge, J.

It is unnecessary, in an indictment under s. 3 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, to allege the ownership of the house, nor need the ownership be proved. R. v. Newboult, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 344; 41 L. J. (M. C.) 63; 12 Cox, 148; in that case the house was described in the indictment as "of and belonging to" the prisoner, and he was charged with setting fire to it "with intent thereby to injure," without mentioning the person intended to be injured: it was held that he might be convicted of setting fire to the house, of which he was proved to be merely the tenant, with intent to injure the landlord. R. v. Newboult renders of little practical value the following decisions under former statutes: R. v. Glandfield, 2 East, P. C. 1034: R. v. Rickman, Id.: R. v. Ball, 1 Mood. C. C. 30: and R. v. Wallis, Id. 344. At common law, and under 9 G. 1, c. 22 (rep.), it was necessary to describe and prove the house to be the house of another; as a man could not commit arson by firing his own house. See R. v. Gowen, 1 Leach, 246, n.; 2 East, P. C. 1027: R. v. Harris, 2 East, P. C. 1023.

With intent, etc.]—It is not necessary to allege or prove an intent to injure or defraud any particular person, but it is sufficient to prove that the party accused did the act charged with an intent to injure or defraud (as the case may be). 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 60 (ante, p. 649). Where the offence consists of the setting fire to the house of a third person, the intent to injure that person is inferred from the act, for every person is deemed to intend the necessary consequences of his own act: and therefore where the defendant was indicted for setting fire to a certain mill, with intent to injure the occupiers thereof, it was held that he was properly convicted, although it appeared at the trial that he was a harmless, inoffensive man, and had no motive to induce him to commit the act. R. v. Farrington, R. & R. 207. (See ante, p. 343.) But this doctrine can only arise where the act is wilful; and therefore, if the fire appear to be the result of accident, the party who is the cause of it will not be liable. (Ante, p. 652, and see 14 G. 3, c. 78, s. 86.) On the other hand, where the defendant is charged with setting fire to his own house, the intent to defraud cannot be inferred from the act itself, but must be proved by other evidence. Where, therefore, upon an indictment for arson with intent to defraud an insurance company, the policy must be produced, or secondary evidence of it given after a proper notice to produce. It is now immaterial whether the policy is stamped: 54 & 55 Vict. c. 39, s. 14, sub-s. 4 (ante, p. 383). And where a sufficient notice to produce the policy had not been given, it was held that secondary evidence of it could not be given, and there being no other evidence of the insurance, that the defendant must be acquitted. R. v. Kitson, Dears. 187; 22 L. J. (M. C.) 118; 6 Cox, 159 (C. C. R.): R. v. Doran, 1 Esp. 127. As to the length of notice necessary, see R. v. Ellicombe, 1 M. & Rob. 260; 5 C. & P. 522: R. v. Barker, 1 F. & F. 326. Where on a trial for arson, with intent to defraud an insurance office, no policy of insurance was produced, and the only evidence of its existence was that of the agent of the insurance company, who stated that the prisoner came to him in May, 1867, about effecting an insurance on the premises, the subject of the alleged arson, and that on the 30th of August, 1871 (about a month before the alleged arson), the prisoner came again to him, and said he wished to renew his policy, and then paid 10*s*. This was held to be sufficient evidence of the existence of an insurance, as being an admission by the prisoner that there was a policy. R. v. Newboult (ante, p. 654). It was held before the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (see s. 16, ante, p. 443), that a married woman could not be indicted for setting fire to the house of her husband with intent to injure him. R. v. March, 1 Mood. C. C. 182. Where, on an indictment for arson, the counsel for the prosecution, in opening the case, suggested as a motive for the act the desire to realize the sum insured by the prisoner upon her goods, evidence was admitted to show that she was in easy circumstances, so as to negative the motive suggested. R. v. Grant, 4 F. & F. 322, Pollock, C.B.

Indictment for setting Fire to a Church or Chapel. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 1, ante, p. 647.)

Commencement as ante, p. 651]—feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously did set fire to a certain church ("any church, chapel, meeting-house, or other place of divine worship") situate at the parish of B., in the county of M.; against the form [as ante, p 465].

Felony: 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 1. See the precedent, ante, p. 651.

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant set fire (see ante, p. 652) to the church or chapel, situate as described in the indictment (see ante, p. 653). It seems unnecessary in an indictment for setting fire to a dissenting chapel to allege or prove that it has been registered under 31 G. 3, c. 32; 52 G.

3, c. 153, and 18 & 19 Vict. c. 81, since the words "duly registered as recorded" which occurred in 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 30, s. 8, were not re-enacted when that statute was repealed by 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 89, s. 3, and do not appear in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 1.

Indictment for setting Fire to a Dwelling-house, some Person being therein. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 2, ante, p. 647.)

Commencement as ante, p. 651]—feloniously, unlawfully and maliciously did set fire to a certain dwelling-house ("any dwelling-house") of J. N., situate at the parish of B., in the county of M., one J. L., and M., his wife, then, to wit, at the time of the committing of the felony aforesaid, being in the said dwelling-house; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. The defendant cannot, upon this indictment, be convicted under s. 3 (ante, p. 647), because under that section an intent to injure or defraud must be alleged and proved. R. v. Paice, 1 C. & K. 73.

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour; and, if a male under sixteen years, with or without whipping.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 2 (ante, p. 647); 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 73 (ante, p. 649).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant wilfully set fire to the dwelling-house (see ante, p. 652); and that at the time J. L. and his wife were in the house. It is not sufficient to prove that they were in the house at the time when the defendant set fire to an adjoining building, from which the flames communicated to the house, they having then left it. R. v. Fletcher, 2 C. & K. 215: R. v. Warren, 1 Cox, 68. The offence is committed even if the prisoner was the only person in the house when he sets fire to it. R. v. Pardoe, 17 Cox, 715, Coleridge, C.J. If any one in the house is burnt by an offence within this section the incendiary is indictable for murder. R. v. Serné, 16 Cox, 311, Stephen, J.

Indictment for Attempting to set Fire to a Building. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 8, ante, p. 648.)

Commencement as ante, p. 651]—feloniously, unlawfully and maliciously did attempt by then, etc. (state the overt act—"by any overt act") feloniously, unlawfully and maliciously, to set fire to a certain building (describe the building as in the precedents, pp. 651, 655, and supra: "any building or any matter or thing 'being in, against, or under any building,' under such circumstances that if the same were thereby set fire to, the offence would amount to felony") situate at the parish of B., in the county of M., [with intent thereby then to injure (injure or defraud)]; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. See Greaves' Crim. Law Cons. Acts (2nd ed.), 213–215.

Felony: penal servitude for not more than fourteen and not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years with or without hard labour; and, if a male under sixteen years, with or without whipping.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 8; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 73 (ante, p. 649).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant attempted, by the means stated in the indictment, wilfully to set fire to the house (see ante, p. 652): and that it was situated as described in the indictment. (See ante, p. 653.) And prove circumstances from which the jury may infer the intent as laid. (See ante, p. 340.) In many cases no allegation or proof of intent will be necessary: (see ss. 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, ante, pp. 647, 648). Wilfully throwing a light into a post-office letter-box in a house with intent to burn the letters, but not the house, is not a felony within this enactment. R. v. Batstone, 10 Cox, 20.

SETTING FIRE TO COAL MINES, ETC.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. 97 (Malicious Damage Act, 1861), s. 26.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously set fire to any mine of coal, cannel coal, anthracite, or other mineral fuel shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for life . . . or to be imprisoned . . . and if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping. [This section is taken from 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 89, s. 9, and 9 & 10 Vict. c. 25, s. 9, with the additions italicized.]

Sect. 27—Attempting to set fire to mines.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously by any overt act attempt to set fire to any mine, under such circumstances that if the mine were thereby set fire to the offender would be guilty of felony, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding fourteen . . . years, or to be imprisoned . . . and, if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping. [This section re-enacts 9 & 10 Vict. c. 25, s. 7, with the additions italicized.]

Indictment for setting Fire to a Coal Mine. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 26.)

Commencement as ante, p. 651]—feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously did set fire to a certain mine of coal ("any mine of coal, cannel coal, anthracite, or other mineral fuel") [of J. N.] situate at the parish of B., in the county of M.; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour; and, if a male under sixteen years, with or without whipping.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 26; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 73 (ante, p. 650).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant set fire to the mine as described in the indictment. (See ante, pp. 652, 653.) As to proof of the allegation "of J. N." see R. v. Newboult, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 344 (ante, p. 654). It is equally an offence within this Act to set fire to a mine in the possession of the party himself, where it is proved to be done with intent to injure or defraud any other person; s. 59 (ante, p. 649).—See ante, p. 654.

SETTING FIRE TO OR DESTROYING SHIPS, ETC.

Statutes.

If any person or persons shall either within this realm, or in any of the islands, countries, forts, or places thereunto belonging, wilfully and maliciously set on fire or burn, or otherwise destroy, or cause to be set on fire, or burnt, or otherwise destroyed, or aid and procure, abet, or assist in the setting on fire, or burning, or otherwise destroying any of his Majesty's ships or vessels of war, whether the said ships or vessels of war be on float or building, or begun to be built, in any of his Majesty's dockyards, or building or repairing in any private yards, for the use of his Majesty, or any of his Majesty's arsenals, magazines, dockyards, rope-yards, victualling offices, or any of the buildings erected therein or belonging thereto, or any timber or materials therein placed for building or repairing, or fitting out of ships or vessels; or any part of his Majesty's military, naval, or victualling stores, or other ammunition of war, or any place or places where such military, naval, or victualling stores, or other ammunition of war is or shall be kept, or deposited; that then the person or persons guilty of any such offence being thereof convicted in due form of law shall be guilty of felony, and shall suffer death as in cases of felony . . . Sect. 43.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously set fire to, or cast away, or in anywise destroy any ship or vessel, with intent thereby to prejudice any owner or part-owner of such ship or vessel, or of any goods on board the same, or any person that has underwritten or shall underwrite any policy of insurance upon such ship or vessel, or on the freight thereof, or upon any goods on board the same, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for life . . . or to be imprisoned

Indictment for setting Fire to a Ship. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 42, supra.)

Cornwall, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present, that J. S., on the 1st day of June, in the year of our Lord ——, feloniously, unlawfully and maliciously did set fire to a certain ship ("any ship or vessel, whether the same be complete or in an unfinished state") called the "Rattler," the property of J. N.; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. If the offence be committed upon the high seas, see the next precedent.

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and, if a male under sixteen years, with or without whipping.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 42; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 8, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 73 (ante, p. 650).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant set fire to the ship. (See ante, 652.) Where a sailor on board a ship entered a part of the vessel where spirits were kept, for the purpose of stealing rum, and, while tapping a cask of rum, a lighted match, held by him, came in contact with the spirits which were flowing from the cask tapped by him, and a fire ensued which destroyed the vessel, it was held that a conviction for arson of the ship could not be upheld. R. v. Faulkner, Ir. Rep. 11 C. L. 8; 13 Cox, 550. It is immaterial whether the ship were complete or in an unfinished state. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 42. Where a pleasure boat, eighteen feet long, was set fire to, Patteson, J., inclined to think that it was a vessel within the meaning of 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 30, s. 10 (rep.), but the prisoner was acquitted on the merits, and no decided opinion was given. R. v. Bowyer, 4 C. & P. 559, Patteson, J. Upon an indictment for firing a barge. Alderson, B., said, that if the prisoner was convicted he would take the opinion of the judges as to whether a barge was within the meaning of that statute: the prisoner was acquitted. R. v. Smith, 4 C. & P. 569. The burning of a ship, of which the defendant was a part-owner, was held within 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 30, s. 10: R. v. Wallace, C. & Mar. 200; 2 Mood. C. C. 200. (See s. 59, ante, p. 649.)

Prove that it was done maliciously (see ante, p. 651), and prove the ownership of the ship as described in the indictment. Where, upon an indictment against the defendant for setting fire to a ship with intent to prejudice E. and G. his part-owners, it appeared that the defendant had declared that E. and G. were part-owners, and a bill of sale was produced, by which forty-three sixty-fourths of the vessel were transferred by the defendant, the sole owners to E. and G.; and also an entry in the books of registry, in the following form:—Custom House, Padstow, 11th August, 1829. W. P., of etc., has sold, by bill of sale, dated, etc., forty-three sixty-fourth shares, to N. G., of etc., and R. E., of etc., Signed," etc.,— and it was objected that the bill of sale was not valid, because by 6 G. 4, c. 110, s. 37 (rep.), the entry must contain not only the date of the bill of sale, but also the date of the production of it, the judge thought that the date, 11th August, in the commencement of the entry, might be considered as the date of the production of it, particularly as the entry followed the form given by the statute; and it was held that the defendant was properly convicted. R. v. Philp, 1 Mood. C. C. 263. Indeed, it would seem that acts of ownership would of themselves be sufficient to prove this allegation, subject to contradiction by the entry in the register. Registry of a British ship is now proved under 57 & 58 Vict. c. 60, s. 64 (ante, p. 351).

Yorkshire, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King, upon their oath present, that J. S., on the first day of August, in the year of our Lord ——, on board a certain ship called the "Rattler," the property of J. N., on a certain voyage upon the high seas, then being upon the high seas, feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously did set fire to the said ship ("any ship or vessel"), with intent thereby to prejudice the said J. N., the owner ("owner or part-owner") of the said ship; [or, one E. F., the owner of certain goods, then laden and being on board the said ship; or, one E. F., who had before then underwritten a certain policy of assurance on the said ship (or, on the freight of the said ship; or, on certain goods then being on board the said ship), which said policy was then in full force and operation ("the owner or part-owner of such ship or vessel, or of any goods on board the same, or any person who has underwritten or shall underwrite any policy of insurance upon such ship or vessel, or on the freight thereof, or upon any goods on board the same");] against the form [as ante, p. 465). The intent may be stated in different ways in different counts. See R. v. Smith, 4 C. & P. 569: R. v. Bowyer, Id. 559. As to the venue, see ante, p. 38 et seq.

Felony: 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 43. The punishments are the same as under the last precedent.

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

If the intent be laid to prejudice the owner of the ship or goods, prove the case as directed under the last form; and in the latter case prove the shipment of the goods. In R. v. Philp, 1 Mood. C. C. 263 (supra), there was no proof of malice against the owners, and the ship was insured for more than its value; but the judge thought that the defendant must be understood to contemplate the consequence of his act; and the judges held that, as to this point, the conviction was right. See R. v. Newill, 1 Mood. C. C. 458. The destruction of a vessel by a part-owner shows an intent to prejudice the other part-owners, though he has insured the whole ship, and promised that the other part-owners shall have the benefit thereof. Id. See R. v. Wallace, C. & Mar. 200 (ante, p. 659). The underwriters on a policy of goods fraudulently made are within the statute, though no goods be put on board. S. C., 2 Mood. C. C. 200.

If the intent be laid to prejudice the underwriters, then, in addition to this evidence, prove the policy (see ante, p. 655), and that the ship sailed on her voyage.

If the intent is not proved as laid, but the wilful and malicious setting fire is proved, it appears that the accused may be convicted of an offence under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 42, and that section seems to render it unnecessary to indict under s. 43.

Indictment for setting Fire to Ships of War, etc.
(12 G. 3, c. 24, s. 1, ante, p. 659.)

An indictment for setting on fire or burning ships of war may be in the same form as the precedent, ante, p. 659, except as to the description of the property, namely, "one of his Majesty's vessels of war in his Majesty's dockyard at ——" [or any private yard], or "certain timber there placed for building or repairing the same," or "certain military, [naval, or victualling] stores," or "other munitions of war, or any place where the same shall be kept." 12 G. 3, c. 24, s. 1. [See the indictment in R. v. Hill, 20 St. Tr. 1318: and as to venue, see ante, p. 38.]

Felony: punishment, death. 12 G. 3, c. 24, s. 1. The sentence of death may be recorded. (See ante, p. 233.)

And see 29 & 30 Vict. c. 109, s. 34 (ante, p. 658).

SETTING FIRE TO CROPS, STACKS, ETC.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 97 (Malicious Damage Act, 1861), s. 16—Setting fire to crops, etc.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously set fire to any crop of hay, grass, corn, grain, or pulse, or of any cultivated vegetable produce, whether standing or cut down, or to any part of any wood, coppice, or plantation of trees, or to any heath, gorse, furze, or fern, wheresoever the same may be growing, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding fourteen years . . . or to be imprisoned . . . and, if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping. [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 30, s. 17 with the addition of the words italicized.]

Sect. 17—Setting fire to stacks, etc.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously set fire to any stack of corn, grain, pulse, tares, hay, straw, haulm, stubble, or of any cultivated vegetable produce, or of furze, gorse, heath, fern, turf, peat, coals, charcoal, wood, or bark, or to any steer of wood or bark, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for life . . . or to be imprisoned, . . . and, if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping. [This section re-enacts 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 89, s. 10, with the addition of the words italicized. The words "haulm" and "stubble" appear to have been added in the repealed statute to get rid of R. v. Reader and Turner, 4 C. & P. 245 ; 1 Mood. C. C. 239, decided on 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 30. s. 17.]

Sect. 18—Attempting to set fire to crops or stacks.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously by any overt act attempt to set fire to any such matter or thing as in either of the last two preceding sections mentioned, under such circumstances that if the same were thereby set fire to the offender would be, under either of such sections, guilty of felony, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding seven . . . years or to be imprisoned, . . . and, if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping. [This section re-enacts 9 & 10 Vict. c. 25, s. 7, with the addition of the words italicised. It is a sufficient overt act to constitute an attempt if the prisoner went to a stack and lit a match to fire the stack, but desisted on finding that he was watched. R. v. Taylor, 1 F. & F. 511, Pollock, C.B.]

Indictment for setting Fire to Stacks of Corn, etc.

Commencement as ante, p. 651]—feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously did set fire to a certain stack of wheat ("any stack of corn, grain, pulse, tares, hay, straw, haulm, stubble, or of any cultivated vegetable produce, furze, gorse, heath, fern, turf, peat, coals, charcoal, wood, or bark, or any steer of wood or bark") of J. N.; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. Where the word "unlawfully" was omitted, the judges held the indictment to be bad. R. v. Reader and Turner (ubi supra.) No intent need be stated. R. v. Newill, 1 Mood. C. C. 458. No local description of the position of the stack is necessary. R. v. Woodward, Id. 323.

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour; and, if a male under sixteen years, with or without whipping.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 17; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 73 (ante, p. 650).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant wilfully set fire to the stack of wheat, etc., as stated in the indictment (see ante, p. 652); and prove the ownership of the property. Indictments for setting fire to a stack of beans (R. v. Woodward, 1 Mood. C. C. 323); or barley (R. v. Swatkins, 4 C. & P. 548), have been held good, the court taking judicial notice that beans are pulse, and that barley is corn. A stack composed of the flax-plant with the seed or grain in it (the jury finding that the flax-seed is a grain) was held to be a stack of grain within 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 89, s. 10 (rep.). R. v. Spencer, Dears. & B. 131; 26 L. J. (M. C.) 16; 7 Cox, 189 (C. C. R.). A haycock has been held not to be a stack within the statute. R. v. McKeever [1871] Ir. Rep. 5 C. L. 86; and a stack of sedge and rushes was held not to be within 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 89; R. v. Baldock, 2 Cox, 55. Qu. whether it is "cultivated vegetable produce" within the present Act. A quantity of straw, packed on a lorry, in course of transmission to market, and left for the night in an inn yard, is not a stack of straw within section 17 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97. R. v. Satchwell, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 21; 42 L. J. (M. C.) 63; 12 Cox, 449. Upon 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 30, s. 17 (rep.), which did not contain the word "haulm," or the words "any cultivated vegetable produce," it was held that an indictment for setting fire to a stack of straw was not supported by proof that the stack was composed partly of stubble and partly of cole-seed straw. R. v. Tottenham, 7 C. & P. 237; 1 Mood. C. C. 461, cit. The prisoner was indicted for setting fire to a stack of wood, and it appeared that the wood set fire to consisted of a score of faggots heaped on each other in a temporary loft over the gateway: Parke, J., held this not to be a stack of wood. R. v. Aris, 6 C. & P. 348.

Indictment for setting Fire to Crops of Corn, etc. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 16, ante, p. 661.)

Commencement as ante, p. 651]—feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously, did set fire to a certain crop of wheat ("any crop of hay, grass, corn, grain, or pulse, or of any cultivated vegetable produce, whether standing or cut down, or any part of any wood, coppice or plantation of trees, or any heath, gorse, furze or fern, wheresoever the same may be growing"), of the goods and chattels of J. N., then standing and growing; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

Felony: penal servitude for not more than fourteen and not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour; and, if a male under sixteen years, with or without whipping.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 16; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 73 (ante, p. 650).

Unlawfully and maliciously setting fire to crops of corn, grain, or pulse, or to any part of a wood, coppice, or plantation of trees, or to any heath, gorse, furze or fern, is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126). That statute, however, does not exclude from the jurisdiction of sessions the setting fire to crops of hay or grass, or to crops of any cultivated vegetable produce, other than of corn, grain, or pulse.

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant set fire to the crop of wheat, etc., as stated in the indictment, and prove the ownership of the property. See the last precedent. Proof of setting fire to a single detached tree will not, it seems, support the indictment. R. v. Davy, 1 Cox, 60, Alderson, B.

Where the defendant set fire to a summer-house in a wood, and the fire was thence communicated to the wood, he was held to be properly convicted on an indictment charging him with setting fire to the wood. R. v. Price, 9 C. & P. 729: and see ante, p. 652. Where the prisoner was indicted for setting fire to growing furze, Lopes, J., directed the jury that if she set fire to the furze thinking, although erroneously, that she had a right to do so, they ought not to convict. R. v. Twose, 14 Cox, 327.

SECT. 7.

MALICIOUS DAMAGE.

ENDANGERING LIFE OR PROPERTY BY USE OF EXPLOSIVES.

Statutes.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 97 (Malicious Damage Act, 1861), s. 9—Attempting to blow up dwelling-houses, etc.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously, by the explosion of gunpowder or other explosive substance, destroy, throw down, or damage the whole or any part of any dwelling-house, any person being therein, or of any building, whereby the life of any person shall be endangered, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for life . . . or to be imprisoned . . . and, if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping. [This section re-enacts 9 & 10 Vict. c. 25, ss. 1, 2. For indictments, see post, pp. 667, 668.]

Sect. 45—Damaging ships by explosives.]—See post, p. 680.

Sect. 54.—Manufacturing, etc., explosive substances, etc., for the purpose of committing offences.]—Whosoever shall make or manufacture, or knowingly have in his possession, any gunpowder or other explosive substance, or any dangerous or noxious thing, or any machine, engine, instrument, or thing with intent thereby or by means thereof to commit, or for the purpose of enabling any other person to commit, any of the felonies in this Act mentioned, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour . . . and, if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping. [This section re-enacts 9 & 10 Vict. c. 25, s. 8, with the alterations italicized. Cf. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 64, post, tit. "Attempting to Murder."]

46 & 47 Vict. c. 3 (Explosive Substances Act, 1883), s. 2—Causing explosion likely to endanger life or property.]—Any person who unlawfully and maliciously causes by any explosive substance an explosion of a nature likely to endanger life or to cause serious injury to property shall, whether any injury to person or property has been actually caused or not, be guilty of felony, and on conviction shall be liable to penal servitude for life, or for any less term (not less than the minimum term allowed by law [see 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-s. 1, ante, p. 235]), or to imprisonment with or without hard labour for a term not exceeding two years. [For indictment, see post, p. 669.]

Sect. 3—Attempt to cause explosion, or for making or keeping explosives with intent to endanger life or property.]—Any person who, within or (being a subject of [his] Majesty) without [his] Majesty's dominions, unlawfully and maliciously—

(a) Does any act with intent to cause by an explosive substance, or conspires to cause by an explosive substance an explosion in the United Kingdom of a nature likely to endanger life or to cause serious injury to property; or

(b) Makes, or has in his possession, or under his control, any explosive substance, with intent by means thereof to endanger life, or cause serious injury to property in the United Kingdom, or to enable any other person by means thereof to endanger life, or cause serious injury to property in the United Kingdom,

Shall, whether any explosion does or does not take place, and whether any injury to person or property has been actually caused or not, be guilty of felony, and on conviction shall be liable to penal servitude for a term not exceeding twenty years [nor less than three years, 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-s. 1, ante, p. 235], or to imprisonment with or without hard labour for a term not exceeding two years, and the explosive substance shall be forfeited.

Sect. 4—Making or possession of explosive under suspicious circumstances —competency of defendant and his or her wife or husband as witness.]—(1) Any person who makes or knowingly has in his possession or under his control any explosive substance, under such circumstances as to give rise to a reasonable suspicion that he is not making it or does not have it in his possession or under his control for a lawful object, shall, unless he can show that he made it or had it in his possession or under his control, for a lawful object, be guilty of felony, and, on conviction, shall be liable to penal servitude for a term not exceeding fourteen years [nor less than three years, 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-s. 1, ante, p. 235], or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and the explosive substance shall be forfeited.

(2) In any proceeding against any person for a crime under this section, such person and his wife, or husband, as the case may be, may, if such person thinks fit, be called, sworn, examined, and cross-examined as an ordinary witness in the case. [This enactment seems to be superseded by the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 36), ante, p. 392, et seq.]

Sect. 5—Accessories.]—Any person who, within or (being a subject of [his] Majesty) without [his] Majesty's dominions, by the supply of or solicitation for money, the providing of premises, the supply of materials, or in any manner whatsoever, procures, counsels, aids, abets, or is accessory to, the commission of any crime under this Act, shall be guilty of felony, and shall be liable to be tried and punished for that crime, as if he had been guilty as a principal. [See ante, pp. 12-21.]

Sect. 6—Inquiry by the Attorney-General.]—(1) Where the Attorney-General has reasonable ground to believe that any crime under this Act has been committed, he may order an inquiry under this section, and thereupon any justice for the county, borough, or place in which the crime was committed, or is suspected to have been committed, who is authorized in that behalf by the Attorney-General, may, although no person may be charged before him with the commission of such crime, sit at a police-court, or petty sessional or occasional court-house or police-station in the said county, borough, or place, and examine on oath concerning such crime any witness appearing before him, and may take the deposition of such witness, and, if he see cause, may bind such witness by recognizance to appear and give evidence at the next petty sessions, or when called upon within three months from the date of such recognizance; and the law relating to the compelling of the attendance of a witness before a justice, and to a witness attending before a justice and required to give evidence concerning the matter of an information or complaint, shall apply to compelling the attendance of a witness for examination and to a witness attending under this section.

(2) A witness examined under this section shall not be excused from answering any question on the ground that the answer thereto may criminate, or tend to criminate, himself; but any statement made by any person in answer to any question put to him on any examination under this section shall not, except in the case of an indictment or other criminal proceeding for perjury, be admissible in evidence against him in any proceeding, civil or criminal.

(3) A justice who conducts the examination under this section of a person concerning any crime shall not take part in the committing for trial of such person for such crime.

(4) Whenever any person is bound by recognizance to give evidence before justices, or any criminal court, in respect of any crime under this Act, any justice, if he sees fit, upon information being made in writing, and on oath, that such person is about to abscond or has absconded, may issue his warrant for the arrest of such person, and if such person is arrested any justice, upon being satisfied that the ends of justice would otherwise be defeated, may commit such person to prison until the time at which he is bound by such recognizance to give evidence, unless in the meantime he produces sufficient sureties: Provided that any person so arrested shall be entitled on demand to receive a copy of the information upon which the warrant for his arrest was granted.

Sect. 7—No prosecution except by leave of Attorney-General. Form of indictment—Local jurisdiction—Saving for common law and other Acts.]—(1) If any person is charged before a justice with any crime under this Act, no further proceeding shall be taken against such person without the consent of the Attorney-General, except such as the justice may think necessary by remand, or otherwise, to secure the safe custody of such person.

(2) In framing an indictment the same criminal act may be charged in different counts as constituting different crimes under this Act, and upon the trial of any such indictment the prosecutor shall not be put to his election as to the count on which he must proceed.

(3) For all purposes of and incidental to arrest, trial, and punishment, a crime for which a person is liable to be punished under this Act, when committed out of the United Kingdom, shall be deemed to have been committed in the place in which such person is apprehended or is in custody.

(4) This Act shall not exempt any person from any indictment or proceeding for a crime or offence which is punishable at common law, or by any Act of Parliament other than this Act, but no person shall be punished twice for the same criminal act (cf. 52 & 53 Vict. c. 63, s. 33, ante, pp. 4, 170).

Sect. 8.—Application of provisions of Explosives Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 17), as to search warrants, etc.

Sect. 9—Definitions—"Explosive substance"—"Attorney-General."]—(1) In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires—

The expression "explosive substance" shall be deemed to include any materials for making any explosive substance; also any apparatus, machine, implement, or materials used, or intended to be used, or adapted for causing, or aiding in causing, any explosion in or with any explosive substance; also any part of any such apparatus, machine, or implement.

The expression "Attorney-General" means [his] Majesty's Attorney-General for England or Ireland, as the case may be, and in case of his inability, or of a vacancy in the office, [his] Majesty's Solicitor-General for England or Ireland, as the case requires.

(2) Application of Act to Scotland.

Indictment for destroying by Explosion part of a Dwelling-house, some Person being therein. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 9, ante, p. 664.)

Commencement as ante, p. 651]—feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously did, by the explosion of a certain explosive substance, that is to say, gunpowder, destroy ("destroy, throw down, or damage") a certain part ("the whole or any part") of the dwelling-house of J. N., situate at the parish of B., in the county of M., one A. N. then being in the said dwelling-house; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. Add counts for "throwing down" and "damaging" part of the dwelling-house.

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years; and, if a male under sixteen years, with or without whipping.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 9; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 73 (ante, p. 650).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant, by himself or with others, destroyed, or was present aiding and abetting in the destruction of, some part of the dwelling-house in question, by the explosion of gunpowder or other explosive substance mentioned in the indictment. It is submitted that a destruction, etc., of some part of the freehold must be shown, by analogy to the decisions under 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 30, s. 8 (rep.) (see post, pp. 701, 702). It has been held that firing a gun loaded with powder through the key-hole of the door of a house, in which were several persons, and by which the lock of the door was blown to pieces, is not within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 9. R. v. Brown, 3 F. & F. 821. Prove that it was the dwelling-house of J. N., and situate as described in the indictment. Prove that the act was done maliciously, i.e. wilfully. (See ante, p. 651, post, p. 701.) Prove also that A. N. was in the house at the time of the setting fire to it. (See ante, p. 656.) No particular intent need be laid or proved.

Indictment for blowing up a House whereby Life was endangered. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 9, ante, p. 664.)

Commencement as ante, p. 651]—feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously did, by the explosion of a certain explosive substance, that is to say, gunpowder, destroy ("destroy, throw down, or damage") the dwelling-house of J. N., situate at the parish of B., in the county of M., whereby the life of one A. N. was then endangered; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. Add a count for "damaging" the house with the like consequence.

Felony, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 9. See the last precedent.

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant destroyed or damaged the house in question, or was present aiding and abetting the destruction, or damaging of it by the explosion of gunpowder or other explosive substances mentioned in the indictment. Prove that it was the dwelling-house of J. N., and situate as described in the indictment. Prove that the act was done maliciously. (See ante, p. 651, post, p. 701.) And prove that the life of A. N. was endangered by the defendant's act. This will depend of course, in almost all cases, on medical evidence. The endangering of life, to be within the mischief of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 9, must result from the damage to the house in question: but the persons put in danger need not be within it; and it is not necessary to prove actual injury, but sufficient to show such exposure to risk or chance of injury as will satisfy the jury that actual danger to life was caused. R. v. McGrath, 14 Cox, 598.

Indictment for throwing Gunpowder into a Building with Intent, etc. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 10, ante, p. 664.)

Commencement as ante, p. 651]—feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously did throw into a certain building, to wit [describe the building], situate at the parish of B., in the county of M. ("place or throw in, into, upon, under, against, or near any building"), a large quantity, to wit, two pounds, of a certain explosive substance, that is to say, gunpowder, with intent thereby then to destroy ("destroy or damage") the said building; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. Add counts varying the statement of the act, and also stating the intent to be to "damage" the house.

Felony: penal servitude for not more than fourteen and not less than three years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years; and, if a male under the age of sixteen, with or without whipping.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 10; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1. sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 73 (ante, p. 650).

Evidence.

Prove the act done by the defendant, as alleged in the indictment; that it was done maliciously (see ante, p. 651, post, p. 701); that the house was the dwelling-house of J. N., situate as described in the indictment; and prove circumstances from which the jury may infer the intent to destroy or damage the house, as stated in the indictment. Where the prisoner was indicted under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 10, for throwing gunpowder against a house, and the evidence was that the prisoner had thrown a bottle containing gunpowder against the house, and that there was a fuse in the neck of the bottle, Kelly, C.B., ruled that unless the fuse was lighted at the time the bottle was thrown against the house the offence was not made out, and said that, "if anybody merely threw a bottle containing gunpowder, that would not comply with the conditions of the statute. If the fuse was not lighted it could not cause an explosion, and it would be merely throwing a bottle against a house." R. v. Sheppard, 11 Cox, 302.

Indictment for causing Explosion likely to endanger Life or Property.
(46 & 47 Vict. c. 3, s. 2, ante, p. 665).

Commencement as ante, p. 651]—feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously did cause, by a certain explosive substance, to wit [e.g. "gunpowder enclosed in a metal case," or "an iron cylinder fitted with two iron caps, being a machine adapted for causing an explosion"], an explosion of a nature likely to endanger life ("likely to endanger life, or to cause serious injury to property"); against the form (as ante, p. 465).

Add counts describing the explosion as "likely to cause serious injury to property," and the explosive substance as one "the name and description of which are to the jurors aforesaid unknown," or otherwise varying the description of the same as may be necessary. As to venue, see 46 & 47 Vict. c. 3, s. 7 (3), ante, p. 666.

An indictment for having in possession explosives (46 & 47 Vict. c. 3, s. 4) can easily be framed from the above precedent.

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour not exceeding two years. 46 & 47 Vict. c. 3, s. 2 (ante, p. 665); 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c, 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126.)

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant by himself or with others, caused or was present aiding and abetting in the causing of the explosion in question, by the explosion of gunpowder or other explosive substance mentioned in the indictment. Prove that the act was done maliciously, i.e. wilfully and not by accident (see ante, p. 651, post, p. 701). Prove that the explosion was of a nature likely to endanger life, etc.; it is not necessary (as it is under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 9) to prove that life was actually endangered. No intent need be laid or proved. Any part of a vessel which when filled with an explosive substance is adapted for causing an explosion is an explosive substance within the Act. R. v. Charles, 17 Cox, 499, Hawkins, J. If several persons are connected in a common design to have articles amounting to an explosive substance within the Act made for an unlawful purpose, each of the confederacy is responsible in respect of such articles as are in the possession of others connected in the carrying out of their common design. Id.

RIOTOUSLY DEMOLISHING HOUSES, ETC.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 97 (Malicious Damage Act, 1861), s. 11—Riotously demolishing houses, etc.]—If any persons, riotously and tumultuously assembled together to the disturbance of the public peace shall unlawfully and with force demolish, or pull down or destroy, or begin to demolish, pull down, or destroy, any church, chapel, meeting-house, or other place of divine worship, or any house, stable, coach-house, out-house, warehouse, office, shop, mill, malt-house, hop-oast, barn, granary, shed, hovel, or fold, or any building or erection used in farming land, or in carrying on any trade or manufacture, or any branch thereof, or any building, other than such as are in this section before mentioned, belonging to the [King], or to any county, riding, division, city, borough, poor law union, parish, or place, or belonging to any university, or college or hall of any university, or to any inn of court, or devoted or dedicated to public use or ornament, or erected or maintained by public subscription or contribution, or any machinery, whether fixed or moveable, prepared for or employed in any manufacture, or in any branch thereof, or any steam-engine or other engine for sinking, working, ventilating, or draining any mine, or any staith, building, or erection used in conducting the business of any mine, or any bridge, waggon-way, or trunk for conveying minerals from any mine, every such offender shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for life . . . [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 30, s. 8, with the additions in italics.]

Sect. 12—Riotously damaging houses, etc.]—If any persons, riotously and tumultuously assembled together to the disturbance of the public peace, shall unlawfully and with force injure or damage any such church, chapel, meeting-house, place of divine worship, house, stable, coach-house, out-house, warehouse, office, shop, mill, malt-house, hop-oast, barn, granary, shed, hovel, fold, building, erection, machinery, engine, staith, bridge, waggon-way, or trunk, as in the last preceding section mentioned, every such offender shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding seven years . . . : Provided that, if, upon the trial of any person for any felony in the last preceding section mentioned, the jury shall not be satisfied that such person is guilty thereof, but shall be satisfied that he is guilty of any offence in this section mentioned, then the jury may find him guilty thereof, and he may be punished accordingly. [This section was new law in 1861, and was framed to obviate the effect of the decisions in R. v. Thomas, 4 C. & P. 237: R. v. Price, 5 C. & P. 510: R. v. Batt, 6 C. & P. 329: R. v. Howell, 9 C. & P. 437; 3 St. Tr., N. S., 1087: and R. v. Adams, C. & Mar. 299, in which it was held that to justify a conviction under 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 30, s. 8 (rep.), it was necessary to prove an intent to demolish the whole building.]

Indictment. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 11, supra.)

Central Criminal Court, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King, upon their oath present, that on the first day of June, in the year of our Lord ——, at the parish of B., in the county of L., and within the jurisdiction of the said court, in the county of London, J. S., J. W., and E. W., together with divers other evil-disposed persons, to the jurors aforesaid unknown, unlawfully, riotously and tumultuously did assemble together, to the disturbance of the public peace: and being then and there so unlawfully, riotously and tumultuously assembled together as aforesaid, did then and there feloniously, unlawfully and with force, begin to demolish and pull down the dwelling-house of one J. N. there situate ("any church, chapel, etc., house, etc."); against the form [as ante, p. 465].

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 11; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 73 (ante, p. 650).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove a riotous assembly, as stated post, Chap. IV., Sect. 3, tit. "Riot." The number of persons composing it is not material, provided they were three at the least. Prove that the assembly began "with force to demolish the house" in question, and that it was the dwelling-house of J. N., and situate in the parish and county described in the indictment. It must appear that they began to demolish some part of the freehold: for instance, the demolition of moveable shop shutters is not sufficient. R. v. Howell, 9 C. & P. 437; 3 St. Tr., N. S. 1087. A demolition by fire is within the statute. Id.: R. v. Christian, 12 L. J. (M. C.) 26: R. v. Harris, C. & Mar. 661; 4 St. Tr., N. S. 1387. Prove that the defendants were either active in demolishing the house, or present aiding and abetting. R. v. Harris, ubi supra; R. v. Simpson, C. & Mar. 669; 4 St. Tr., N. S. 1387. To convict under s. 11 the jury must be satisfied that the ultimate object of the rioters was to demolish the house, and that, if they had carried their intention into effect, they would in point of fact have demolished it; for if the rioters merely do an injury to the house, and then of their own accord go away, as having completed their purpose, it is not a beginning to demolish within section 11, though it may be an offence within section 12. See cases in note to that section, supra; and Drake v. Footitt, 7 Q. B. D. 201; 50 L. J. (M. C.) 141: Drake v. Hankin, Id. But on an indictment under 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 30, s. 8 (rep.), containing a count for riotously, etc., demolishing a dwelling-house, it was held that it was not necessary to prove, though the parties were not interrupted: it was enough if the house be destroyed as a dwelling. Therefore, the fact that the rioters left a chimney remaining would not prevent the statute from applying. R. v. Phillips, 2 Mood. C. C. 252; S. C. as R. v. Langford, C. & Mar. 602, Patteson, J.

Where a mob, after the obnoxious person had escaped, continued to attack a house until the police interfered, Gurney, B., left it to the jury to say whether they had not the intention to demolish the house as well as to injure the person; and the jury, being of that opinion, found the defendants guilty. R. v. Batt, 6 C. & P. 329.

If the demolition be in the bonâ fide assertion of a supposed, though unfounded, claim of right, it is not within the statute, though it be accompanied by a riot. R. v. Phillips (ubi supra); and see notes to section 51 (post, p. 701): R. v. Clemens [1898] 1 Q. B. 556; 67 L. J. Q. B. 482; 19 Cox, 18: Heaven v. Crutchley, 68 J. P. Rep. 53.

If the demolishing, etc., be not proved so as to constitute a felony, but the house be damaged or injured (the other requisites of this section being satisfied), the offenders may, upon this indictment, be convicted of a misdemeanor under section 12, and punished as therein provided.

INJURIES TO HOUSES, ETC., BY TENANTS.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 97 (Malicious Damage Act, 1861), s. 13.]—Whosoever being possessed of any dwelling-house or other building, or part of any dwelling-house or other building, held for any term of years or other less term, or at will, or held over after the termination of any tenancy, shall unlawfully and maliciously pull down or demolish, or begin to pull down or demolish, the same or any part thereof, or shall unlawfully and maliciously pull down or sever from the freehold any fixture being fixed in or to such dwelling-house or building, or part of such dwelling-house or building, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. [This section was framed on 9 G. 4, c. 56, s. 24 (Ir.)].

Indictment.

Middlesex, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King, upon their oath present, that on the first day of June, in the year of our Lord ——, J. S., then being possessed of a certain dwelling-house ["dwelling-house or other building"] situate in the parish of B., in the county of M., then held by him the said J. S. for a term of years then unexpired ["held for any term of years or other less term, or at will, or held over after the determination of any tenancy"], unlawfully and maliciously did pull down and demolish the said dwelling-house ["pull down or demolish, or begin to pull down or demolish the same or any part thereof," or "pull down or sever from the freehold any fixture being fixed in or to such dwelling-house or building"]; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

Misdemeanor (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 13): punishable by imprisonment without hard labour (see ante, p. 238) or fine (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 73, ante, p. 660), or both. As to recognizances, see s. 73.

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant was possessed of the dwelling-house for a subsisting term of years, or other less term, or at will, or that he was holding it over after the determination of his tenancy therein. If the tenancy was created by a lease or agreement in writing, the terms of it must be proved by the written instrument itself, or its non-production must be accounted for in order to let in other evidence of its contents. (See ante, pp. 315, 316.) Prove that the dwelling-house was situate as described in the indictment. Then prove that the defendant, or some other person or persons by his direction, demolished or began to demolish the house, or some part thereof. (See ante, p. 671.) Lastly, prove that the act was done maliciously; that is, wilfully, and without any claim or pretence of right to do it. (See ante, p. 671, and post, p. 701.)

DESTROYING GOODS IN PROCESS OF MANUFACTURE, AND MACHINERY.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 97 (Malicious Damage Act, 1861), s. 14.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously cut, break, or destroy, or damage with intent to destroy or to render useless, any goods or article of silk, woollen, linen, cotton, hair, mohair, or alpaca, or of any one or more of those materials mixed with each other or mixed with any other material, or any frame-work-knitted piece, stocking, hose, or lace, being in the loom or frame, or on any machine or engine, or on the rack or tenters, or in any stage, process, or progress of manufacture, or shall unlawfully and maliciously cut, break, or destroy, or damage with intent to destroy or to render useless, any warp or shute of silk, woollen, linen, cotton, hair, mohair, or alpaca, or of any one or more of those materials mixed with each other or mixed with any other material, or shall unlawfully and maliciously cut, break, or destroy, or damage with intent to destroy or render useless, any loom, frame, machine, engine, rack, tackle, tool, or implement, whether fixed or moveable, prepared for or employed in carding, spinning, throwing, weaving, fulling, shearing, or otherwise manufacturing or preparing any such goods or articles, or shall by force enter into any house, shop, building, or place, with intent to commit any of the offences in this section mentioned, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for life, . . . or to be imprisoned . . . and, if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping. [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 30, s. 3, with addition of the words in italics to settle doubts expressed in R. v. Ashton, 2 B. & Ad. 750.]

Indictment for Cutting, etc., Goods in the Loom, etc.

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—twenty-five yards of woollen cloth ("any goods or article of silk, woollen, linen, cotton, hair, mohair, or alpaca, or of any one or more of those materials mixed with each other, or mixed with any other material, or any framework-knitted piece, stocking, hose, or lace," of the goods and chattels of J. N., in a certain loom ("in the loom or frame, or on any machine or engine, or on the rack or tenters, or in any stage, process, or progress of manufacture") then being, feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously did cut and destroy ("cut, break, or destroy, or damage with intent to destroy or to render useless"); against the form [as ante, p. 465]. The words "with intent, etc.," appear to apply only to the word "damage" and not to the preceding words "cut, break." See R. v. Smith, 6 Cox, 198. The words "in any stage or process of manufacture" appear to include products until fit for sale. R. v. Woodhead, 1 M. & Rob. 549, and see R. v. Clegg, 3 Cox, 295.

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years; and, if a male under sixteen years, with or without whipping.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 14; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 73 (ante, p. 650).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant cut or destroyed, etc., the goods in the loom as stated in the indictment, and that they were the property of J. N., either absolutely or specially. Then prove that it was done maliciously. (See ante, p. 651, post, p. 701.) It is not necessary to prove that it was done out of actual malice to the owner. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 58 (ante, p. 649).

If an intent be charged in the indictment, it must be proved by circumstances, if it cannot be inferred from the act itself. (See ante, pp. 303, 308, 340).

Indictment for Breaking, etc., Warps of Silk, etc., or Machinery, etc. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 14, ante, p. 672).

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—a certain warp of silk ("any warp or shute of silk, woollen, linen, cotton, hair, mohair, or alpaca, or of any one or more of those materials mixed with each other, or mixed with any other material, or any loom, frame, machine, engine, rack, tackle (see R. v. Smith, 6 Cox, 198), tool, or implement, whether fixed or moveable, prepared for or employed in carding, spinning, throwing, weaving, fulling, shearing, or otherwise manufacturing or preparing any such goods or articles"), of the goods and chattels of J. N., feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously did cut and destroy ("cut, break, or destroy, or damage with intent to destroy or to render useless"); against the form [as ante, p. 465].

Felony: punishable as in the last case.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 14.

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant cut or destroyed, etc., the warp of silk, etc., the property of J. N., as stated in the indictment. Where the prisoner, in company with others, unfastened and took away a certain part of a stocking-frame called the half-jack, without which the frame was useless, but did no further injury either to the half-jack or to the frame, than the removal of the half-jack; the judges were unanimously of opinion that this was a damaging the frame within 28 G. 3, c. 55, s. 4 (rep.), as it made the frame imperfect and inoperative. R. v. Tacey, R. & R. 452; cf. R. v. Fisher, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 7; 35 L. J. (M. C.) 57; 10 Cox, 146. Prove also that it was done maliciously (see ante, p. 651), as in the last case. And if an intent be charged in the indictment, prove it from circumstances, if it cannot be inferred from the Act itself. (See ante, pp. 303, 308, 340.)

Indictment for entering by force into a House, etc., with intent to cut or destroy, etc., Silk Goods, etc. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 14, ante, p. 672.)

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—into a certain house ("any house, shop, building, or place" [of J. N.] situate at the parish of B., in the county of M., feloniously and by force did enter, with intent certain woollen goods of the said J. N., in a certain loom then and there being ("with intent to commit any of the offences aforesaid," see the last two precedents), feloniously, unlawfully and maliciously to cut and destroy; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

Felony: see the last precedent but one.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 14.

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126.)

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant entered by force the house in question, that such house was the house of J. N., that the house was situate as described in the indictment, that the woollen goods were in the house; and prove from circumstances the defendant's intent to be such as is charged in the indictment. (See ante, pp. 303, 308, 340.)

DESTROYING MACHINES USED IN AGRICULTURE OR CERTAIN MANUFACTURES.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 97 (Malicious Damage Act, 1861), s. 15.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously cut, break, or destroy, or damage with intent to destroy or to render useless, any machine or engine, whether fixed or moveable, used or intended to be used for sowing, reaping, mowing, thrashing, ploughing or draining, or for performing any other agricultural operation, or any machine or engine, or any tool or implement, whether fixed or moveable, prepared for or employed in any manufacture whatsoever (except the manufacture of silk, woollen, linen, cotton, hair, mohair, or alpaca goods, or goods of any one or more of those materials mixed with each other, or mixed with any other material, or any frame-work-knitted piece, stocking, hose, or lace), shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding seven years . . . or to be imprisoned . . . and, if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping. [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 30, s. 4, with the additions italicized.]

Indictment.

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—a certain thrashing-machine ("any machine or engine, whether fixed or moveable, used or intended to be used for sowing, reaping, mowing, thrashing, ploughing or draining, or for performing any other agricultural operation, or any machine or engine, or any tool or implement, whether fixed or moveable, prepared for or employed in any manufacture whatsoever, except the manufacture of silk, woollen, linen, cotton, hair, mohair, or alpaca goods, or goods of any one or more of those materials mixed with each other, or mixed with any other material, or any frame-work-knitted piece, stocking, hose, or lace") the property of J. N., feloniously, unlawfully and maliciously did cut, break, and destroy ("cut, break, or destroy, or damage with intent to destroy or render useless"); against the form [as ante, p. 465]. Omission of the word "feloniously" is fatal. R. v. Gray, L. & C. 365; 33 L. J. (M. C.) 78; 9 Cox, 417.

Felony: penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years; and, if a male under sixteen years of age, with or without whipping.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 15; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 73 (ante, p. 650).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant cut, broke, or destroyed the thrashing-machine in question (see ante, p. 673; R. v. Tacey, R. & R. 452); and that it was the property of J. N. Prove that it was done maliciously (see ante, p. 651): but whether from malice to the owner or otherwise is immaterial. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 58 (ante, p. 649). In R. v. Crutchley, 5 C. & P. 133, upon an indictment under 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 30, s. 4 (rep.), for breaking a thrashing-machine, Patteson, J., allowed the prisoner's counsel to ask whether the mob had not compelled several persons to join them, and to give each a blow with a sledge-hammer to every machine that was broken; he also allowed the witnesses for the prisoner to prove that he had been forced by the mob to join them, and had resolved to escape on the first opportunity. If the damage is alleged to have been done with intent to destroy the machine, or to render it useless, the intent must be proved by circumstances, if it cannot be implied from the act done. (See ante, pp. 303, 308, 340.) If a thrashing-machine be taken to pieces and separated by the owner, the destruction of any part of it is within that statute. R. v. Mackerel, 4 C. & P. 448. So is the destruction of a water-wheel, by which a thrashing-machine is worked. R. v. Fidler, 4 C. & P. 449; or the displacing of a machine. R. v. Foster, 6 Cox, 25. So, though the side-boards of the machine be wanting, without which it will act, but not perfectly, it is within the statute. R. v. Bartlett, 2 Deacon, Cr. L. 1517: and see R. v. Chubb, Id. 1518; R. v. Hutchins, Id. 1517. But if the machine be taken to pieces, and in part destroyed by the owner from fear, the remaining parts do not constitute a machine within the meaning of the statute. R. v. West, Id. 1518. It is not necessary that the damage done should be of a permanent kind. Therefore where the prisoner was indicted under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 15, for maliciously damaging a steam-engine, and the evidence was that he had maliciously screwed up parts of the engine, so that they would not work while so screwed up, and had reversed the plug of the pump which supplied the engine with water, and that the engine was thus rendered temporarily useless and liable to burst, but the screws were loosened and the plugs properly replaced by the prosecutor, who discovered the state of the engine before any permanent damage was done, and the engine was then just as good as before, it was held that the prisoner was properly convicted. R. v. Fisher, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 7; 35 L. J. (M. C.) 57; 10 Cox, 146.

A table, with a hole in it for water, used in the manufacture of bricks, was held not to be a "machine prepared for or employed in any manufacture" within 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 30, s. 4 (rep.). R. v. Penny, Chester Sum. Ass. 1855 (per Jervis, C.J., after consulting Lord Campbell, C.J.). But it would no doubt be held to be a "tool" or "implement" within the present statute.

DROWNING MINES, ETC.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 97 (Malicious Damage Act, 1861), s. 28.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously cause any water to be conveyed or run into any mine, or into any subterranean passage communicating therewith, with intent thereby to destroy or damage such mine, or to hinder or delay the working thereof, or shall, with the like intent, unlawfully and maliciously pull down, fill up, or obstruct, or damage with intent to destroy, obstruct, or render useless any airway, water-way, drain, pit, level or shaft, of or belonging to any mine, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding seven years . . . or to be imprisoned . . . and, if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping.

Provided that this provision shall not extend to any damage committed underground by any owner of any adjoining mine, in working the same, or by any person duly employed in such working. [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 30, s. 6, with the additions italicized.]

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously did cause a quantity of water ("any water") to be conveyed into a certain mine ("into any mine or into any subterraneous passage communicating therewith") of J. N., situate at the parish of B., in the county of M., with intent thereby then feloniously to destroy ("destroy or damage, or hinder or delay the working thereof") the said mine; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. The mine may be laid as the property of a person in possession of and working it, though only as agent for others. R. v. Jones, 1 C. & K. 181; 2 Mood. C. C. 293. But this case does not seem definitely to decide that it is necessary to prove the ownership.

Felony: penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years; and, if a male under sixteen years of age, with or without whipping.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 28; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 73 (ante, p. 650).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant caused the water to be conveyed into the mine in the occupation of J. N., as described in the indictment. Prove that it was done maliciously. (See ante, p. 651, post, 701.) And prove the intent by circumstances from which it may be inferred. (See ante, pp. 303, 308, 340.) Underground damage by adjoining mine owners and their servants is not punishable under this section: see the proviso.

Indictment for pulling down, etc., Airways, etc., of Mines. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 28.)

Commencement as ante, p. 403]—feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously did pull down ("pull down, fill up, or obstruct, or damage with intent to destroy, obstruct, or render useless") a certain airway ("airway, waterway, drain, pit, level, or shaft") of and belonging to a certain mine of J. N., situate at the parish of B., in the county of M., with intent thereby then to destroy ("destroy, or damage, or hinder, or delay the working thereof") the said mine; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. If the offence be an obstruction of an airway, etc., the mode of obstruction may be stated in a second count.

Felony. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 28. See the last precedent.

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant pulled down, etc., the airway of a mine in the occupation of J. N., as described in the indictment. If workmen stop up an airway by order of their master in a portion of his mine, it is not felony in the workmen, even though the master know that he has no right to the airway; but if the workmen know that the stopping of the airway is a malicious act of the master, it is felony in the workmen. R. v. James, 8 C. & P. 131. Prove that it was done maliciously. (See ante, p. 651, post, p. 701.) And prove the intent, as in the last precedent. If the act is done by the prisoner under a bonâ fide claim of right, it is not within the statute. R. v. Matthews, 14 Cox, 5, Brett, J.: cf. R. v. Phillips, 2 Mood. C. C. 252: R. v. Clemens [1898] 1 Q. B. 556. The proviso to 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 28 (ante, p. 676), applies to this offence.

DESTROYING ENGINES, ERECTIONS, ETC., USED IN MINES.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 97 (Malicious Damage Act, 1861), s. 29.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously pull down and destroy, or damage with intent to destroy or render useless, any steam engine or other engine for sinking, draining, ventilating, or working, or for in anywise assisting in sinking, draining, ventilating, or working any mine, or any appliance or apparatus in connection with any such steam or other engine, or any staith, building, or erection used in conducting the business of any mine, or any bridge, waggon-way, or trunk for conveying minerals from any mine, whether such engine, staith, building, erection, bridge, waggon-way, or trunk be completed or in an unfinished state, or shall unlawfully and maliciously stop, obstruct, or hinder the working of any such steam or other engine, or of any such appliance or apparatus as aforesaid, with intent thereby to destroy or damage any mine, or to hinder, obstruct, or delay the working thereof, or shall unlawfully and maliciously wholly or partially cut through, sever, break, or unfasten, or damage with intent to destroy or render useless, any rope, chain, or tackle, of whatsoever material the same shall be made, used in any mine, or in or upon any inclined plane, railway or other way, or other work whatsoever in anywise belonging or appertaining to or connected with or employed in any mine, or the working or business thereof, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding seven years . . . or to be imprisoned . . . and, if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping. [This section was framed from 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 30, s. 7, and 23 & 24 Vict. c. 29, s. 1, with the additions in italics.]

Indictment.

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—a certain steam-engine, the property of J. N., for the draining and working of a certain mine of the said J. N., situate at the parish of B., in the county of M. ("any steam-engine or other engine for sinking, draining, ventilating, or working any mine, etc., etc.") feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously did pull down and destroy ("pull down or destroy, or damage with intent to destroy or render useless"); against the form [as ante, p. 465].

Felony. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 29. See the last precedent but one.

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant pulled down or destroyed the engine described in the indictment, and that it was erected for the purposes described in the indictment. It is immaterial whether it was completed or in an unfinished state. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 29. A scaffold, erected at some distance above the bottom of a mine, for the purpose of working a vein of coal on a level with the scaffold, was held to be an erection used in conducting the business of the mine within the meaning of 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 30, s. 7 (rep.). R. v. Whittingham, 9 C. & P. 234. Where a steam-engine used in working a mine had been stopped and locked up for the night, and the defendant got into the engine-house and set it going, and there being no machinery attached, the engine went with great velocity, and received injury, this was held to be a damaging of the engine within that statute. R. v. Norris, Id. 241. Where a mine was worked by a steam-engine, which caused a cylinder called a drum to revolve, and take up the rope as the coal was drawn up from the mine, it was held on 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 30, s. 7 (rep.), that proof of damaging the drum would not support an indictment which charged the damaging of the steam-engine. R. v. Whittingham, supra. But the words of the present statute include "any appliance or apparatus in connexion with any such steam or other engine," and apply also to many other injurious acts which were not mentioned in the former statutes. Prove that the mine was in the possession of J. N. Prove that the act was done maliciously (see ante, p. 651, post, p. 701); and, if an intent be stated, prove it from circumstances from which that intent may be inferred, if it cannot be implied from the act itself. (See ante, pp. 303, 308, 340.)

DESTROYING SHIPS, WITH INTENT, ETC.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, ss. 42, 43, 44.]—Ante, pp. 658, 659.

Indictment. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 42, ante, p. 658.)

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—on the high seas feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously did cast away and destroy ("cast away, or in anywise destroy") a certain ship ("any ship or vessel, whether the same be complete or in an unfinished state") with intent thereby to prejudice one J. N., the owner ("owner or part owner") of the said ship [or, one E. F., the owner of certain goods then laden and being in and on board the said ship, or, one E. F., who had before then underwritten a certain policy of insurance on the said ship (or, on the freight of the said ship, or, on certain goods then being on board the said ship) which said policy was then in full force and operation (see ante, p. 660)]; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. If the offence be committed in the body of a county, see the precedent ante, p. 659.

Felony. (For punishment, see ante, pp. 658, 659.)

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant cast away or otherwise destroyed the vessel, the property of J. N., as stated. (See ante, p. 659.) It is immaterial whether the ship were complete or in an unfinished state. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 42. A pleasure boat eighteen feet long is, it seems, a vessel within the meaning of these sections. R. v. Bowyer, 4 C. & P. 559. See R. v. Smith, 4 C. & P. 569 (ante, p. 659). If the ship had only run aground, and it were afterwards got off in a condition so as to be easily refitted, it seems it would not be an offence within the Act. See R. v. De Londo, 2 East, P. C. 1098. Prove the offence to have been done maliciously (see ante, p. 651, post, p. 701); and also prove the offence to have been committed with the intent charged in the indictment. Proving that it was done wilfully is of itself sufficient evidence from which the jury may presume that it was committed with intent to prejudice either the owner or part-owner of the ship or of the goods; but if the intent charged be to prejudice the underwriters, you must prove the policy (see ante, p. 655), the inception of the risk, and circumstances from which the jury may infer the intent. (See ante, pp. 303, 308, 340.)

DAMAGING SHIPS WITH INTENT, ETC.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 97 (Malicious Damage Act, 1861), s. 46—Damaging ships otherwise than by fire or explosives.]—Whoever shall unlawfully and maliciously damage, otherwise than by fire, gunpowder, or other explosive substance, any ship or vessel, whether complete or in an unfinished state, with intent to destroy the same or render the same useless, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding seven years . . . or to be imprisoned . . . and, if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping. [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 30, s. 10, with the additions italicized.]

Indictment.

R.* v. Bowyer, 4 C. & P. 559.

Felony: penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years; and, if a male under sixteen years of age, with or without whipping.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 46; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 73 (ante, p. 650).

An indictment under section 45, for attempting to destroy or damage a ship by the explosion of gunpowder, etc., may easily be framed from the precedent (ante, p. 656).

A pleasure boat eighteen feet long is, it seems, within this enactment. R. v. Bowyer, 4 C. & P. 559. See R. v. Smith, 4 C. & P. 569 (ante, p. 659).

with any offence against this section, that it is not expedient to the ends of justice that the same should be prosecuted by indictment, the justice may proceed summarily to hear and determine the same, and the offender shall, on conviction thereof, at the discretion of the justice, either be committed to the common gaol or house of correction, there to be imprisoned only, or to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour, for any term not exceeding three months, or else shall forfeit and pay such sum of money not exceeding ten pounds as to the justice shall seem meet. [This section was new law in 1861.] The term "electric telegraph" seems to include telephone: Att.-Gen. v. Edison Telephone Co., 6 Q. B. D. 244: and the preamble to s. 1 of the Telegraph Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 59).

Sect. 38—Attempts to commit offences against s. 37.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously, by any overt act, attempt to commit any of the offences in the last preceding section mentioned, shall, on conviction thereof before a justice of the peace, at the discretion of the justice, either be committed to the common gaol or house of correction, there to be imprisoned only, or to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour, for any term not exceeding three months, or else shall forfeit and pay such sum of money not exceeding ten pounds as to the justice shall seem meet. [This section was new law in 1861.]

Indictment for placing Wood on Rails, with Intent, etc. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 35, ante, p. 658.)

Commencement as ante, p. 433)—feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously did put and place a piece of wood upon a certain railway called ——, in the parish of B., in the county of M. ("put, place, cast, or throw upon or across any railway any wood, stone, matter or thing"), with intent thereby then to obstruct, upset, overthrow, and injure a certain engine and certain carriages using the said railway ("with intent to obstruct, upset, overthrow, injure or destroy any engine, tender, carriage, or truck using such railway"); against the form [as ante, p. 465]. [The intent may be laid in different ways in other counts, if necessary.]

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour; and, if a male, under sixteen years, with or without whipping.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 35; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 73 (ante, p. 650). As to summary trial of youthful offenders, see 42 & 43 Vict. c. 49, ss. 10, 11, sched. 1.

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant placed the piece of wood upon or across the railway named and situate as described in the indictment, or was present aiding and assisting in doing so. It does not matter whether the railway is public or private. O'Gorman v. Sweet, 54 J. P. 663. Prove that he did it maliciously (see ante, p. 651, and R. v. Holroyd 2 M. & Rob. 339). The intent may be inferred from the circumstances from which the jury may presume it (see ante, pp. 303, 308, 340). In general, the act being done wilfully, and its being likely to obstruct or upset the railway train, would be sufficient primâ facie evidence of an intent to do so. See R. v. Upton,

5 Cox, 298. Semble, the intent to injure or destroy a train, provided against by this section, is an intent to injure or destroy otherwise than by burning, which is specially mentioned in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 4 (ante, p. 648). See R. v. Sanderson, 1 F. & F. 37. A person may be convicted of a misdemeanor under s. 36, though no train be in fact obstructed by his act, and the line be not formally open for traffic. See R. v. Bradford, Bell, 268; 29 L. J. (M. C.) 171; 8 Cox, 309. Where the defendant had unlawfully altered some railway signals at a railway station, and this alteration caused a train which would otherwise have passed the station without slackening speed, to slacken speed, and to come nearly to a stand, it was held (Martin, B., diss.) that he was guilty of "obstructing" a train within the meaning of s. 36 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97. R. v. Hadfield, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 253; 39 L. J. (M. C.) 131; 11 Cox, 574. And so where the defendant, by holding up his arms in the mode used by inspectors of the line when desirous of stopping a train, intentionally induced the driver of a train to reduce his speed from twenty miles to four miles an hour, although the train was not wholly stopped, but immediately afterwards resumed its ordinary speed, he was held to be guilty of an unlawful obstruction within that section. R. v. Hardy, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 278; 40 L. J. (M.C.) 62; 11 Cox, 656. "Any unlawful act" in s. 36 includes each of the acts mentioned in s. 35. Id. An acquittal on an indictment framed under s. 35 is no bar to a subsequent indictment upon the same facts for a misdemeanor under s. 36. R. v. Gilmore, 15 Cox, 85, Huddleston, B., and see ante, p. 170.

DESTROYING DAMS OF FISH-PONDS, ETC.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 97 (Malicious Damage Act, 1861), s. 32.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously cut through, break down, or otherwise destroy the dam, flood-gate, or sluice of any fish-pond, or of any water which shall be private property, or in which there shall be any private right of fishery, with intent thereby to take or destroy any of the fish in such pond or water, or so as thereby to cause the loss or destruction of any of the fish, or shall unlawfully and maliciously put any lime, or other noxious material, in any such pond or water, with intent thereby to destroy any of the fish that may then be or that may thereafter be put therein, or shall unlawfully and maliciously cut through, break down, or otherwise destroy the dam or flood-gate of any mill-pond, reservoir, or pool, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding seven years . . . or to be imprisoned . . . and, if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping. [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 30, s. 15, with the additions italicized.]

36 & 37 Vict. c. 71 (Salmon, etc., Fisheries Act, 1873), s. 18.]—The provisions of the 32nd section of the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), so far as they relate to poisoning any water with intent to kill or destroy fish, shall be extended and apply to salmon rivers, as if the words "or in any salmon river" were inserted in the said section in lieu of the words "private rights of fishery" after the words "noxious material in any such pond or water."

Indictment for breaking down the Dam of a Fish-pond. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 32, ante, p. 690.)

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—the dam of a certain fish-pond ("the dam, flood-gate, or sluice of any fish-pond, or of any water which shall be private property, or in which there shall be any private right of fishery") of one J. N., situate in the parish of B., in the county of M., unlawfully and maliciously did break down and destroy ("cut through, break down, or otherwise destroy"), with intent thereby then to take and destroy the fish in the said pond then being [or, and did thereby then cause the loss and destruction of divers of the fish in the said pond then being]; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

Misdemeanor: penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour; and, if a male under sixteen years of age, with or without whipping.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 32: 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to fining the offender and requiring him to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 73 (ante, p. 650).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant broke down or destroyed the dam of the fish-pond of J. N., situate as described in the indictment, and that it was done maliciously (see ante, p. 651); and prove circumstances from which the intent may be inferred (see ante, pp. 303, 308, 340); and if the loss of fish be stated in the indictment, prove that fact.

Indictment for putting Lime into a Fish-pond. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 32, ante, p. 690.)

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—unlawfully and maliciously did put a large quantity, to wit, ten bushels of lime ("lime or other noxious material") into a certain fish-pond (see the last precedent) of one J. N., situate at the parish of B., in the county of M., with intent thereby then to destroy the fish in the said pond then being; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

Misdemeanor. See the last precedent. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 32.

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant put lime, etc., into the fish-pond of J. N., situate as described in the indictment, and that it was done maliciously (see ante, p. 651); and prove circumstances from which the jury may infer the intent (see ante, pp. 303, 308, 340), as that the lime or other noxious thing would destroy the fish.

Indictment for breaking down a Mill Dam. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 32.)

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—the dam ("dam or flood-gate") of a certain mill-pond ("mill-pond, reservoir, or pool") of J. N., situate at the parish of B., in the county of M., unlawfully and maliciously did break down and destroy ("cut through, break down, or otherwise destroy"); against the form [as ante, p. 465].

Misdemeanor. See the last precedent but one.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 32 (ante, p. 690).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant broke down the dam of a mill-pond in the occupation of J. N., situate as described in the indictment; and prove that it was done maliciously. (See ante, p. 651, post, p. 701.)

KILLING OR MAIMING ANIMALS.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 97 (Malicious Damage Act, 1861), s. 40—Killing or maiming cattle.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously kill, maim or wound any cattle shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding fourteen years. . . . [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 30, s. 16.]

Sect. 41—Killing or maiming animals other than cattle.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously kill, maim, or wound any dog, bird, beast or other animal, not being cattle, but being either the subject of larceny at common law, or being ordinarily kept in a state of confinement, or for any domestic purpose, shall, on conviction thereof before a justice of the peace, at the discretion of the justice, either be committed to the common gaol or house of correction, there to be imprisoned only, or to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour, for any term not exceeding six months, or else shall forfeit and pay, over and above the amount of injury done, such sum of money not exceeding twenty pounds as to the justice shall seem meet; and whosoever, having been convicted of any such offence, shall afterwards commit any of the said offences in this section before mentioned, and shall be convicted thereof in like manner, shall be committed to the common gaol or house of correction, there to be kept to hard labour for such term not exceeding twelve months as the convicting justice shall think fit. [This section was new law in 1861. The accused can elect to be tried on indictment. 42 & 43 Vict. c. 49, s. 17 (ante, p. 6). The indictment need not state the fact of the election (vide ante, p. 490). In Daniel v. Janes, 2 C. P. D. 351; 41 J. P. 712, it was held that it was not an offence under this section to place poisoned flesh in a garden for the purpose of destroying a dog which was in the habit of straying there; but see 27 & 28 Vict. c. 115, s. 2. In Smith v. Williams, 56 J. P. 840; 9 T. L. R. 9, it was held that the section did not apply to the shooting of trespassing fowls. But where a gamekeeper killed a trespassing dog at which he had shot (with the intention of driving it away, and in order to protect his master's pheasants), it was held that the test of liability to be convicted under this section was whether he acted under the bonâ fide belief that what he did was necessary for the protection of his master's property, and that it was the only way in which it could be protected. Miles v. Hutchings [1903], 2 K. B. 714; 72 L. J. (K. B.) 775; 20 Cox, 455; and cf. Armstrong v. Mitchell, 67 J. P. Rep. 629.

The above enactments are concerned only with animals as the subject of property. As to cruelty to animals, see post, Book II., Part II., chap. vi., s. 7.]

Indictment for killing a Horse (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 40).

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—certain cattle, to wit, one horse ("any cattle"), of the goods and chattels of J. N., feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously did kill ("kill, maim, or wound"); against the form [as ante, p. 465]. The particular species of cattle killed, maimed, or wounded, must be specified; an allegation that the prisoner maimed certain cattle is not sufficient. R. v. Chalkley, R. & R. 258. The word "cattle" is the only word used in the 40th section of the statute; and this, in former statutes upon this subject (9 G. 1, c. 22, s. 1; 4 G. 4, c. 54, s. 2), was held to include horses, as well as oxen, etc., R. v. Paty, 2 W. Bl. 721; 2 East, P. C. 1074; and also pigs, R. v. Chapple, R. & R. 77; 15 R. R. 736; and asses, R. v. Whitney, 1 Mood. C. C. 3. Where the injured animals were agisted, the property may be laid in the agister. R. v. Woodward, 2 East, P. C. 653, and see ante, p. 58.

Felony: penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. —24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 40; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub.-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235.) As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 73 (ante, p. 650).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant killed the horse, the property of J. N. Prove also that it was done maliciously (see ante, p. 651, post, p. 701); but it is not now necessary, as it was formerly, to prove the offence to have been committed from malice to the owner. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 58 (ante, p. 649); R. v. Tivey, 1 Den. xviii., 63; 1 C. & K. 704. On an indictment under 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 30, s. 16 (rep.), for unlawfully and maliciously killing a mare, it was proved that the prisoner caused the death of the mare through injuries inflicted by his inserting the handle of a fork into her vagina. There was no evidence that the prisoner was actuated by ill-will towards the owner of the mare, or spite towards the mare, or by any motive except the gratification of his own depraved taste. The jury found that the prisoner did not intend to kill the mare; but that he knew what he was doing would or might kill her, and nevertheless did what he did recklessly, and not caring whether the mare was injured or not. The jury having convicted the prisoner, it was held that there was sufficient malice, and that the conviction was right. R. v. Welch, 1 Q. B. D. 23; 45 L. J. (M. C.) 17.

Upon an indictment for administering sulphuric acid to a horse, evidence may be given of other acts of administering, in order to show the intent. R. v. Mogg. 4 C. & P. 364, and ante, pp. 308–312.

To constitute maiming, a permanent injury must be inflicted on the animal. R. v. Jeans, 1 C. & K. 539. But if a wounding be alleged, it is not necessary to prove a permanent injury. Where the wounding proved was driving a nail into the frog of a horse's foot, but it appeared that the horse was likely to recover, it was objected that no wounding was within the meaning of 9 G. 1, c. 22 (rep.), that was not productive of permanent injury to the animal; but the judges overruled the objection, holding that the word "wound" was used by the legislature as contra-distinguished from maiming, which is a permanent injury. R. v. Haywood, 2 East, P. C. 1076; R. & R. 16. It is not necessary to constitute a wounding within this section that any instrument other than the hand should be used. R. v. Bullock, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 115; 37 L. J. (M. C.) 47; 11 Cox, 125.

Upon an indictment for killing, wounding, and maiming a mare, it appeared that the defendant poured nitrous acid into her ears, some of which either ran into her eye, or was poured into it, and blinded her; she was killed by her owner, and surgeons proved that the injuries done to the ear were not wounds, but ulcers; the defendant was therefore convicted of the maiming, and the judges held the conviction right. R. v. Owens, 1 Mood. C. C. 205.

Upon an indictment for wounding a sheep, it appeared that the prisoner set a dog at the sheep, which bit it; and Parke, J., held that this was not a wounding within the meaning of 4 G. 4, c. 54, s. 2 (rep.). R. v. Hughes, 2 C. & P. 420. But see R. v. Elmsly, 2 Lewin, 126. And where the prisoner set fire to a cow-house, in which was a cow, which was burnt to death, Taunton, J., held that the prisoner could be convicted upon an indictment for killing the cow. R. v. Haughton, 5 C. & P. 559.

Where the injury is done in self-defence, the defendant is entitled to acquittal. See Hanway v. Boultbee, 4 C. & P. 350; 1 M. & Rob. 15.

DESTROYING HOPBINDS.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 97 (Malicious Damage Act, 1861), s. 19.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously cut or otherwise destroy any hopbinds growing on poles in any plantation of hops shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding fourteen years, . . . or to be imprisoned . . . and, if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping. [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 30, s. 18, as to which see R. v. Boucher, 5 Jur. 709.]

Indictment.

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—one thousand hopbinds, the property of J. N., then growing on poles in a certain plantation of hops of the said J. N., situate in the parish of B., in the county of K., feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously did cut and destroy ("cut or otherwise destroy"): against the form [as ante, p. 465].

Felony: penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour; and, if a male under the age of sixteen, with or without whipping.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 19; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 73 (ante, p. 650).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant cut or otherwise destroyed the hopbinds, or some part of them, as alleged; that they were at the time growing in a plantation of hops, situate as described; and that the plantation belonged to J. N. Prove, also, that the act was done maliciously. (See ante, p. 651, post, p. 701).

DESTROYING TREES, ETC.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 97 (Malicious Damage Act, 1861), s. 20—Destroying trees in parks, etc.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously cut, break, bark, root up, or otherwise destroy or damage the whole or any part of any tree, sapling, or shrub, or any underwood, growing in any park, pleasure-ground, garden, orchard, or avenue, or in any ground adjoining or belonging to any dwelling-house (in case the amount of the injury done shall exceed the sum of one pound) shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude . . . or to be imprisoned . . . and, if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping. [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G 4, c. 30, s. 19.]

Sect. 21—Destroying trees not in parks, etc.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously cut, break, bark, root up, or otherwise destroy or damage, the whole or any part of any tree, sapling, or shrub, or any underwood, growing elsewhere than in any park, pleasure-ground, garden, orchard, or avenue, or in any ground adjoining to or belonging to any dwelling-house (in case the amount of injury done shall exceed the sum of five pounds) shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude . . . or to be imprisoned . . . and, if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping. [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 30, s. 19.]

Sect. 53.]—Extends power of summary punishment under s. 52 (post, p. 701), for damage under 5*l.*, to cases of wilful or malicious injury to trees, saplings, shrubs, or underwood, not within ss. 20, 21, supra, nor 51, post, p. 700.

Indictment for cutting, etc., Trees, etc., in Parks, etc., Value above 1*l.* (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 20.)

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—two elm trees ("the whole or any part of any tree, sapling, or shrub, or any underwood"), the property of J. N., then growing in a certain park ("park, pleasure-ground, garden, orchard, or avenue, or any ground adjoining or belonging to a dwelling-house"), of the said J. N., situate in the parish of ——, in the county of ——, feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously did cut and damage ("cut, break, bark, root up, or otherwise destroy or damage"), thereby then doing injury to the said J. N., to an amount exceeding the sum of one pound, to wit, the amount of two pounds; against the form (as ante, p. 465). A count may be added for cutting with intent to steal the trees. (See ante, p. 483.)

Felony: penal servitude for not less than three years and not exceeding five years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour; and, if a male under sixteen years of age, with or without whipping.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 20; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 73 (ante, p. 650).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant "cut, broke, barked, rooted up, or otherwise destroyed or damaged" one or more of the trees mentioned in the indictment, and that the injury done exceeds the sum of one pound. A variance in the number of trees is not material. Prove that the trees, at the time, were growing in a park situate as described in the indictment (or, "in a pleasure-ground, garden, orchard, or avenue, or in any ground adjoining or belonging to a dwelling-house") (see R. v. Hodges, M. & M. 341, ante, p. 484); and that they were the property of J. N. Prove, also, that the trees were cut maliciously (see ante, p. 651, post, p. 701); but if it be doubtful whether the defendant did not intend to steal the trees, add a count to meet that. (See ante, p. 484.)

(24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 21, ante, p. 695.)

Commencement as ante, p. 433]—ten elm trees (see the last precedent), the property of J. N., then growing in a certain close ("elsewhere than in a park," etc., see the last precedent) of the said J. N., situate in the parish of ——, in the county of ——, feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously did cut and damage (see the last precedent), thereby then doing injury to the said J. N., to an amount exceeding the sum of five pounds, to wit, to the amount of six pounds; against the form (as ante, p. 465).

Felony: see the last precedent.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s, 21.

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant cut, etc., the trees mentioned in the indictment, or some of them; that the trees were the property of J. N., that is, that they were growing on land belonging to him, or in his occupation; that damage exceeding five pounds was done at one time (R. v. Williams, 9 Cox, 338 (C. C. R. Ir.)), or as part of one continuing transaction (see ante, p. 642); and that the cutting was done maliciously (ante, p. 651, post, p. 701). The "amount of injury done" means the actual injury done to the trees, etc., by the defendant's act; it is not sufficient to bring the case within the statute, that, although the amount of such actual injury is less than 5*l.*, the amount of consequential damage (as by its being necessary, in consequence of the defendant's act, to stub up and replace a hedge) would exceed 5*l.* R. v. Whiteman, Dears. 353; 23 L. J. (M. C.) 120; 6 Cox, 370. (See ante, p. 484.) It is not necessary to prove that the trees grew elsewhere than in a park, etc.

DESTROYING TREES, ETC., AFTER TWO PREVIOUS CONVICTIONS.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 97 (Malicious Damage Act, 1861), s. 22.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously cut, break, bark, root up, or otherwise destroy or damage the whole or any part of any tree, sapling, or shrub, or any underwood, wheresoever the same may be growing, the injury done being to the amount of one shilling at the least, shall, on conviction thereof before a justice of the peace, at the discretion of the justice, either be committed to the common gaol or house of correction, there to be imprisoned only, or to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour for any term not exceeding three months, or else shall forfeit and pay, over and above the amount of the injury done, such sum of money, not exceeding five pounds, as to the justice shall seem meet; and whosoever, having been convicted of any such offence, either against this or any former Act of Parliament, shall afterwards commit any of the said offences in this section before mentioned, and shall be convicted thereof in like manner, shall for such second offence be committed to the common gaol or house of correction, there to be kept to hard labour for such term, not exceeding twelve months, as the convicting justice shall think fit; and whosoever, having been twice convicted of any such offence (whether both or either of such convictions shall have taken place before or after the passing of this Act), shall afterwards commit any of the said offences in this section before mentioned, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour . . . and, if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping. [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 30, s. 20. The accused, when charged after a first conviction, can elect to be tried on indictment. 42 & 43 Vict. c. 49, s. 17 (ante, p. 6). The election need not be averred: see ante, p. 490.]

Middlesex, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King, upon their oath present, that J. S., on the —— day of ——, A.D. , one elm tree ("the whole or any part of any tree, sapling, or shrub, or any underwood") the property of J. N., then growing on certain land of the said J. N., in the parish of ——, in the county of ——, unlawfully and maliciously did cut and damage ("cut, break, bark, root up, or otherwise destroy or damage"), thereby then doing injury to the said J. N., to the amount of two shillings; against the form of the statute in such case made and provided: And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do say, that heretofore and before the committing of the offence hereinbefore mentioned [stating the two previous convictions as in the precedent at p. 486].—The subsequent offence is first stated in this precedent, but it seems immaterial whether it be stated before or after the previous convictions, as 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, contains no provision similar to that contained in s. 116 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 (ante, p. 430), which, in cases falling under it, requires the subsequent offence to be first charged. It seems also to be the better opinion that the latter part of the last-named section, regulating the proceedings upon indictments for committing any offence after a previous conviction or convictions, only applied originally (before its operation was extended by 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112, s. 9), to subsequent offences against the Larceny Act (see Greaves' Criminal Law Consolidation Acts (2nd ed.) p. 203; 2 Russ. Cr. (4th ed.) by Greaves, 349): and there is no analogous provision in the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97. The question is not affected by 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112, s. 9 (ante, p. 185), which only extends to indictments for crimes after previous convictions for crimes as there defined, whereas the previous convictions charged in this indictment are convictions for offences. (See s. 20 of 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112.)

Misdemeanor; imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour; and, if a male under sixteen years of age, with or without whipping. —24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 22. As to fining the offender and requiring him to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour, Id. s. 73 (ante, p. 650).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant cut and damaged the tree, the property of J. N.; prove that it was done maliciously (see ante, p. 651, post, p. 701); and prove that the damage exceeds 1*s*. (See ante, p. 488.) Prove the two previous convictions in the manner directed by 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112, s. 18 (ante, p. 488), and the identity of the defendant.

In Heaven v. Crutchley [1903] 68 J. P. Rep. 52, it was held that a person could be convicted under this section for damage done in assertion of a legal right if the damage exceeded what could be reasonably supposed to be necessary for the assertion of the right. The court followed R. v. Clemens [1898] 1 Q. B. 556; 67 L. J. (Q. B.) 482; 19 Cox, 18.

DESTROYING PLANTS, ETC., AND FENCES.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 97 (Malicious Damage Act, 1861), s. 23—Plants growing in gardens.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously destroy, or damage with intent to destroy, any plant, root, fruit, or vegetable production, growing in any garden, orchard, nursery-ground, hothouse, greenhouse, or conservatory shall on conviction thereof before a justice of the peace, at the discretion of the justice, either be committed to the common gaol or house of correction, there to be imprisoned only, or to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour, for any term not exceeding six months, or else shall forfeit and pay, over and above the amount of the injury done, such sum of money, not exceeding twenty pounds, as to the justice shall seem meet;

Sect. 24—Plants not growing in gardens.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously destroy, or damage with intent to destroy, any cultivated root or plant used for the food of man or beast, or for medicine, or for distilling, or for dyeing, or for or in the course of any manufacture, and growing on any land, open or enclosed, not being a garden, orchard, or nursery-ground, shall, on conviction thereof before a justice of the peace, at the discretion of the justice, either be committed to the common gaol or house of correction, there to be imprisoned only, or to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour, for any term not exceeding one month, or else shall forfeit and pay, over and above the amount of the injury done, such sum of money not exceeding twenty shillings as to the justice shall seem meet, and in default of payment thereof, together with the costs, shall be committed as aforesaid for any term not exceeding one month, unless payment be sooner made; any of the said offences in this section before mentioned, and shall be convicted thereof in like manner, shall be committed to the common gaol or house of correction, there to be kept to hard labour for such term not exceeding six months, as the convicting justice shall think fit. [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 30, s. 22. On a charge for a second or subsequent offence, the accused can elect to be tried on indictment. 42 & 43 Vict. c. 49, s. 17 (ante, p. 6). The election need not be averred: see ante, p. 490.]

And whosoever, having been convicted of any such offence, either against this or any former Act of Parliament, shall afterwards commit

Sect. 25—Destroying fences.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously cut, break, throw down, or in anywise destroy any fence of any description whatsoever, or any wall, stile, or gate, or any part thereof respectively, shall, on conviction thereof, before a justice of the peace, for the first offence, forfeit and pay over and above the amount of the injury done, such sum of money not exceeding 5*l.*, as to the justice shall seem meet;

And whosoever having been convicted of any such offence, either under this or any former Act of Parliament, shall afterwards commit any of the said offences in this section before mentioned, and shall be convicted thereof in like manner, shall be committed to the common gaol or house of correction, there to be kept to hard labour for such term not exceeding twelve months, as the convicting justice shall think fit. [This section is taken from 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 30, s. 23. On a charge for a second or subsequent offence, the accused can elect to be tried on indictment. 42 & 43 Vict. c. 49, s. 17 (ante, p. 6). The election need not be averred; see ante, p. 490.]

Indictment after a previous Conviction, for destroying Plants, etc., in a Garden, etc. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 23, ante, p. 698.)

Middlesex, to wit: The jurors for our lord the King, upon their oath present, that J. S., on the —— day of ——, A.D. 1902, certain fruits, to wit, twenty pounds' weight of grapes ("any plant, root, fruit, or vegetable production"), the property of J. N., in a certain garden ("in any garden, orchard, nursery-ground, hothouse, greenhouse, or conservatory") of the said J. N., situate in the parish of ——, in the county of ——, then growing, feloniously, unlawfully and maliciously did destroy ("destroy or damage with intent to destroy"), against the form of the statute in such case made and provided. And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do say, that heretofore and before the committing of the offence hereinbefore mentioned [stating the previous conviction as in the precedent (ante, p. 486)]. See the note to the last precedent.

Felony: penal servitude for not less than three years and not exceeding five years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour; and, if a male under sixteen years of age, with or without whipping.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 23; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 73 (ante, p. 650).

Evidence.

Prove the second offence stated in the indictment: that the defendant destroyed the grapes; that they were, at the time, growing in the garden of J. N., situate as described in the indictment; and that the offence was committed maliciously. (See ante, p. 651, post, p. 701.) Prove the previous conviction in the manner directed by 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112, s. 18 (ante, p. 861), and the identity of the defendant.

DESTROYING OR DAMAGING WORKS OF ART, ETC., IN MUSEUMS, ETC.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 97 (Malicious Damage Act, 1861), s. 39.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously destroy or damage any book, manuscript, picture, print, statue, bust, or vase, or any other article or thing kept for the purposes of art, science, or literature, or as an object of curiosity, in any museum, gallery, cabinet, library or other repository, which museum, gallery, cabinet, library or other repository, is either at all times, or from time to time, open for the admission of the public or of any considerable number of persons to view the same, either by the permission of the proprietor thereof, or by the payment of money before entering the same, or any picture, statue, monument, or other memorial of the dead, painted glass, or other ornament or work of art, in any church, chapel, meeting-house, or other place of divine worship, or in any building belonging to the queen, or to any county, riding, division, city, borough, poor-law union, parish or place, or to any university, or college or hall of any university, or to any inn of court, or in any street, square, churchyard, burial-ground, public garden or ground, or any statue or monument exposed to public view, or any ornament, railing, or fence surrounding such statue or monument, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding six months, with or without hard labour, and, if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping:

Provided that nothing herein contained shall be deemed to affect the right of any person to recover, by action at law, damages for the injury so committed. [This section was framed from 8 & 9 Vict. c. 44, ss. 1, 4; and 17 & 18 Vict. c. 33, s. 6, with the additions italicized. The defacing of tombs, etc., is said to be punishable at common law. See Corven's case, 12 Co. Rep. 105; Greaves Crim. Law Cons. Acts (2nd ed.), p. 238.

MALICIOUS INJURIES TO PROPERTY TO AMOUNT OF FIVE POUNDS.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 97 (Malicious Damage Act, 1861), s. 51.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously commit any damage, injury, or spoil to or upon any real or personal property whatsoever, either of a public or private nature, for which no punishment is hereinbefore provided, the damage, injury, or spoil being to an amount exceeding five pounds, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour: and in case any such offence shall be committed between the hours of nine of the clock in the evening and six of the clock in the next morning, shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude. . . . [This section was new law in 1861.]

Sect. 52—[Wilful or malicious injury to such property to the amount of less than 5l.]—Punishable on summary conviction only.

Indictment.

An indictment under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 51, can be framed from the precedents, ante, pp. 695, 696.

Evidence.

In order to justify a conviction under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 51, the act done by the prisoner must be done wilfully, or at least recklessly; and therefore, where a prisoner was indicted under it for unlawfully and maliciously committing damage, above the value of 5*l.*, to a window in a house, and the jury found that the prisoner threw a stone which broke the window, but that he threw it at some people he had been fighting with, intending to strike one or more of them with it, but not intending to break the window, and returned a verdict of guilty; it was held that upon this finding the conviction must be quashed. It was, however, intimated by the court that if the jury had found that the prisoner was aware that the window was where it was, and that he was likely to break it, and was reckless whether he did so or not, the case might have been different. R. v. Pembliton, L. R. 2 (C. C. R.) 119; 43 L. J. (M. C.) 91. And see R. v. Latimer, 17 Q. B. D. 359 (where the meaning of the decision in R. v. Pembliton is explained). In R. v. Welch, 1 Q. B. D. 23; 45 L. J. (M. C.) (ante, p. 693), where a thief broke a window in order to reach and steal goods in a shop, it was held that his act was a misdemeanor within the Malicious Damage Act, 1861. M'Dowell v. Mayor, etc., of Dublin [1903] 2 Ir. Rep. 541, C. A. In re Borrowes [1900], 2 Ir. Rep. 593 (C. A.), some boys who had been allowed to visit a demesne from motives of curiosity, broke open the doors and windows of a building in the demesne and entered the building. In getting out again, one of the boys broke some mirrors stored in the building by wilfully and recklessly climbing over them. It was held that these acts were wanton and malicious, and punishable under s. 52. Where the defence to an indictment under the section is that the acts complained of were done in exercise of the claim of right, it will fail unless the defendants can show that they acted in bonâ fide exercise of a supposed right, and did no more damage than they could reasonably suppose to be necessary for its assertion. R. v. Clemens [1898] 1 Q. B. 556; 67 L. J. (Q. B.) 482; 19 Cox, 18; and see Heaven v. Crutchley, 68 J. P. Rep. 53. In an indictment under this section for maliciously damaging certain articles of personal property, the damage exceeding 5*l.*, it is not necessary to allege the value of each article injured, but only that the amount of damage done to the several articles exceeded 5*l.* in the aggregate. R. v. Thoman, 12 Cox, 54 (C. C. R.); cf. R. v. Forsyth, R. & R. 274. The soil of a town moor was vested in the corporation of the town in fee, but freemen were under statute entitled to the "full right and benefit to the herbage" of the moor for pasturing cows. It was held that this right to the herbage was not "any real or personal property whatsoever" within the meaning of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 52, which applies only to tangible property and not to a mere incorporeal right. Laws v. Eltringham, 8 Q. B. D. 283; 51 L. J. (M. C.) 13. But see Gardner v. Mansbridge, 19 Q. B. D. 217, where picking wild mushrooms was held not to be within s. 52: and Gayford v. Chouler [1898],

1 Q. B. 316, where damaging grass by walking over it was held within the section. It is to be noted that s. 52 has the words "wilfully or maliciously," whereas s. 51 has "unlawfully and maliciously": see Roper v. Knott [1898] 1 Q. B. 868; 67 L. J. Q. B. 574; 19 Cox, 69; "wilfully" means "deliberately and intentionally, not by accident or inadvertence": see R. v. Senior [1899] 1 Q. B. 283, 291; 68 L. J. Q. B. 175 (C. C. R.)

ATTEMPTED INJURIES TO POST OFFICE LETTER-BOXES.

Statute.

47 & 48 Vict. c. 76 (Post Office Protection Act, 1884), s. 3—Placing injurious substances in or against post office letter-boxes — Punishment.]—A person shall not place or attempt to place in or against any post office letter-box any fire, any match, any light, any explosive substance, any dangerous substance, any filth, any noxious or deleterious substance, or any fluid, and shall not commit a nuisance in or against any post office letter-box, and shall not do or attempt to do anything likely to injure the box, appurtenances or contents. Any person who acts in contravention of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and be liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding 10*l.*, and on conviction on indictment, to imprisoment, with or without hard labour, for a period not exceeding twelve months.

Sect. 16—Saving clause as to liability.]—This Act shall not exempt any person from any proceeding by indictment or otherwise for an offence which is punishable at common law, or under any Act other than this Act, so that no person be tried or punished twice for the same offence. When proceedings are taken before any court against a person in respect of an offence under this Act, which is also an offence punishable at common law, or under some Act other than this Act, the court may direct that, instead of such proceedings being continued, proceedings should be taken for punishing such person at common law, or under some Act other than this Act. Cf. 52 & 53 Vict. c. 63, s. 33 (ante, p. 170).

Sect. 19—"Post office letter-box," meaning of the term. Evidence.]—Ante, p. 507.

SECT. 8.

FORGERY.

Common Law.

The earliest law books treat of forgery only in the case of forging seals of state, which was treason. Bracton de Coronâ, ff. 118 b. 119 b. Other forms of forgery came to be treated as misdemeanors, in all cases of "forging any document by which any other person may be injured, or uttering any such document knowing it to be forged, with intent to defraud." Steph. Dig. Cr. L. (5th ed.), 350; 4 Bl. Com. 247. R. v. Coogan, 1 Leach, 448; R. v. Ward, 2 Str. 747; 2 East, P. C. 861: R. v. Jones,

2 East, P. C. 991: R. v. Wilcox, R. & R. 50. And knowingly and with fraudulent intent to insert in a document a false date which is material to the operation of the document is forgery. R. v. Ritson, L. R., 1 C. C. R. 200; 39 L. J. (M. C.) 10; 11 Cox, 352.

Forgery at common law is defined by Blackstone (4 Com. 247) as the fraudulent making or alteration of a writing to the prejudice of another man's right; and this definition was accepted in R. v. Elsworth, 2 East, P. C. 986, and R. v. Riley [1896] 1 Q. B. 309; 18 Cox, 285 (C. C. R.). Forgery must be of a writing (R. v. Closs, Dears. & B. 460; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 54; 7 Cox, 494), but may be of the body of the writing, or the signature or the seal. R. v. Collins, 1 Cox, 57, and for a discussion as to what amounts to forgery at common law, see R. v. White, 1 Den. 208.

The following have been held to be forgeries at common law:—Counterfeiting a letter of credit, Style, 12; a bill of lading, R. v. Stocker, 1 Salk, 342; a debtor's discharge, R. v. Fawcett, 2 East, P. C. 862; a summons in the common law county court, R. v. Collier, 5 C. & P. 160; a magistrate's order to a gaoler to discharge a prisoner, as upon bail having been given, R. v. Harris, 1 Mood. C. C. 393; 6 C. & P. 129; an order of admission to see a prisoner committed for trial, R. v. Barrett, 130 C. C. C. Sess. Pap. 797, Fulton, Common Serjeant: a certificate of the master of a ship that the defendant had served on board the ship, and conducted himself in a sober and orderly manner, the production of such certificate being necessary to enable the defendant to undergo the voluntary examination at the Trinity House, as to his ability to act as a master, R. v. Toshack, 1 Den. 492; 4 Cox, 38; a certificate of ordination, R. v. Etheridge, 19 Cox, 676; a testimonial as to character in order to obtain an appointment as a schoolmaster, R. v. Sharman, Dears. 285; 23 L. J. (M. C.) 51; 6 Cox, 312; a recommendation to a situation as a police constable, R. v. Moah, Dears. & B. 550; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 204; a railway pass, R. v. Boult, 2 C. & K. 604; and the like: see 2 East, P. C. 862, and the authorities there cited; 2 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 617, and R. v. Riley [1896] 1 Q. B. 309.

Falsification of accounts (ante, p. 591) is in some, but not all, cases, forgery. Re Arton (No. 2) [1896] 1 Q. B. 509, 517, Russell, L.C.J. Filling up the voting papers of marksmen with their assent has been held not to be forgery at common law. R. v. Hartshorne, 6 Cox, 395. As to the common law offence of uttering forged writings, see below. Forgery and uttering have been made felony by statute in very many cases. See post, p. 705.

Indictment for Forgery at Common Law.

Surrey, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present, that J. S., on the 1st day of June, in the year of our Lord ——, unlawfully, knowingly, and falsely did forge and counterfeit a certain writing, purporting to be [describe the instrument: see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 42, post, p. 705], with intent thereby then to defraud; to the evil example of all others in the like case offending, and against the peace of our lord the King, his crown and dignity. (2nd Count.) And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present, that the said J. S. afterwards, to wit, on the day and year aforesaid, unlawfully, falsely, and deceitfully did utter and publish [as true] a certain other (see post, pp. 711, 712) false, forged, and counterfeited writing, purporting to be [describe the instrument] with intent thereby then to defraud (he the said J. S. at the said time he so uttered and published the said last-mentioned false, forged, and counterfeited writing as aforesaid, well knowing the same to be false, forged, and counterfeited); to the evil example of all others in the like case offending, and against the peace of our lord the King, his crown and dignity. The indictment must state the instrument alleged to have been forged, R. v. Wilcox, R. & R. 50. Intent to defraud a particular person need not be stated in an indictment for common law forgery (24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 44, though it was otherwise at common law except where the document was of a public nature. R. v. Hodgson, Dears. C. B. 3, Jervis, C.J. (post, p. 718). See per Wills, J., in R. v. Riley [1896] 1 Q. B. 309). The words "as true" have usually been inserted in the indictment, but seem to be unnecessary. In indictments for forgery at common law it is safer to set out the document verbatim where there is any doubt as to its purport.

Misdemeanor at common law: punishable by fine or imprisonment without hard labour (R. v. Hamilton [1901] 1 K. B. 740: 19 Cox, 675 (C. C. R.)), or both; see ante, pp. 238, 239.

Forgery is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126). See Archbold, Quarter Sessions (5th ed.), p. 270.

Evidence.

Prove the forgery and uttering as directed, post, pp. 712, 719, except that it must be proved that the defendant uttered the instrument as true; merely to prove that he sold or disposed of it will not support the indictment. In R. v. Boult, 2 C. & K. 604, it was held that the mere uttering as true of a forged instrument, the forgery of which is indictable at common law, was not per se indictable, unless some fraud were actually committed thereby. But this decision is expressly overruled by R. v. Sharman, Dears. 285; 23 L. J. (M. C.) 51: 6 Cox, 312 (C. C. R.), where it was laid down that it is an offence at common law to utter a forged document, the forgery of which is an offence at common law. If the forgery be proved, it would seem to be sufficient; for, notwithstanding some ancient authorities to the contrary, it does not appear to be necessary that the fraud contemplated should have been actually effected by the forgery, to render it indictable at common law; the mere intent to defraud seems to be sufficient. R. v. Ward, 2 Str. 747; 2 Ld. Raym. 1461; 2 East, P. C. 861, 862.

Where B., the prosecutor, made powders called B.'s Baking Powders, which he sold in packets wrapped up in printed papers, and the defendant caused a great number of wrappers to be printed, so nearly resembling B.'s as to deceive persons of ordinary observation, and make them believe that they were B.'s, in which the defendant inclosed powders of his own, which he fraudulently sold as B.'s powders; this was held not to be forgery, but obtaining money by false pretences. R. v. Smith, Dears. & B. 566; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 225. Frauds of this kind are also punishable under the Merchandize Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28) (post, Part II., chap. v. s. 3).

Forgery of a signature on a painting is not forgery at common law. R. v. Closs, Dears. & B. 460; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 54; 7 Cox, 494. But the offence is a common law cheat if the picture is sold as genuine, or may be the subject of an indictment for obtaining money by false pretences, or may be punished summarily under the Fine Arts Copyright Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 68, ss. 7, 8).

It has been held not to be forgery at common law for a bank clerk to make false entries in a book of account kept by the bank (Re Windsor, 34 L. J. (M. C.) 163; 6 B. & S. 522; 10 Cox, 118), nor to forge a medical diploma, unless there were at the time of forgery an intent to defraud (R. v. Hodgson, 25 L. J. (M. C.) 78; Dears. & B. 3; 7 Cox, 122 (C. C. R.); and post, p. 718); and it would seem, at all events where the document is not of a public nature, that it is still necessary to prove, though not to allege, the existence of an intent to defraud some person at the time when the false document is made. Id.

FORGERY BY STATUTE—GENERAL PROVISIONS.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 98 (Forgery Act, 1861), s. 41—Venue.]—If any person shall commit any offence against this Act, or shall commit any offence of forging or altering any matter whatsoever, or of offering, uttering, disposing of, or putting off any matter whatsoever, knowing the same to be forged or altered, whether the offence in any such case shall be indictable at common law, or by virtue of any Act passed or to be passed, every such offender may be dealt with, indicted, tried, and punished in any county or place in which he shall be apprehended or be in custody, in the same manner in all respects as if his offence had been actually committed in that county or place; and every accessory before or after the fact to any such offence, if the same be a felony, and every person aiding, abetting, or counselling the commission of any such offence, if the same be a misdemeanor, may be dealt with, indicted, tried and punished, in any county or place in which he shall be apprehended or be in custody, in the same manner in all respects as if his offence, and the offence of his principal, had been actually committed in such county or place. [This section in substance re-enacts 11 G. 4 & 1 W. 4, c. 66, s. 24. A similar provision is made by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 17, as to forgeries of documents within the Evidence Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 113), and the Evidence Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 99).]

Sect. 42—Form of Indictment.]—In any indictment for forging, altering, offering, uttering, disposing, or putting off any instrument, it shall be sufficient to describe such instrument by any name or designation by which the same may be usually known, or by the purport thereof, without setting out any copy or facsimile thereof, or otherwise describing the same or the value thereof. [This section re-enacts 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 5, with the additions italicized. As to what is an "instrument" see R. v. Riley [1896] 1 Q. B. 309. See also ante, p. 74.]

security, or any deed, bond, or writing obligatory for the payment of money (whether such deed, bond, or writing obligatory shall be made only for the payment of money, or for the payment of money, together with some other purpose), or any indorsement on or assignment of any such undertaking, warrant, order, authority, request, deed, bond, or writing obligatory, in whatsoever place or country out of England and Ireland, whether under the dominion of her Majesty or not, the money payable or secured by such bill, note, undertaking, warrant, order, authority, request, deed, bond, or writing obligatory may be or may purport to be payable, and in whatever language the same respectively or any part thereof may be expressed, and whether such bill, note, undertaking, warrant, order, authority or request be or be not under seal, every such person, and every person aiding, abetting, or counselling such person, shall be deemed to be an offender within the meaning of this Act, and shall be punishable thereby in the same manner as if the money had been payable or had purported to be payable in England or Ireland. [This section re-enacts 11 G. 4 & 1 W. 4, c. 66, s. 30, *with the additions italicized, and gets rid of the doubts expressed under earlier statutes, whether instruments payable abroad came within those statutes. Sect. 47—Other punishments substituted for those of 5 Eliz. c. 14, where adopted in other Acts.]—Whosoever shall be convicted of any offence which shall have been subjected by any Act or Acts to the same pains and penalties as are imposed by the Act passed in the fifth year of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, intituled "An Act against Forgers of False Deeds and Writings," for any of the offences first enumerated in the said Act, shall be guilty of felony, and shall, in lieu of such pains and penalties, be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding fourteen years. . . . [This section re-enacts 11 G. 4 & 1 W. 4, c. 66, s. 23. See post, p. 755.]

Sect. 48—Punishment for forgery in general.]—Where by any Act now in force any person falsely making, forging, counterfeiting, erasing, or altering any matter whatsoever, or uttering, publishing, offering, disposing of, putting away, or making use of any matter whatsoever, knowing the same to have been falsely made, forged, counterfeited, erased or altered, or any person demanding, or endeavouring to receive or have any thing, or to do or cause to be done any Act, upon or by virtue of any matter whatsoever, knowing such matter to have been falsely made, forged, counterfeited, erased or altered, would, according to the provisions contained in any such Act, be guilty of felony, and would, before the passing of the Act of the first year of King William the Fourth, chapter sixty-six (which, except section 21, was rep. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 95, s. 1), have been liable to suffer death as a felon; or where by any Act now in force any person falsely personating another or falsely acknowledging any thing in the name of another, or falsely representing any other person than the real party to be such real party, or wilfully making a false entry in any book, account, or document, or in any manner wilfully falsifying any part of any book, account, or document, or wilfully making a transfer of any stock, annuity, or fund in the name of any person not being the owner thereof, or knowingly taking any false oath, or knowingly making any false affidavit or false affirmation, or demanding or receiving any money or other thing by virtue of any probate or letters of administration, knowing the will on which such probate shall have been obtained to have been false or forged, or knowing such probate or letters of administration to have been obtained by means of any false oath or false affirmation, would, according to the provisions contained in any such Act, be guilty of felony, and would, before the passing of the said Act of the first year of King William the Fourth, have been liable to suffer death as a felon; or where by any Act now in force any person making or using, or knowingly having in his custody or possession, any frame, mould, or instrument for the making of paper, with certain words visible in the substance thereof, or any person making such paper, or causing certain words to appear visible in the substance of any paper, would, according to the provisions contained in any such Act, be guilty of felony, and would before the passing of the said Act of the first year of King William the Fourth, have been liable to suffer death as a felon; then, and in each of the several cases aforesaid, if any person shall be convicted of any such felony as is hereinbefore in this section mentioned, or of aiding, abetting, counselling or procuring the commission thereof, and the same shall not be punishable under any of the other provisions of this Act, every such person shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for life . . . [This section re-enacts 11 G. 4 & 1 W. 4, c. 66, s. 1. As to the statutes to which it applies, see post, p. 755.]

Sect. 50—Admiralty jurisdiction.]—All indictable offences mentioned in this Act which shall be committed within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England or Ireland shall be deemed to be offences of the same nature and liable to the same punishments as if they had been committed upon the land in England or Ireland, and may be dealt with, inquired of, tried and determined in any county or place in England or Ireland in which the offender shall be apprehended or be in custody, in the same manner in all respects as if they had been actually committed in that county or place; and in any indictment for any such offence, or for being an accessory to such an offence, the venue in the margin shall be the same as if the offence had been committed in such county or place, and the offence shall be averred to have been committed on "the high seas."

Provided that nothing herein contained shall alter or affect any of the laws relating to the government of [his] Majesty's land or naval forces [see ante, pp. 39-43].

Sect. 51—Fine and sureties.]—Whenever any person shall be convicted of a misdemeanor under this Act, it shall be lawful for the court, if it shall think fit, in addition to or in lieu of any of the punishments by this Act authorized, to fine the offender, and to require him to enter into his own recognizances, and to find sureties, both or either, for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour; and in all cases of felonies in this Act mentioned it shall be lawful for the court, if it shall think fit, to require the offender to enter into his own recognizances, and to find sureties, both or either, for keeping the peace, in addition to any of the punishments by this Act authorized; provided that no person shall be imprisoned under this clause for not finding sureties for any period exceeding one year (see ante, p. 240).

Sect. 54—Costs of prosecution.]—The court before which any indictable misdemeanor against this Act shall be prosecuted or tried may allow the costs of the prosecution in the same manner as in cases of felony; and every order for the payment of such costs shall be made out, and the sum of money mentioned therein paid and repaid, upon the same terms and in the same manner in all respects as in cases of felony. [This section was new law in 1861. See ante, p. 246, et seq.]

General Form of Indictment for Forgery by Statute (see note, infra).

Surrey, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present, that J. S., on the first day of June, in the year of our Lord ——, feloniously did forge a certain [describe the instrument forged by any name or designation by which it is usually known, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 42 (ante, p. 705)], to wit a ——, purporting to be [set out the purport of the instrument], with intent thereby then to defraud; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. (2nd Count.) And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present, that the said J. S., afterwards, to wit, on the day and year aforesaid, feloniously did offer, utter, dispose of, and put off, a certain other forged —— [as in the first Count], with intent thereby then to defraud (he, the said J. S. at the time he so offered, uttered, disposed of, and put off the said last-mentioned forged —— as aforesaid well knowing the same to be forged); against the form [as ante, p. 465]. As to an averment that the prisoner is in custody in the county of trial, see post, tit. "Bigamy."

This indictment is not intended as a general precedent to serve in all cases of forgery; because the form in each particular case must depend upon the statute on which the indictment is framed. But with the assistance of it, and upon an attentive consideration of the operative words in the enactment creating the offence, the pleader can find no difficulty in framing an indictment in any case not particularly mentioned hereafter in this section. Formerly in all indictments for forgery it was necessary to set out the forged instrument verbatim; but by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 42 (which re-enacts and extends the provisions of 2 & 3 W. 4, s. 123), it is sufficient to describe the instrument by any name or designation by which the same may be usually known without setting forth any copy or facsimile thereof or otherwise describing the same or the value thereof. The purport of the instrument should be set out sufficiently to identify it with that which is the subject of the charge. For other precedents of indictments in the numerous forms of statutory forgery, see post, pp. 721–766.

It has been usual to describe the instrument in the second count for uttering, etc., as a certain "other" forged. . . . The reason for this is thus stated by Lord Denman, C.J., in Campbell v. R., 11 Q. B., at pp. 810, 811, viz., "The rules of pleading in criminal and civil cases proceed generally on the same principles. In civil actions, no doubt, a declaration containing two counts which necessarily on the face of them are for the same cause of action would be bad for duplicity on special demurrer (Slade v. Drake, Hob. 295). Therefore it has been usual to insert the word 'other' in a second count in order to avoid a demurrer."

It is submitted, however, that the instrument uttered can now be safely described in the second count of an indictment for forgery and uttering as "a certain —— to wit, the said —— in the first count of this indictment mentioned," and it is the practice now to omit the word "other" in indictments drawn at the Central Criminal Court.

Venue.]—As to the venue in forgery, see ante, pp. 47, 705. In an indictment for forgery under 1 & 2 W. 4, c. 123 (rep.), it was held that the forgery might be alleged to have been committed in the county in which the prisoner was in custody, by reason of 11 G. 4. & 1 W. 4, c. 66, s. 24. of which provided that that offence might be dealt with, indicted, tried and punished, and laid and charged to have been committed in the county in which the prisoner was in custody. R. v. James, 7 C. & P. 553, Patteson, J. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 41 (ante, p. 705), contains a similar provision as to venue, omitting the words "laid and charged to have been committed," but adding the words "in the same manner in all respects;" and it would seem that R. v. James applies to an indictment under the present statute. See Greaves' Crim. Law Cons. Acts (2nd ed.), p. 301, and post tit. "Bigamy." Although the defendant is not shown ever to have been in custody in the county where the bill is found, until the moment before his trial, when he surrenders in discharge of his bail, that is sufficient to make him triable there. R. v. Smythies, 1 Den. 498; 2 C. & K. 878; 19 L. J. (M. C.) 31.

The offence of forgery is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Description of offence—"Instrument," etc.]—The forgery should, in prudence, be alleged in the words of the statute on which the indictment is framed; but if the indictment contain the operative words of the statute, the insertion of other terms also will not vitiate it. R. v. Brewer, 6 C. & P. 363. The meaning of the word "instrument" is fully discussed in R. v. Riley [1896] 1 Q. B. 309 (C. C. R.). Forgery of part of an instrument may be charged as forgery of the whole instrument. R. v. Dawson, 1 Str. 19; 2 East, P. C. 978. If the forgery consists of the alteration of a true instrument the alteration may either be specially alleged (and this mode is advisable, at least in one set of counts, even where the word "alter" is not in the statute. R. v. Elsworth, 2 East, P. C. 986, 988); or the alteration may be given in evidence under, and will support a count charging the forgery of the entire instrument. (See post, p. 712, et seq.)

It is, as already stated (ante, p. 705), unnecessary to set out in detail or facsimile the instrument alleged to have been forged.

Under the law formerly in force, where an indictment in setting out the forged instrument also set out the attestation at the foot of it as part of the instrument, but it appeared in evidence that when the defendant subscribed the instrument, the attestation was not written upon it, it was held, nevertheless, to be no variance. R. v. Dunn, 2 East, P. C. 976. The indictment must state what the instrument is, in respect of which the forgery was committed. R. v. Wilcox, R. & R. 50. And the instrument must be correctly described; for instance, if a bill of exchange be described as a promissory note, the defendant will be acquitted unless the variance be amended. See R. v. Hunter, R. & R. 511: R. v. Birkett, Id. 251. Where the forged instrument is actually within the meaning of the statute on which you intend framing your indictment, but does not sufficiently appear to be so on the face of it, you must, if the instrument be set out, not only set out a literal copy of it in the indictment, but must also add such averments of extrinsic facts as may be necessary to make it appear upon the face of the record that the forged instrument is one of those intended by and described in the statute. Thus, for instance, where by the usage of a public office, the bare signature of a party upon a navy bill operated as a receipt, an indictment for forging such a receipt, setting forth the navy bill and indorsement, and charging the defendant with having forged "a certain receipt for money, to wit, the sum of twenty-five pounds, mentioned and contained in the said paper called a navy bill, which forged receipt was as follows: that is to say,—'William Thornton, William Hunter,'" was held bad, because it did not show, by proper averments, that these signatures imported a receipt. R. v. Hunter, 2 Leach, 624; 2 East, P. C. 928. So, where an indictment charged the defendant with forging a receipt in the handwriting of Henry Hargreaves, as thus:—"Received, H. H.," it was held that the indictment was bad, because there was nothing to show what H. H. meant. R. v. Barton, 1 Mood. C. C. 141. See R. v. Inder, 1 Den. 325; 2 C. & K. 635. But where, upon an indictment for forging a receipt, it appeared that the receipt was written at the foot of an account, and the indictment stated the receipt thus:—"8th March, 1773. Received the contents above by me, Stephen Withers," without setting out the account at the foot of which it was written, it was held sufficient. R. v. Testick, 1 East, 181, n. So the words "Settled Sam. Hughes," written at the foot of a bill of parcels, were held of themselves to import a receipt or acquittance, and that no averment was necessary that the word "settled" meant a receipt or acquittance. R. v. Martin, 1 Mood. C. C. 418; 7 C. & P. 549: overruling R. v. Thompson, 2 Leach, 910. And see R. v. Houseman, 8 C. & P. 180: where a forged entry of "paid sadler" was held a receipt: R. v. Vaughan, Id. 276: R. v. Boardman, 2 M. & Rob. 147: R. v. Overton, Dears. 308; 23 L. J. (M. C.) 29. Though it is now unnecessary to set out the instrument, these cases appear to be still applicable if the instrument be set out. See R. v. Rogers, 9 C. & P. 41. And if the instrument be set out, it seems that a misdescription of it in the indictment will be immaterial, at least if any of the terms used to describe it be applicable. See R. v. Williams, 2 Den. 61; 20 L. J. (M. C.) 106.

Where several forged receipts were uttered in one bundle at the same time, it was held that they could be included in one count. R. v. Thomas, 2 East, P. C. 934, Le Blanc, J.; see ante, p. 82.

Intent.]—The intent to defraud is described as an ingredient of the offence in all the statutes upon the subject of forgery, and must consequently be charged in the indictment: but it is sufficient to allege generally an intent to defraud, without alleging the intent to be to defraud any particular person: 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 44 (ante, p. 706).

As to the second count, for knowingly uttering the forged instrument, it is usual and prudent to add it in every case, lest the prosecutor should fail in proof of the actual forgery. But the forgery is of itself an offence, although the forged instrument was never uttered, if the intent to defraud be proved. See R. v. Crocker, 2 Leach, 987; R. & R. 97. It is not necessary to aver to whom the instrument was disposed of. R. v. Holden, R. & R. 154; 2 Taunt. 334; 2 Leach, 1019; 11 R. R. 600.

Some other points relating to the indictment will be found under the following head of "Evidence."

Evidence.

Forge, etc.]—The statutes do not define forgery. Forgery at common law is "the fraudulent making or alteration of a writing to the prejudice of another man's right." 4 Bl. Com. 247: and see R. v. White, 1 Den. 208, and ante, pp. 702, 703. It is forgery to make a deed fraudulently with a false date, when the date is a material part of the deed, although the deed is in fact made and executed by and between the persons by and between whom it purports to be made and executed. R. v. Ritson, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 200; 39 L. J. (M. C.) 10; 11 Cox, 352; and see 1 Hawk, c. 70, s. 2. Proof of the altering of a part of a genuine instrument will support an indictment charging the defendant with having forged the instrument itself, though the statute on which the indictment was framed contain the word "alter" as well as the word "forge." R. v. Teague, R. & R. 33; 2 East, P. C. 979. See R. v. Atkinson, 7 C. & P. 669, where alteration of the due date of a bill was held forgery. It is more usual, however, and perhaps more prudent, at least in one set of counts, to charge it as an alteration merely, and to allege the alteration specially. But there is no doubt that any, the slightest alteration of a genuine instrument in a material part, whereby a new operation is given to it, is a forgery; as, for instance, making a lease of the manor of Dale appear to be a lease of the manor of Sale, by changing the D to S; 1 Hawk, c. 70, s. 2; making a bill of exchange for eight pounds appear to be eighty pounds, by adding a cipher to the 8; R. v. Elsworth, 2 East, P. C. 986, 988; altering a banker's one-pound note by substituting the word ten for the word one; R. v. Post, R. & R. 101; even altering the notes of a country banker, as to the place at which they were made payable in London. R. v. Treble, R. & R. 164; 3 Taunt. 328; 1 Leach, 1040. And expunging an indorsement of part payment on a bill has been held forgery. R. v. Bigg, 3 P. Wms. 419; 2 East, P. C. 855, 882. Counterfeiting the signature of one of several parties to a bond is forgery, though the other signatures are genuine. R. v. Richards, 1 Cox, 62. So is altering a document already forged by the person who makes the alteration. R. v. Kinder, 2 East, P. C. 855.

But where the forgery is of a mere addition to the instrument, and which has not the effect of altering it, but is merely collateral to it; as, for instance, a forged acceptance or indorsement to a genuine bill of exchange; proof of the forgery of the addition will not support an indictment charging the forgery of the entire instrument: the forgery of such addition must be specially alleged, and must be proved as laid. See R. v. Birkett, R. & R. 251. Forging the signature of the drawer of a bill of exchange, however, is the same precisely as forging the entire bill, and may be laid as such. Where an illiterate woman of the name of Dunn represented herself to the prosecutor as the widow of a deceased seaman of the name of Wallace, and obtained from him a loan of money upon her promissory note; the note was written by the prosecutor, and upon his asking her what name he should put to it, she answered "Mary Wallace;" he thereupon subscribed the name "Mary Wallace" to the note; and she affixed her mark in the usual place, between the christian and surname: the judges held this to be a forgery of the note. R. v. Dunn, 2 East, P. C. 962, 976; 1 Leach, 57. And whether the name forged be that of a merely fictitious person, who never existed, or of a person actually existing, is wholly immaterial: it is as much a forgery in the one case as in the other; R. v. Lewis, Fost. 116: R. v. Wilks, 2 East, P. C. 957: R. v. Bolland, Id. 958; 1 Leach, 83; R. v. Lockett, Id. 94: R. v. Parkes, 2 Leach, 775; 2 East, P. C. 963, 965: R. v. Froud, 1 B. & B. 300; R. & R. 389: R. v. Sheppard, 1 Leach, 226: R. v. Francis, R. & R. 209: R. v. Peacock, Id. 278: and see R. v. Webb, 3 B. & B. 228; R. & R. 405: R. v. Watts, R. & R. 436: R. v. Michell, 1 Den. 282, n.; provided the fictitious name be assumed for the purpose of fraud, in the particular instance in question. R. v. Bontien, R. & R. 260. So, also, the signing of a bill of exchange in the name of a non-existing firm, or in the defendant's own name to represent a fictitious firm with intent to defraud, is forgery. R. v. Rogers, 8 C. & P. 629. But the mere assuming and signing a fictitious name, without any intention to defraud by the use of such fictitious name, although the transaction may be fraudulent in other respects, does not amount to forgery. R. v. Martin, 5 Q. B. D. 34; 49 L. J. (M. C.) 11; 14 Cox, 375; and cf. R. v. Whyte, 5 Cox, 290. So, where the prisoner, Robert M., in payment for goods bought by him from the prosecutor, drew a cheque in the name of William M. in the presence of the prosecutor upon a bank at which the prisoner had no account, and gave it to the prosecutor as his own cheque drawn in his own name, the prisoner knowing at the time he drew the cheque that it would be dishonoured, and the prosecutor, who well knew the prisoner and his real name, receiving the cheque in the belief that it was drawn in the prisoner's own name, it was held that the prisoner was not guilty of the offence of forgery. Id. It is not forgery fraudulently to induce a person to execute an instrument, on a misrepresentation of its contents; R. v. Collins, 2 M. & Rob. 461; or to procure his signature to a document the contents of which have been altered without his knowledge. R. v. Chadwick, Id. 545. This is, however, now an offence under s. 90 of the Larceny Act, 1861 (ante, p. 594).

Even where a man, upon obtaining discount of a bill, indorsed it in a fictitious name, when he might have obtained the money as readily by indorsing it in his own name, it was held to be a forgery. R. v. Taft, 1 Leach, 172; and see R. v. Taylor, 1 Leach, 214: R. v. Marshall, R. & R. 75: R. v. Whiley, R. & R. 90: R. v. Francis, R. & R. 209: R. v. Parke, 1 Cox, 4. But it is not forgery for a man who has been long known by a fictitious name to draw a bill in that name. See R. v. Aickles, 2 East, P. C. 968; 1 Leach, 438: R. v. Bontien, R. & R. 260. Nor for a man to pass himself off as the indorser of a bill, when in fact he is not so, but the indorsement is genuine, is not, even although it be done for the purposes of fraud, and in concert with the real indorser. R. v. Hevey, 1 Leach, 229; 2 East, P. C. 856. Nor where the party, falsely alleging an authority from J. S. to indorse, indorses "per procuration of J. S.," signing thereto his own name; R. v. White, 1 Den. 208; 2 C. & K. 404; but such a fraud, although not forgery at common law, is now punishable under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 24 (post, p. 731). Where a man drew a bill on Williams & Co., bankers, 3 Birchin-lane, London, and at the time he paid away the bill he was asked if the drawees were Williams, Burgess & Co., the London bankers, and he answered in the affirmative; the bill was presented, not to Williams, Burgess & Co., who lived at No. 20 in the same street, but at a counting-house, No. 3, where the words, "Williams & Co." were on a brass plate on the door, and it was there accepted in the name of "Williams & Co."; proof was given at the trial that the acceptance was not that of Williams, Burgess & Co., and that there were no other London bankers of that name: the prisoner was convicted; but, upon the point being afterwards argued before the judges, ten of them held that it was not a forgery. R. v. Watts, 3 B. & B. 197; R. & R. 486. But if a bill, payable to J. S. or order, get into the hands of another person of the same name, and he indorse it, it will be a forgery. Mead v. Young, 4 T. R. 28; 2 R. R. 314. It is forgery for a person, having authority to fill up a blank acceptance or a cheque for a certain sum, to fill up the bill or cheque for a larger sum (R. v. Minter Hart, 1 Mood. C. C. 486; 7 C. & P. 652: R. v. Bateman, 1 Cox, 186: R. v. Wilson, 1 Den. 284; 2 C. & K. 527; 17 L. J. (M. C.) 82: see R. v. Richardson, 8 Cox, 448: 2 F. & F. 343); or to fill in the sum on a cheque signed in blank. Flower v. Shaw, 2 C. & K. 703. And if a party put the name of another to a bill of exchange, without his authority, it is equally a forgery, although the party expected to be able to meet it when due. R. v. Forbes, 7 C. & P.

224. See R. v. Parish, 8 C. & P. 94: R. v. Beard, Id. 143: R. v. Hill, Id. 274; 2 Mood. C. C. 30: R. v. Cooke, 8 C. & P. 582.

If several combine to forge an instrument, and each execute by himself a distinct part of the forgery, and they are not together when the instrument is completed, they are nevertheless all guilty as principals. R. v. Bingley, R. & R. 446. As, if B. make the paper, C. engrave the plate, and D. fill up the instrument, each without knowing that the others are employed for that purpose, they are all principals. R. v. Dade, 1 Mood. C. C. 307: R. v. Robert Kirkwood, Id. 304. So, if several concur in employing an innocent agent to make a forged instrument, of which they know the nature, they are all guilty of the forgery. R. v. Mazeau, 9 C. & P. 676. "I think if a man has an instrument in his possession without an indorsement or other writing the subject of the alleged forgery, and half an hour afterwards is found with the instrument indorsed, there is some evidence of forgery to go to the jury. . . . Although the prisoner might not be able to write himself, yet if he got any one to write the name he is as much guilty of forgery as if wrote it himself." R. v. James, 4 Cox, 90, per Erle, J.

Handwriting.]—That the signature or other part of the instrument alleged to be forged is not of the handwriting of the party may be proved by any person acquainted with his handwriting, either from having seen him write, or from being in the habit of corresponding with him. (Ante, p. 383.) It is sufficient, primâ facie, to disprove his handwriting, and he need not be called to disprove an authority to others to use his name; circumstances showing guilty knowledge are enough. R. v. Hurley, 2 M. & Rob. 473. The forgery may be proved by the person whose name is forged: or by other witnesses who are acquainted with his handwriting, without calling him as a witness. His testimony as to the fact of forgery is not deemed the best evidence, and that of other persons merely secondary. R. v. Hughes, 2 East, P. C. 1002: R. v. Macguire, Id.; Bank Prosecutions, R. & R. 378. And by Denmans Act (28 & 29 Vict. c. 18), s. 8, "comparison of a disputed writing with any writing proved to the satisfaction of the judge to be genuine, shall be permitted to be made by witnesses; and such writings, and the evidence of witnesses respecting the same, may be submitted to the court and jury as evidence of the genuineness or otherwise of the writing in dispute." See R. v. Harvey, 11 Cox, 546, and ante, p. 232).

Evidence of experts in handwriting.]—"There is no decision which requires that the evidence of a man who is skilled in comparing handwriting, and who has formed a reliable opinion from past experience, should be excluded because his experience has not been gained in the way of his business." R. v. Silverlock [1894] 2 Q. B. at p. 771, per Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., and the admissibility of evidence of professional experts in handwriting which formerly seems to have been doubtful (Goodtitle v. Braham, 4 T. R. 497: Carey v. Pitt, Peake, Add. Cas. 130; 4 R. R. 895: R. v. Cator, 4 Esp. 117; Gurney v. Langlands, 5 B. & Ald. 330: and see ante, p. 382), has been recognized of recent years, the weight of such evidence being for the jury. On an indictment for uttering a forged will, which, it was alleged, had been written over pencil-marks that had been rubbed out, it was held that the evidence of engravers, who had examined the paper with a mirror, and traced the pencil-marks, was admissible for the prosecution. R. v. Williams, 8 C. & P. 434.

Identity of person whose writing is forged.]—Evidence must also be given of the identity of the party whose handwriting is alleged to be forged; that is, it must be proved expressly or from circumstances, that the alleged forgery was intended to represent the handwriting of the person whose handwriting it is proved not to be; or that it was attempted to be uttered as the handwriting of a person who never existed. (Ante, p. 713.) See R. v. Sponsonby, 1 Leach, 332; 2 East, P. C. 996, 997: R. v. Downes, Id. 997, 999. Where the defendant uttered a forged note, and said that it was drawn by W. H. of the Bull's Head, it was held to be sufficient to prove that it was not of the handwriting of that W. H., although it appeared that there was another W. H. living in the neighbourhood. R. v. Hampton, 1 Mood. C. C. 255. Where the prisoner obtained money from B. for a cheque on Jones, Loyd & Co., purporting to be drawn by G. Andrews in favour of —— Newman, Esq., or bearer, telling him that it was for Mr. Newman, of Soho Square, in whose service he was for three months, and that Mr. Newman had put his name on the back; and it appeared upon an indictment for forging and uttering the cheque, that no person of the name of G. Andrews kept an account with Jones, Loyd & Co., that Mr. Newman of Soho Square did not write his name on the back of the cheque, and that the prisoner was never in that gentleman's service: Parke, J. (after consulting Gaselee, J.), held this to be sufficient primâ facie evidence that G. Andrews was a fictitious person, and told the jury that if G. Andrews really drew the cheque, the prisoner might produce him, or give some evidence upon the subject: the prisoner was convicted. R. v. Backler, 5 C. & P. 118. Upon an indictment for forging and uttering a bill of exchange, purporting to be drawn by T. W. of Nottingham, and to be accepted by T. K., Market Place, Birmingham, which was passed to the prosecutor by the prisoner, who represented his name to be King, of King Square, which he said was chiefly his property: the prosecutor proved that he made inquiry for T. W. of Nottingham, and could not find him: that he had been twice to Birmingham after T. K., but could find no such person, and that he had made inquiries at King Square for the prisoner, but could hear of no such person; but he admitted that he was a stranger at these places, and no person acquainted with them was called: Parke, J., after consulting the judges present, held this sufficient evidence to go to the jury of the bill being a fictitious one, although he told them that it was not very satisfactory, and not the usual evidence upon such occasions. R. v. King, 5 C. & P. 123. In R. v. Ashby, 2 F. & F. 560, on an indictment for forging a cheque dated A. and purporting to be drawn by B. C., evidence that no person named B. C. lived at A. who would be likely to have a banker's account was held evidence to prove that B. C. was a fictitious person. Where the prisoner was indicted for forging and uttering a cheque on Greenwood & Co., army agents and bankers, purporting to be drawn by J. Weston, and a clerk in the army department was called to prove that J. Weston kept no account with his employers; he also admitted that he did not know the names of all the customers, but added that he knew of no customer named J. Weston, and that, upon inquiry of the other clerks, he found that there was no such person: Parke, J., with the concurrence of Patteson, J., and Gurney, B., held this to be primâ facie evidence sufficient to call upon the prisoner to show who J. Weston really was. R. v. Brannan, 6 C. & P. 326. Instruments made or purporting to be made payable abroad may be the subjects of forgery within the Forgery Act, 1861. See 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 40 (ante, p. 707, and note).

Description of the forged instrument.]—The instrument need not be set out in facsimile in the indictment. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 42 (ante, p. 705). If it is it should, when given in evidence, correspond exactly with that set out in the indictment, and until 1851 (ante, p. 52) the slightest variance was fatal unless it were merely literal, i.e., where the omission or addition of a letter does not alter or change a word, so as to make it another word (2 Salk. 661; 1 Cowp. 229); as, for instance, "receivd" for "received" (R. v. Hart, 1 Leach, 145; 2 East, P. C. 977); "undertood" for "understood" (R. v. Beach, 1 Cowp. 229); "Messes" for "Messrs." (R. v. Oldfield, 2 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 650), or the like (ante, p. 302).

Sewing to the parchment on which the indictment is written, impressions of forged notes taken from engraved plates, is not a legal mode of setting out the notes in the indictment. R. v. Harris, 7 C. & P. 416, 430: R. v. Moses, Id. 416, 423, 430: R. v. Balls, Id. 416, 426, 430: R. v. Warshaner, 1 Mood. C. C. 466. If the instrument forged be in a foreign language, it must be set out (if at all) in that language, and a complete and accurate translation must also be set out. See R. v. Szudurskie, 1 Mood. C. C. 429: R. v. Warshaner, Id. 466: R. v. Harris, ubi supra: R. v. Goldstein, R. & R. 473; 3 B. & B. 201; 10 Price, 88. But counts under 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 123, s. 3 (rep.), stating the plates to have engraved on them, in the Polish language, a promissory note for the payment of money, to wit, for the payment of five florins, purporting to be a promissory note for the payment of money of a certain foreign prince, without stating the value, were held good after verdict, by virtue of 7 G. 4, c. 64, s. 21 (ante, p. 51). R. v. Warshaner, R. v. Harris, ubi supra.

The instrument must appear upon the face of it to have been made to resemble a true instrument of the denomination mentioned in the indictment, and in the statute upon which it is framed: not necessarily an exact resemblance, but such as to be capable of deceiving persons using ordinary observation, according to their means of knowledge (see R. v. Collicott, R. & R. 212, 229; 2 Leach, 1048; 4 Taunt. 300: R. v. Jones, 1 Leach, 204: R. v. Mahoney, 6 Cox, 487), although not, perhaps, those scientifically acquainted with such instruments. See R. v. Hoost, 2 East, P. C. 950. Even where upon an indictment for forging a bank-note, there appeared to be no water-mark in the forged note, and the word "pounds" was omitted in the body of it, the defendant being convicted, the judges held the conviction to be right. R. v. Elliott, 1 Leach, 175; 2 East, P. C. 951. But if, on the other hand, the instrument do not appear to be such as probably might be imposed upon persons to whom it was likely to be uttered as a true instrument of the denomination mentioned in the indictment, the defendant must be acquitted. Where the defendant was indicted for forging a will of lands, and the will produced was attested before the passing of the Wills Act, 1837 (7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36) by two witnesses only, the judges held that the defendant could not be convicted, although it did not appear, either in evidence or upon the face of the will, whether the lands were freehold or not; for they must be presumed to be freehold, unless the contrary appeared. R. v. Wall, 2 East, P. C. 953. So a man may be indicted for forging an instrument, which, if genuine, could not be made available, by reason of some circumstance not appearing upon the face of the instrument, but to be made out by extrinsic evidence. See R. v. M'Intosh, 2 Leach, 883; 2 East P. C. 942. Thus, a man may be indicted for forging a deed, though not made in pursuance of the provisions of particular statutes requiring it to be in a particular form (R. v. Lyon, R. & R. 255: R. v. Froud, Id. 389; 1 B. & B. 300); or for forging a cheque, though it be post-dated. R. v. Taylor, 1 C. & K. 213.

The forged document must be produced at the trial if possible (R. v. Hall, 12 Cox, 159); but secondary evidence can be given if it is in the prisoner's possession and is not produced on a proper notice to produce. R. v. Hunter, 4 C. & P. 128: R. v. Haworth, Id. 254: R. v. Fitzsimons, 18 W. R. 763; Ir. Rep. 4 C. L. 1. See further, ante, pp. 315, 316, and p. 401, tit. 'Privilege.' Possession of the document in cases within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 46 (ante, p. 706), may be obtained by search warrant. As to proof of handwriting, see ante, pp. 382, 715.

With intent to defraud.]—It is sufficient to prove generally an intent to defraud without proving intent to defraud a particular person. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 44 (ante, p. 706). At common law it was necessary to allege and prove a particular intent, unless the document forged was of a public nature. R. v. Hodgson, Dears. & B. 3; 25 L. J. (M. C.) 78; 7 Cox, 122. It is not necessary to prove that any person was actually defrauded by the forgery (R. v. Crooke, 2 Str. 901: R. v. Goate, 1 Ld. Raym. 737), if, from circumstances, the jury can infer that it was the defendant's intention to defraud; for where the intent to defraud exists in the mind of the defendant, it is sufficient, though, from circumstances of which he is not apprised, he could not, in fact, defraud the prosecutor (R. v. Holden, R. & R. 154; 11 R. R. 600: R. v. Hoatson, 2 C. & K. 777); or though the party to whom the forged instrument is uttered believes that the defendant did not intend to defraud him (R. v. Sheppard, R. & R. 169; see R. v. Harvey, 2 St. Tr. N. S. 1; 2 B. & C. 261; 26 R. R. 237); nay, even, as it seems, though in fact no person could have been defrauded by the forged instrument. See R. v. Nash, 2 Den. 493, 503; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 147, 149, Maule, J.; but cf. R. v. Marcus, 2 C. & K. 356, where Cresswell, J., held that there must be a possibility of some person being defrauded. Where a forged bill of exchange, payable to the order of the defendant, was given as a pledge only, but to obtain credit, it was held to be a fraudulent intent within the meaning of the statute. R. v. Birkett, R. & R. 86. The jury ought to infer an intent to defraud the person who would have to pay the instrument if it were genuine, although from the manner of executing the forgery, or from that person's ordinary caution, it would not be likely to impose on him, and although the object was general, to defraud whoever might take the instrument, and the intention of defrauding in particular the person who would have to pay the instrument, if genuine, did not enter into the prisoner's contemplation. R. v. Mazagora, R. & R. 291; see R. v. Trenfield, 1 F. & F. 43. A forged cheque drawn on the Worcester Old Bank was presented by the prisoner to Rufford's Bank at Stourbridge, and refused; and upon an indictment for forging and uttering the cheque with the intent to defraud the Messrs. Rufford, it was objected, that, as it was not drawn upon them, it could not defraud them: but Bosanquet, J., held, that as it was presented at their bank for payment, it was evidence of an intent to defraud them. R. v. Crowther, 5 C. & P. 316.

The fact that the prisoner intended to provide for the payment of a bill which he uttered knowing it to be forged does not negative the intent to defraud. R. v. Hill, 2 Mood. C. C. 30; 8 C. & P. 274: R. v. Cooke, Id. 582; nor does the fact that he had a legal or bonâ fide claim to the extent of the money obtained by the forged instrument. R. v. Wilson, 1 Den. 284; 2 C. & K. 527. The fact that the prisoner has given guarantees to his bankers, to whom he paid a forged note, to a larger amount than the note, does not so completely negative an intent to defraud them as to withdraw the case from the consideration of the jury. R. v. James, 7 C. & P. 553. See R. v. Cooke, 8 C. & P. 582: R. v. Geach, 9 C. & P. 499.

Evidence that the prisoner uttered other forged documents similar to that charged in the indictment may be admissible to prove guilty knowledge. R. v. Whiley, R. & R. 90; 2 Leach, 983. See ante, pp. 308, 311.

On the trial of an indictment for forgery with intent to defraud A. B., "one of the public officers" of a banking company established under the Country Bankers Act, 1826 (7 G. 4, c. 46), A. B. stated that he was a public officer: and an examined copy of the return forwarded to the stamp-office under that Act, in which also he was stated to be so, was put in: but this copy had not the affidavit at the close of the return, which is directed by schedule (A.) of that statute, and the date was left blank. The judges held that A. B. was sufficiently proved to be the public officer. R. v. Carter, 1 Den. 65; 1 C. & K. 741. See Edwards v. Buchanan, 3 B. & Ad. 788.

Second Count.

Offer, utter, dispose of, and put off, etc.]—To offer and to utter mean nothing more than that the party tendered, or attempted to pass or make use of the forged instrument, with the intent charged in the indictment: these words do not import that the person to whom the forged instrument was tendered, actually accepted it with intention to retain it, or was defrauded by it. Accordingly we find that the Legislature, wherever they intended that the offence should not be complete without an acceptance on the one part and a relinquishment on the other, have described the offence in words of a different and appropriate meaning, such as "pay and put off" or the like. See 1 East, P. C. 179. But in the Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 98), the offence of uttering, etc., is described by the words "offer, utter, dispose of, or put off," which include attempts to make use of a forged instrument, as well as cases where the defendant has actually succeeded in making use of it. As to the distinction between uttering forged paper and false pretences, see R. v. Inder, 1 Den. 325; 2 C. & K. 635, and ante, p. 605. Where, on an indictment upon 13 G. 3, c. 79 (rep.), which contained the words "utter or publish," it appeared that the defendant merely showed a forged instrument to a person, though with intent to raise a false idea of his substance, and afterwards left the instrument under cover, in the custody of that person, as he pretended, for safe custody, it was held not to be an uttering or publishing within these words. R. v. Shukard, R. & R. 200. But the showing of a forged receipt to a person with whom the defendant is claiming credit for it, was held to be an offering or uttering within the statute then in force (1 W. 4, c. 66, s. 10), though the defendant refused to part with the possession of it. R. v. Radford, 1 Den. 59; 1 C. & K. 707. Where a pawnbroker, upon the hearing of an application against him under 39 & 40, G. 3, c. 99, s. 14 (rep.), to compel him to deliver up goods which had been pledged with him (the money advanced, with interest, having been repaid), produced and delivered to the magistrates, through the hand of his attorney, a forged duplicate as the genuine one, which he had given when the goods were pledged, and which he had received back when the money was repaid: this was held to amount to an uttering by the pawnbroker of an accountable receipt within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 23 (post, p. 731). R. v. Fitchie, Dears. & B. 175; 26 L. J. (M. C.) 90; 7 Cox, 257. And where the defendant placed a forged receipt for poor-rates in the hands of the prosecutor, for the purpose of inspection only, in order, by representing himself as a person who had paid his poor-rates, fraudulently to induce the prosecutor to advance money to a third person, for whom the defendant proposed to become a surety for its repayment: this was held to be an offering, etc., within the statute. R. v. Ion, 2 Den. 475; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 166. And the rule there laid down by the court is, that a using of the forged instrument in some way, in order to get money or credit upon it, or by means of it, is sufficient to constitute the offence described in the statute. On an indictment for uttering forged bonds in this country, it was held that such uttering here was sufficiently proved by evidence of the bonds having been posted in England to a firm at Brussels for negotiation. R. v. Finkelstein, 16 Cox, 107, Common Serjeant, after consulting Stephen, J. The uttering of the bill of A., an existing person, as that of a fictitious person of the same name, has been held felonious. R. v. Nisbett, 6 Cox, 320; and see ante, p. 12).

Questions have arisen upon the subject of uttering, as to the quality of the offences of different parties, viz., whether they were indictable as principals or accessories. It has been decided that the giving of a forged note to an innocent agent, or to an accomplice, that he may utter it, is a disposing of and putting away of the note. R. v. Palmer, 1 B. & P. (N. R.) 96; R. & R. 72; 2 Leach, 978: R. v. Giles, 1 Mood. C. C, 166; and see Brooks v. Warwick, 2 Stark. (N. P.) 389; 20 R. R. 697. But where several, by concert, are privy to the uttering of a forged note, which is uttered by one only in the absence of the others (see ante, p. 13), he only who utters it is a principal, but the others are accessories before the fact. R. v. Soares, R. & R. 25: R. v. Badcock, Id. 249: R. v. Stewart, Id. 363: R. v. Davis, Id. 113. See R. v. Morris, Id. 270; 2 Leach, 1096: R. v. Harris, 7 C. & P. 416.

To maintain this count, it will be sufficient to prove that the defendant sold or disposed of the forged instrument without proving that he uttered it as genuine. The words of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 12 (post, p. 723), are "offer, utter, dispose of, or put off," and the words of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 13 (post, p. 749), applicable to the buyer, are "purchase or receive." Under some earlier Acts it was necessary to prove the instrument to have been uttered "as true."

A conditional uttering is as much a crime as any other. Where the defendant gave a forged acceptance, knowing it to be so, to the manager of a bank where he kept an account, saying that he hoped this bill would satisfy the bank as a security for the money he owed them, and the manager replied that that would depend on the result of inquiries as to the acceptors: this was held a sufficient guilty uttering. R. v. Cooke, 8 C. & P. 782.

A certain other false, etc.]—This must be proved as on the first count. (See ante, p. 712.)

With intent to defraud.]—This is also proved as on the count for forgery. If the jury are satisfied that the prisoner uttered the instrument as true, meaning it to be taken as such, and that he knew it to be forged, they are bound to infer the intent to defraud. (And see ante, p. 718.)

Well knowing the same to be forged.]—This is not capable of direct proof. It is nearly in all cases, therefore, proved by evidence of facts from which the jury may presume it (vide ante, pp. 303, 311, 340). Upon an indictment for disposing of and putting away a forged bank-note, knowing it to be forged, proof that the defendant has passed other forged notes, if proved by legitimate evidence, R. v. Millard, R. & R. 245 (see R. v. Moore, 1 F. & F. 73), raises a probable presumption that he knew the note, for the passing of which he is now indicted, to be forged; R. v. Wylie, 1 B. & P. (N. R.) 92; S. C. sub-nom. R. v. Whiley; 2 Leach, 983; R. & R. 90: R. v. Tattersal, Id. 98, n. (ante, p. 311): and see R. v. Ball, 1 Camp. 324;

R. & R. 132; 10 R. R. 695: R. v. Hough, R. & R. 120: R. v. Green, 3 C. & K. 209: R. v. Salt, 3 F. & F. 834: R. v. Francis, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 128; 12 Cox, 612: R. v. Colclough, 15 Cox, 92; 10 L. R. (Ir.) 241 (C. C. R. Ir.); and if, in addition to this, it be proved that the defendant, when he passed these notes, gave a false name or address, it amounts to a violent presumption of his guilty knowledge. (See ante, p. 340.) It has been ruled, however, that if a subsequent uttering be made the subject of a distinct indictment, it cannot be given in evidence to show a guilty knowledge in a former uttering. R. v. Smith, 2 C. & P. 633: and R. v. Smith, 4 C. & P. 411, 413 (a). But this distinction seems to be now exploded; and in R. v. Lewis, Carnarvon Sum. Ass., 1840, Lord Denman, C.J., said, that "he could not conceive how the relevancy of the fact to this charge could be affected by its being the subject of another charge;" and offered to admit the evidence, although the above cases were cited. And in another case, Alderson, B., admitted such evidence. R. v. Aston, 2 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 678. See also R. v. Forster, Dears. 456; 24 L. J. (M. C.) 134. In Griffiths v. Payne, 11 A. & E. 131, it is said by Tindal, C.J., that such evidence would not be admissible on an indictment for forgery. On an indictment under 11 G. 4 & 1 W. 4, c. 66, s. 19 (repealed, but re-enacted in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 19, post, p. 765), for engraving or uttering notes of a foreign prince, evidence of a recent engraving or uttering of notes of another foreign prince was held admissible in proof of a guilty knowledge. R. v. Balls, 1 Mood. C. C. 470; 7 C. & P. 429. See also ante, pp. 308, 312, 340.

The defendant's statements as to other instruments of the same kind, supposed to have been the subject of a guilty uttering by him, seem not to be admissible in evidence. R. v. Cooke, 8 C. & P. 582; but see the remarks of Crompton, J., on this case in R. v. Brown, 2 F. & F. 559.

COUNTERFEITING SEALS OF STATE.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 98 (Forgery Act, 1861), s. 1.]—Whosoever shall forge or counterfeit, or shall utter, knowing the same to be forged or counterfeited, the great seal of the United Kingdom, her Majesty's privy seal, any privy signet of her Majesty, her Majesty's royal sign manual, any of her Majesty's seals appointed by the twenty-fourth article of the union between England and Scotland to be kept, used, and continued in Scotland, the great seal of Ireland, or the privy seal of Ireland, or shall forge or counterfeit the stamp or impression of any of the seals aforesaid, or shall utter any document or instrument whatsoever, having thereon or affixed thereto the stamp or impression of any such forged or counterfeited seal, knowing the same to be the stamp or impression of such forged or counterfeited seal, or any forged or counterfeited stamp or impression made or apparently intended to resemble the stamp or impression of any of the seals aforesaid, knowing the same to be forged or counterfeited, or shall forge or alter, or utter, knowing the same to be forged or altered, any document or instrument having any of the said stamps or impression thereon or affixed thereto, shall be guilty of felony, and, being convicted thereof, shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for life. . . . [The part in italics was new law in 1861. The rest of the section is framed on 11 G. 4 & 1 W. 4, c. 66, s. 1, and 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 123, and 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 84, ss. 2, 3, reducing the offence from treason to felony.]

Indictment.

An indictment for this offence may readily be framed from the precedent for forgery by statute (ante, p. 710), adding the words "and counterfeit" after "forge."

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 1; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 51 (ante, p. 709).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

To support the first count, produce the instrument to which the forged seal is appended, and prove by witnesses conversant with the genuine seal that the seal produced is counterfeited; then prove that the prisoner counterfeited the seal, either by direct evidence or by circumstances from which the jury may infer it.

To support the second count, prove the seal to be forged as above, and the uttering as directed, ante, p. 719.

This statute (which for the first time reduced this offence from treason to felony) applies to a forging of the impression of the seal, as well as to a counterfeiting of the seal itself. Where the prisoner forged the draft of a patent, and counterfeited the privy signet to it, and so obtained the great seal to the patent, and being indicted for counterfeiting the privy signet, it appeared that he had purposely introduced some things and words into the counterfeit signet which were not in the original, and had omitted others; the court held it to be treason. Robinson's case, 2 Rolle, Rep. 50; 1 Hale, 184. The mere misuser of the great seal was not treason; 1 Hale, 183; 3 Co. Inst. 15; as, for instance, the taking of the great seal from an original patent and appending it to a pretended patent. Bro. Abr. Treason, pl. 3; 1 Hale, 182: Leak's case, 12 Co. Rep. 15. Nor was the alteration of the instrument, to which the real seal is appended, treason within the meaning of the statutes. 3 Co. Inst. 15; 1 Hale, 183.

FORGING AND UTTERING TREASURY BILLS, ETC.

Statutes.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 98 (Forgery Act, 1861), s. 8.]—Whosoever shall forge or alter, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off, knowing the same to be forged or altered, any exchequer bill, or exchequer bond or exchequer debenture, or any indorsement on or assignment of any exchequer bill or exchequer bond or exchequer debenture, or any receipt or certificate for interest accruing thereon, with intent to defraud, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for life. . . . [This section was framed on 1 W. 4, c. 66, s. 3, and 16 & 17 Vict. c. 28, s. 41. For ss. 9, 10, 11, see post, pp. 664, 670.]

29 & 30 Vict. c. 25 (Exchequer Bills and Bonds Act, 1866), s. 15.]—If any person or persons shall forge or counterfeit any such exchequer bill, or coupon for interest (as in that Act mentioned), or any indorsement or writing thereupon or therein, or tender in payment any such forged or counterfeited bill, or any exchequer bill with such counterfeit indorsement or writing thereon, or shall demand to have such counterfeit bill, or any exchequer bill with such counterfeit indorsement or writing thereupon or therein, exchanged for ready money or for another exchequer bill, by any person or persons, body or bodies politic or corporate, who shall be obliged or required to exchange the same, or by any other person or persons whatsoever, knowing the bill so tendered in payment, or demanded to be exchanged, or the indorsement or writing thereupon or therein, to be forged or counterfeited, and with intent to defraud [her] Majesty, . . . or the persons to be appointed to pay off the same, or any of them, or to pay any interest thereupon, or the person or persons, body or bodies politic or corporate, who shall contract or circulate or exchange the same, or any of them, or any other person or persons, body or bodies politic or corporate, then every such person or persons so offending, being thereof lawfully convicted, shall be adjudged a felon, and shall suffer accordingly. [By 29 & 30 Vict. c. 25, s. 25, this section is applied and extended to all exchequer bills made out and issued under former Acts and outstanding at the commencement of the Act.]

40 & 41 Vict. c. 2 (Treasury Bills Act, 1877), s. 10.]—Sects. 8 (supra), 9, 10 and 11 (post, pp. 664, 670) of the Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 98) (which sections relate to the forgery of, and other frauds relating to exchequer bills), shall apply to treasury bills, and shall have effect as if "exchequer bill" in those sections included "treasury bill."

46 & 47 Vict. c. 27 (Metropolitan Board of Works (Money Act), 1885), s. 21.]—Sects. 8, 9, 10 and 11 of the Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 98), which sections relate to the forgery of, and other frauds relating to exchequer bills, shall apply to the metropolitan bills, and shall have effect as if "exchequer bill" in these sections included "metropolitan bill."

[The London County Council has taken the place of the Metropolitan Board of Works. The above clause is annually extended and applied by the London County Money Act to London County bills. See Hunt, London Govt. vol. ii., p. 1013.]

FORGING AND UTTERING BANK-NOTES.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 98 (Forgery Act, 1861), s. 12.]—Whosoever shall forge or alter, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off, knowing the same to be forged or altered, any note or bill of exchange of the Bank of England or of the Bank of Ireland, or of any other body corporate, company or person carrying on the business of bankers, commonly called a bank-note, a bank bill of exchange, or a bank post-bill, or any indorsement on or assignment of any bank-note, bank bill of exchange, or bank post-bill, with intent to defraud, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for life. . . . [This section was taken from 1 W. 4, c. 66, s. 3, and 16 & 17 Vict. c, 23, s. 41, with the addition of the words in italics, which get rid of the decision in R. v. Wilcock, 2 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.), 705 (d), 905.]

Indictment for Forging and Uttering a Bank-note.

Commencement as ante, p. 710]—feloniously did forge ("forge or alter") a certain note of the Bank of England, commonly called a bank-note, for the payment of 10*l.* ("any note or bill of exchange of the Bank of England, or of the Bank of Ireland, or of any other body corporate, company or person carrying on the business of bankers, commonly called a bank-note, a bank bill of exchange, or a bank post-bill, or any indorsement on or assignment of any bank-note, bank bill of exchange or bank post-bill"), with intent thereby then to defraud; against the form [as ante, p. 465. (2nd Count.) And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present, that the said J. S. afterwards, to wit, on the day and year aforesaid, feloniously did offer, utter, dispose of and put off a certain other forged note of the Bank of England, commonly called a bank-note, for the payment of 10*l.*, with intent thereby then to defraud (he the said J. S. at the time he so offered, uttered, disposed of and put off the said last-mentioned forged note as aforesaid, then and there well knowing the same to be forged); against the form [as ante, p. 465]. As to the insertion of the word "other," see ante, p. 711. It is unnecessary to set out the forged instrument: it is sufficient to describe it by any name or designation by which it is usually known, or by its purport, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 42 (ante, p. 705). In the counts for offering and disposing of the note, it is not necessary to allege to whom it was so offered, etc. R. v. Holden, 2 Taunt. 334; R. & R. 154; 11 R. R. 600. The "intent to defraud" may be laid generally, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 44 (ante, p. 706).

Felony.]—24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 12. See the last precedent (ante, p. 722). This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove the forgery as directed (ante, p. 712, et seq.). Under the counts for uttering (ante, p. 719), you may give in evidence that the defendant offered or tendered the note in payment, or that he actually passed it, or otherwise disposed of it to another person. Where it appeared that the defendant sold a forged note to an agent employed by the bank to procure it from him, the judges held this to be within the Act, although it was objected that the prisoner had been solicited to commit the act proved against him, by the bank themselves, by means of their agents. R. v. Holden, 2 Taunt. 334; R. & R. 154; 11 R. R. 600. So, where A. gave B. a forged note to pass for him, and upon B.'s tendering it in payment of some goods, it was stopped: the majority of the judges held that A., by giving the note to B., was guilty of disposing of and putting away the note, within the meaning of the Act. R. v. Palmer, 1 B. & P. (N. R.) 96; 2 Leach, 978; R. & R. 72: R. v. Giles, 1 Mood. C. C. 166 (ante, p. 12). As to evidence that the prisoner knew the note to be forged at the time he disposed of it, and as to the other evidence necessary to support these counts, see ante, p. 718.

By 16 & 17 Vict. c. 2, s. 1, the Bank of England may cause the name of their cashier or other officer appointed to sign, to be impressed by machinery upon their bank-notes, bank post-bills, and bank bills of exchange, and all bank-notes, etc., on which the name of the authorized officer is so impressed, shall be as good and valid to all intents and purposes as if such notes had been subscribed in the proper handwriting of such officer, and shall be deemed and taken to be bank-notes, and may be described as such in all indictments, and other criminal and civil proceedings whatsoever.

FORGING AND UTTERING WILLS.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 98 (Forgery Act, 1861), s. 21.]—Whosoever, with intent to defraud, shall forge or alter, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off, knowing the same to be forged or altered, any will, testament, codicil, or testamentary instrument, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for life. . . . [This section re-enacts 1 W. 4, c. 66, s. 3.]

Indictment.

Commencement as ante, p. 710]—feloniously did forge a certain will and testament ("any will, testament, codicil, or testamentary instrument") purporting to be the last will and testament of one A. B., with intent thereby then to defraud; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. (2nd Count.) That he "did offer, utter, dispose of, and put off," as in the precedent (ante, p. 710). The judges were equally divided upon the question, whether, in the absence of the existence of some person who could have been defrauded by the forged will, a count for forging it with intent to defraud a person or persons unknown could be supported. R. v. Tylney, 1 Den. 819. But on this case see Greaves' Crim. Law Cons. Acts (2nd ed.), 303, 306. Where, by this or any other Act, any person is liable to punishment for forging, etc., any instrument or writing, designated in such Act by any special name or description, he may be indicted and punished under this Act, if the instrument, however designated, is in law a will, testament, codicil, or testamentary writing. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 39 (ante, p. 707).

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 21; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 51 (ante, p. 709).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Forgery may be committed by the false making of the will of a living person: R. v. Murphy, 2 East, P. C. 949: R. v. Sterling, 1 Leach, 99; 2 East, P. C. 950: R. v. Coogan, 1 Leach, 448; 2 East, P. C. 1001; or of a non-existing person, R. v. Avery, 8 C. & P. 596. And where the defendant was indicted for forging the will of "Peter Perry," and the will produced in evidence commenced "I Peter Perry," but was subscribed "John Perry, his mark;" but it was also stated in evidence that upon this repugnancy being remarked to the prisoner, he said that he had by mistake written "John" instead of "Peter," and that the mark was that of Peter Perry; the defendant was convicted. R. v. Fitzgerald, 1 Leach, 20. See R. v. Wall, 2 East, P. C. 953 (ante, p. 717). Proof that the will has been proved and that the probate is unrevoked is not conclusive evidence to bar an indictment for forging a will. R. v. Buttery, R. & R. 342.

Prove the forgery and uttering, as directed (ante, pp. 712, 719), and the intent to defraud (ante, pp. 303, 311, 340). See R. v. Tylney (ubi supra).

On an indictment for uttering a forged will, which, together with writings in support of it, it was suggested had been written over pencil marks that had been rubbed out, it was held that the evidence of an engraver, who had examined the paper with a mirror, and traced the pencil marks, was admissible on the part of the prosecution. R. v. T. Williams, 8 C. & P. 434.

As to the privilege of solicitors with respect to the production of wills alleged to be forged, see ante, p. 401.

FORGING AND UTTERING DEEDS, BONDS, ETC.

Statute.

Sect. 26—Forging debentures.]—See post, p. 749.

Indictment for Forging a Bond.

Commencement as ante, p. 710]—a certain bond ("any deed or any bond or writing obligatory, or any assignment at law or in equity of any such bond or writing obligatory, or any name, handwriting, or signature, purporting to be the name, etc., of a witness attesting the execution of any deed, bond, or writing obligatory"), purporting to be (describe the purport of the instrument [as ante, pp. 75, 302]), with intent thereby then to defraud; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. (2nd Count.) And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present, that the said J. S., afterwards, to wit, on the day and year last aforesaid, feloniously did offer, utter, dispose of, and put off a certain other forged bond and writing obligatory, purporting to be (as in first count) with intent thereby then to defraud, he the said J. S. at the time he so offered, uttered, disposed of, and put off the said last-mentioned forged bond and writing obligatory as aforesaid, well knowing the same to be forged; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. It is not necessary, but is not bad, to use the expression "bond and writing obligatory." R. v. Dunnett, 2 Leach, 581; 2 East, P. C. 985. It is not necessary to set out the deed or bond verbatim. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 42 (ante, p. 705).

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment for not more than two years, with or without hard labour. 24 &

25 Vict. c. 98, s. 20; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 51 (ante, p. 709).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove the forging and uttering, as directed ante, pp. 712, 719. Under the second count, you may give in evidence a disposing of the bond as a forgery, or the making use of it, or attempting to make use of it, as a genuine instrument.

The forging of a deed, which is directed to be in a particular form by particular statutes, which had not been complied with, was held within 2 G. 2, c. 25 (rep.). R. v. Lyon, R. & R. 255. So was a power of attorney to transfer government stock, signed, sealed, and delivered. R. v. Fauntleroy, 1 Mood. C. C. 52; 2 Bing. 413; 1 C. & P. 421; and see R. v. Pringle, C. & P. 408; 2 Mood. C. C. 127. The forging of such a power of attorney is now within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 2 (post, p. 741). A letter of orders, a document under the hand and seal of a bishop, testifying that he has admitted the person named therein into holy orders, is not a deed within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 20. R. v. Morton, L. R., 2 C. C. R. 22; 42 L. J. (M. C.) 58; but it is forgery at common law to fabricate such a document. R. v. Etheridge, 19 Cox, 676. The giving of an administration bond to the ordinary in a false name is a forgery. R. v. Barber, 1 C. & K. 434. A man may be guilty of forgery by making a deed in his own name, but containing a false date: R. v. Ritson, L. R., 1 C. C. R. 200; 39 L. J. (M. C.) 10; 11 Cox, 352 (ante, p. 713); or of another person bearing the same name. Re Cooper, 20 Ch. D. 611, 634; 51 L. J. (Ch.) 862, Lindley, L.J.

FORGING AND UTTERING BILLS OF EXCHANGE AND PROMISSORY NOTES.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 98 (Forgery Act, 1861), s. 22.]—Whosoever shall forge or alter, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off, knowing the same to be forged or altered, any bill of exchange, or any acceptance, indorsement, or assignment of any bill of exchange, or any promissory note for the payment of money, or any indorsement or assignment of any such promissory note, with intent to defraud, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for life. . . . [This section re-enacts 1 W. 4, c. 66, s. 3.]

Indictment for Forging a Bill of Exchange.

Commencement as ante, p. 710]—a certain bill of exchange ("any bill of exchange, or any promissory note for the payment of money"), purporting to be (set out purport of instrument), with intent thereby then to defraud; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. (2nd Count.) That the defendant "did offer, utter, dispose of, and put off a certain other," etc., etc., as in the precedent (ante, p. 710). If the acceptance be also forged, add counts for it in this form: (3rd Count.) And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present, that the said J. S. afterwards, to wit, on the year and day last aforesaid, having in his custody and possession a certain other bill of exchange,* feloniously did forge thereon an acceptance ("any acceptance, indorsement, or assignment of any bill of exchange or any indorsement or assignment of any such promissory note") of the said last-mentioned bill of exchange, which said forged acceptance is as follows: that is to say, "Accepted, payable at the bank of Messrs. Coutts & Co., John Giles" [or as the acceptance may be], with intent thereby then to defraud; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

(4th Count.) *Same as the last as to the, and then as follows: on which said last-mentioned bill of exchange was then written a forged acceptance of the said last-mentioned bill of exchange, which said forged acceptance of the said last-mentioned bill of exchange is as follows: that is to say [here set out the acceptance as in the last count], feloniously did offer, utter, dispose of, and put off the said forged acceptance of the said last-mentioned bill of exchange, with intent thereby then to defraud, he the said J. S., at the time he so offered, uttered, disposed of, and put off the said forged acceptance of the said last-mentioned bill of exchange, well knowing the said acceptance to be forged (see R. v. Horwell, 6 C. & P. 148); against the form [as ante, p. 465].

If an indorsement be also forged, add counts for it in this form: (5th Count.) And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present that the said J. S. afterwards, to wit, on the day and year last aforesaid, having in his custody and possession a certain other bill of exchange,† feloniously did forge on the back of the said last-mentioned bill of exchange a certain indorsement of the said bill of exchange, which said forged indorsement is as follows: that is to say, "James Sykes & Co.," with intent thereby then to defraud; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

(6th Count.) Same as the last to the,† and then as follows: on the back of which said last-mentioned bill of exchange was then written a certain forged indorsement of the said last-mentioned bill of exchange, which said last-mentioned forged indorsement is as follows: that is to say, "James Sykes & Co.," feloniously did offer, utter, dispose of, and put off the said last-mentioned forged indorsement of the said last-mentioned bill of exchange, with intent thereby then to defraud, he the said J. S., at the time he so offered, uttered, disposed of, and put off the said last-mentioned forged indorsement of the said last-mentioned bill of exchange, well knowing the said indorsement to be forged; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. As to the insertion of the word "other," see ante, p. 711. It is submitted that the third and following counts may be framed on the following lines: "did forge an acceptance of a certain bill of exchange, to wit, an acceptance of the said bill of exchange, in the next preceding count of this indictment mentioned, which said forged acceptance," etc. From the above precedent an indictment may readily be framed for forging and uttering a promissory note, merely substituting for the words "bill of exchange" the words "promissory note for the payment of money," and omitting, of course, the counts as to the acceptance. An indictment under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 40 (ante, p. 707), for uttering a forged foreign bill or note, need not allege it to be payable out of England. R. v. Lee, 2 M. & Rob. 281.

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 22; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 9, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 51 (ante, p. 709).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38 s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

"A bill of exchange is an unconditional order in writing addressed by one person to another, signed by the person giving it, requiring the person to whom it is addressed to pay on demand, or at a fixed or determinable future time, a sum certain in money to, or to the order of, a specified person or to bearer." 45 & 46 Vict. c. 61, s. 3 (1). "A cheque is a bill of exchange drawn on a banker payable on demand." Id., s. 73. "A promissory note is an unconditional promise in writing made by one person to another, signed by the maker, engaging to pay on demand, or at a fixed or determinable future time, a sum certain in money to, or to the order of, a specified person or to bearer." Id., s. 83 (1): see 1 Leach, 180; 2 East, P. C. 923; 2 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.), 905. It has been held that a document in the ordinary form of a bill of exchange, but requiring the drawee to pay to his own order, and purporting to be indorsed by the drawer, and accepted by the drawer, cannot, in an indictment for forgery or uttering, be treated as a bill of exchange. R. v. Bartlett, 2 M. & Rob. 362. But such a bill is now valid as a promissory note. 45 & 46 Vict. c. 61, s. 5. An instrument payable to the order of A., and directed "At Messrs. P. & Co., Bankers," was held to be properly described as a bill of exchange. R. v. Sidney Smith, 2 Mood. C. C. 295: see Gray v. Milner, 8 Taunt. 739; 21 R. R. 525. To bring the case within this section the bill or note must be complete in form, and not merely inchoate: R. v. Harper, 7 Q. B. D. 78, infra, though it might be a "security for the payment of money" within s. 75 (rep.) of the Larceny Act, 1861. See R. v. Bowerman [1891] 1 Q. B. 112; 60 L. J. (M. C.) 13 (ante, p. 501).

Produce the bill of exchange in evidence, and prove the forgery and uttering, as directed, ante, pp. 712, 719.

A bill payable ten days after sight, purporting to have been drawn upon the commissioners of the navy, by a lieutenant, for the amount of certain pay due to him, was held to be a bill of exchange within 2 G. 2, c. 25 (rep.). R. v. Chisholm, R. & R. 297. So a note promising to pay A. and B., "stewardesses" of a certain benefit society, "or their successors," a certain sum of money on demand, has been held to be a promissory note within the meaning of that Act, although it appeared that the society was not duly enrolled, as directed by Act of Parliament; for, within the meaning of the Act, it was not necessary that the note should be negotiable. R. v. Box, 6 Taunt. 325; R. & R. 300. See R. v. M'Keay, 1 Mood. C. C. 130. An instrument drawn by A. on B., requiring him to pay to the administrators of C. a certain sum at a certain time "without acceptance," is a bill of exchange, and may be so described in the indictment. R. v. Kinnear, 2 M. & Rob. 117. So, though there be no person named as drawee, the defendant may be indicted for uttering a forged acceptance on a bill of exchange: R. v. Hawkes, 2 Mood. C. C. 60; for the act of putting the acceptance is a sort of estoppel to say it was not a bill of exchange. But an indictment for forging a bill of exchange cannot be sustained in the case of such an instrument. R. v. Curry, 2 Mood. C. C. 218: R. v. Horwell, 6 C. & P. 148; 1 Mood. C. C. 405. And it has been held that a person cannot be convicted for forging an acceptance or an indorsement to a bill of exchange which is merely an inchoate instrument, e.g., where, at the time the acceptance was forged, the bill had not been signed by the drawer: R. v. Mopsey, 11 Cox, 143: R. v. Harper, 7 Q. B. D. 78; 50 L. J. (M. C.) 90; or where there is no payee. R. v. Randall, R. & R. 195. Semble, however, that he might under such circumstances be indicted and convicted of the misdemeanor of forgery at common law. R. v. Harper, ubi supra. So it is not forgery to falsify a bill of exchange or country bank-note which, for want of a signature, is incomplete, or a navy bill payable to —— or order. R. v. Richards, R. & R. 193: R. v. Randall, Id. 195: R. v. Pateman, R. & R. 455; R. v. Butterwick, 2 M. & Rob. 196: see R. v. Burke, R. & R. 496: R. v. Turpin, 2 C & K. 820. But a man may be indicted for forging and uttering a bill of exchange, although the name of the payee was not indorsed on it. R. v. Wickes, R. & R. 149. A bill of exchange for three guineas, not attested as required by 17 G. 3, c. 30, s. 1 (rep.), was held by the judges not to be the subject of an indictment for forgery, as a bill of exchange; because if it were a genuine instrument, it would be absolutely void for want of the attestation. R. v. Moffatt, 1 Leach, 431; 2 East, P. C. 954. The restrictions enforced by that Act and 7 G. 4, c. 6, on the issue of bills and notes for a sum under 5*l.* are repealed by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 105, s. 1 (temporary, but annually continued). Forgery may be committed on unstamped paper of a bill which by law requires a stamp. R. v. Hawkeswood, 1 Leach, 257; 2 T. R. 606, n.: R. v. Morton, 2 East, P. C. 955: R. v. Reculist, Id. 956; 2 Leach, 703: and see 54 & 55 Vict. c. 39, s. 14, sub-s. 4 (ante, p. 383). A seaman's advance note, purporting to be signed by the master and owner, and in the following form—"Ten days after the ship C. sails from the port of L. the undersigned hereby promise and agree to pay to any person who shall advance 4*l.* to H. on this agreement the sum of 4*l.*, provided that the said H. shall sail in the said ship from the said port of L."—is not a promissory note. R. v. Howie, 11 Cox, 320 (post, p. 737).

The adding of a false address to the name of the drawee of a bill, while the bill is in the course of completion, in order to make the acceptance appear to be that of a different existing person, is a forgery. R. v. Blenkinsop, 1 Den. 276; 2 C. & K. 531; 17 L. J. (M. C.) 62. So is the adding of an address to a bill so as to make it appear that the acceptance though really written by a person of the same name is that of a different person—whether such person existed or not. R. v. Epps, 4 F. & F. at p. 85, Willes, J. Putting off the bill of A., an existing person, as the bill of A., a fictitious person, has been held forgery. R. v. Nisbett, 6 Cox, 320, 324, n. As to what is a fictitious party to a bill of exchange, see Vagliano's case [1891] App. Cas. 107; Clutton v. Attenborough [1895] 2 Q. B. 707; [1897] App. Cas. 90.

Where the charge in the indictment was for forging "a certain indorsement of" a bill of exchange, "which said forged indorsement was and is as follows:—'Magdalen Isherwood';" and the bill, as set out in some of the counts of the indictment, and as proved in evidence, was payable to the order of four persons, of whom Magdalene Isherwood was one, as joint executrices; the indictment was held by all the judges to be sufficient, and the charge to be proved. R. v. Winterbottom, 1 Den. 41; 2 C. & K. 37.

An indorsement "per procuration, J. S.," signed in the defendant's own name, was held, on 11 G. 4 & 1 W. 4, c. 66, s. 3 (rep.), not to be a forgery, though the defendant falsely alleged that he had authority from J. S. to indorse. R. v. White, 1 Den. 208; 2 C. & K. 404; 2 Cox, 210. But this case is now provided for by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 24, infra.

DEMANDING PROPERTY ON FORGED INSTRUMENTS.

FORGING AND UTTERING ORDERS, RECEIPTS, ETC., FOR MONEY, GOODS, ETC.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 98 (Forgery Act, 1861), s. 23—Forging orders, receipts, etc.]—Whosoever shall forge or alter, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off, knowing the same to be forged or altered, any undertaking, warrant, order, authority, or request for the payment of money, or for the delivery or transfer of any goods or chattels, or of any note, bill, or other security for the payment of money, or for procuring or giving credit, or any indorsement on or assignment of any such undertaking, warrant, order, authority, or request, or any accountable receipt, acquittance, or receipt for money or for goods, or for any note, bill, or other security for the payment of money, or any indorsement on or assignment of any such accountable receipt, with intent, in any of the cases aforesaid, to defraud, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for life. . . . [This section re-enacts 1 W. 4, c. 66, ss. 3, 10, with the addition of the words in italics. The word "request" was added to get rid of R. v. Thorn, C. & Mar. 206; 2 Mood. C. C. 210; and like cases. For indictments, see post, pp. 732, 737, et seq.]

Sect. 24—Drawing, etc., bills, etc., in name of another, with intent to defraud.]—Whosoever, with intent to defraud, shall draw, make, sign, accept, or indorse any bill of exchange or promissory note, or any undertaking, warrant, order, authority, or request, for the payment of money, or for the delivery or transfer of goods or chattels, or of any bill, note, or other security for money, by procuration or otherwise, for, in the name, or on the account of any other person, without lawful authority or excuse, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off any such bill, note, undertaking, warrant, order, authority, or request so drawn, made, signed, accepted, or indorsed, by procuration or otherwise, without lawful authority or excuse as aforesaid, knowing the same to have been so drawn, made, signed, accepted, or indorsed as aforesaid, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding fourteen years. . . . [This section was new law in 1861, and was framed to cover cases where documents were fraudulently made, accepted, or indorsed by procuration, which were not within prior statutes. R. v. Maddock, 2 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 641, 762: R. v. White, 1 Den. 208; 2 C. & K 404: R. v. Cooke, 8 C. & P. 582.]

Sect. 25—Altering, etc., crossings on cheques.]—Whenever any cheque or draft on any banker shall be crossed with the name of a banker, or with two transverse lines with the words "and company," or any abbreviation thereof, whosoever shall obliterate, add to, or alter any such crossing, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off any cheque or draft whereon any such obliteration, addition, or alteration has been made, knowing the same to have been made with intent, in any of the cases aforesaid, to defraud, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for life. . . . 38 & 39 Vict. c. 83, s. 32—Crossed coupons of local loan debenture stock.]—See post, p. 742.

46 & 47 Vict. c. 55 (Revenue Act, 1883), s. 17—Extension of s. 25 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98.]—Sects. 76 to 82, both inclusive, of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), and section 25 of the Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 98), shall extend to any document issued by a customer of any banker, and intended to enable any person or body corporate to obtain payment from such banker of the sum mentioned in such document, and shall so extend in like manner as if the said document were a cheque. Provided that nothing in this Act shall be deemed to render any such document a negotiable instrument. For the purpose of this section [his] Majesty's paymaster-general and the [King's] and lord treasurer's remembrancer in Scotland shall be deemed to be bankers, and the public officers drawing on them shall be deemed customers.

43 & 44 Vict. c. 33 (Post Office (Money Orders) Act, 1880), s. 3—Altering, etc., crossings on postal orders.]—Any person who, with intent to defraud, obliterates, adds to, or alters any such lines or words on an order issued under this Act, as would in the case of a cheque, be a crossing of that cheque, or knowingly offers, utters, or disposes of any order with such fraudulent obliteration, addition, or alteration, shall be guilty of felony, and be liable to the like punishment as if such order were a cheque: [Proviso protecting bankers who have collected money from the Post Office under the order.]

Sect. 4, sub-sect. 4.]—Money order to be valuable security within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, and other statutes (ante, p. 432).

Indictment for Forging a Warrant or Order for the Payment of Money (24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 28, ante, p. 731).

Commencement as ante, p. 710]—a certain warrant for the payment of money ("any undertaking, warrant, order, authority, or request, for the payment of money") with intent thereby then to defraud; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. 2nd Count [as ante, p. 710], for offering, uttering, disposing of, and putting off "a certain other forged warrant for the payment of money." Where the correct description of the instrument is doubtful or may be disputed, add separate counts describing the document as an "order," as an "authority," and as a "request" for the payment of money. If the charge in the indictment be for forging a warrant and order, it has been ruled that proof of a document which is a warrant, but not an order for the payment of money, will not sustain the indictment. R. v. Williams, 2 C. & K. 51. Sed quære; see R. v. Williams, 2 Den. 61; 29 L. J. (M. C.) 106: R. v. Gilchrist, 2 Mood. C. C. 233; C. & Mar. 224 (post, p. 735), and ante, p. 71, "Surplusage."

Felony. See the last precedent. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 23.

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126.

Evidence.

Prove the forgery and uttering, etc., as directed, ante, pp. 712, 719. It only remains here to show what warrants, orders, etc., are within the meaning of the Act.

It is not necessary, in order to constitute a document a "warrant," "authority," or "request" for the payment of money, that it should appear to be so on its face. It is sufficient if the party to whom it is addressed has been in the habit of treating similar documents as warrants, etc., for the payment of money. And therefore a document, in form a mere receipt given by a depositor to a building society that received money on deposit, may properly be described in an indictment as a "warrant," "authority," or "request" for the payment of money, if, by the custom of the society, such receipts are in fact treated as warrants, authorities, and requests for the payment of money. R. v. Kay, L. R., 1 C. C. R. 257; 39 L. J. (M. C.) 118; 11 Cox, 529.

Undertaking, warrant, order, authority, or request for the payment on delivery, etc.]—Many of the following cases were decided before it was made felony to forge an authority or request for the payment of money by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 23 (ante, p. 731). But they are retained as being still of some use as a guide in construing that section. A cheque upon a banker is a bill of exchange (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61, s. 73); but it is also (even if post-dated, R. v. Taylor, 1 C. & K. 213) a warrant and order for the payment of money, within the statute: R. v. Willoughby, 2 East, P. C. 944; as is any other form of bill of exchange. R. v. Sheppard, Id. 944; 1 Leach, 226 (a): R. v. Smith, 1 Den. 79; 1 C. & K. 700. So an order to pay "all my prize money due to me for my services on board his Majesty's ship 'Leander,'" without specifying any particular sum, was held to be within 7 G. 2, c. 22 (rep.). R. v. M'Intosh, 2 East, P. C. 942; 2 Leach, 883. So is a letter of credit. R. v. Raake, 8 C. & P. 626; 2 Mood. C. C. 66. A writing in the form of a bill of exchange, but without any drawee's name, cannot be charged as an order for the payment of money; at least, unless shown by averments to be such. R. v. Curry, 2 Mood. C. C. 218. So, where the instrument is in any other respect incomplete, and therefore not operative; as where the practice was for a majority of the officers of a parish to draw cheques on the treasurer of a union; and one of their blank cheques, filled up for 1*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.*, had a note at the bottom, "Unless this cheque is signed by a majority of the parish officers, it will not be cashed;" this cheque was signed by one of the officers while it was for 1*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.*; it was then altered to 3*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.*, and when cashed by the treasurer had the signatures of a majority of the officers to it; it was held, that if the cheque was fraudulently altered when it had only one signature to it, this was no forgery. R. v. Turpin, 2 C. & K. 820. In R. v. Lee, 3 Cox, 80, it was held forgery to counterfeit the signatures of the chairman and committee of a society to a cheque (requiring their signatures and that of the clerk) with the object and result of obtaining the genuine signature of the clerk. A mere transposition of the words in a cheque has been held not to make it invalid. R. v. Boreham, 2 Cox, 189. On an indictment for forging and uttering a "warrant and order for the payment of money, to wit, a warrant and order for the payment of 85*l.*," and for forging an acquittance and receipt for money, to wit, for 85*l.*, it was proved that J. M. had paid 85*l.* into a country bank, and had taken an accountable receipt for that amount, and that the course of dealing at the bank was to treat such receipt with the depositor's name thereon, as an order for the payment of the money deposited, and interest. The defendant took the receipt to the bank, and having written the name of "J. M." thereon, delivered it to the bankers, who paid him 87*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, for principal and interest. He was held to have been rightly convicted. R. v. Atkinson, 2 Mood. C. C. 215; C. & Mar. 325. Where the instrument was an order to pay the prisoner, or order, the sum of four pounds five shillings, being a month's advance on an intended voyage to Quebec, in the ship "Mary Ann," as per agreement with G. M., master: and the prisoner had written in the margin of the order, "On receiving this cheque I agree to sail, and to be on board within sixteen days from the date of this cheque;" it was held a good order for the payment of money within 1 W. 4, c. 66, s. 3 (rep.). R. v. Bamfield, 1 Mood. C. C. 416. And see R. v. Anderson, 2 M. & Rob. 469; and R. v. Howie, 11 Cox, 320 (post, p. 737). So, a foreign letter, requesting a correspondent in England to advance money, it being proved that such letters are in the course of business treated as orders, was held to support a charge of forging an order for the payment of money. R. v. Raake, 2 Mood. C. C. 66; 8 C. & P. 626. A dividend warrant of a railway company, signed by the secretary and addressed to a banker, requiring him to pay the sum named in the warrant to a certain shareholder, and to charge the same to the company's revenue account, was held to be properly described as a warrant and an order for the payment of money. R. v. Autey, Dears. & B. 294; 26 L. J. (M. C.) 190; 7 Cox, 329. And the document containing a statement that the shareholder's name must be indorsed on the back, without which indorsement it was proved that the money would not be paid even to him, a forgery of such indorsement was held to be a forgery of the entire document. Id. A writing purporting to authorize the bearer to receive money deposited in a bank by a friendly society on accountable receipts and purporting to be signed by the principal officers of the society (the bank having received the money on terms of repayment to the order of the society), was held to be well described as a warrant for the payment of money, and it was held no objection that the defendant was himself a member of the society. R. v. Harris, 2 Mood. C. C. 267; 1 C. & K. 179. Where the forged paper was as follows: "This is to certify that R. R. has swept the flues and cleaned the bilges, and repaired four bridges of the 'Princess Victoria,' J. N. 4*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.*:" and it was proved that, by the course of dealing between the parties, this voucher, if genuine, would have authorized L. & Co. to pay the 4*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.*; this was held sufficient to support an indictment charging it as a warrant for the payment of money. R. v. Rogers, 9 C. & P. 41. But a paper in the following terms:—"I hereby certify that the within-named W. M. is gaining his living by hawking;" the production of which was necessary in order that the defendant might obtain payment of a sum of money,—was held not to be either an undertaking, a warrant, or an order for the payment of money, and to be the subject only of forgery at common law. R. v. Mitchell, 2 F. & F. 44. But semble that it would be an "authority" within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 23. A forged document, purporting to be a bill for goods sold to the prosecutor, with a request for its payment, was held to be both a warrant and an order within this section. R. v. Dawson, 2 Den. 75; 20 L. J. (M. C.) 102. A letter written to a wholesale house in London, in the name of a customer in the country, in the following terms:—"I shall feel obliged by your paying Mr. B. the sum of 2*l.* 7*s.* 8*d.*, and debiting me with the same; you will please have a receipt, and add the amount to invoice of order on hand:" was held not to be either an undertaking, a warrant, or an order for the payment of money; but a request. R. v. Thorn, 2 Mood. C. C. 210; C. & Mar. 206. See also R. v. Roberts, 2 Mood. C. C. 258; C. & Mar. 652. The forgery of a "request" for the payment of money is now an indictable offence under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 23, ante, p. 731. Where the defendant, in England, forged on a letter of credit, whereby a bank in Australia was required to "honour the draft" of R. T. for 50*l.*, an indorsement of R. T.'s name: this was held not to be the forgery of an order for the payment of money, payment of the money on such simple indorsement not being within the original mandate. R. v. Wilton, 1 F. & F. 391. It seems, however, that though the instrument be called in the indictment "a warrant, order, and request," when it is but one of these, if it be set out in hæc verba, so as to enable the court to judge of its purport, the misdescription (if it be one) is immaterial. R. v. Williams, 2 Den. 61; 20 L. J. (M. C.) 106. It may therefore be prudent, in the case of an instrument of this nature, either to describe it, in several counts, as a "warrant," an "order," and a "request" for the payment of money or delivery of goods, or to set it out in hæc verba, notwithstanding 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, ss. 42, 43 (ante, pp. 704, 705).

A "warrant or order" for the payment of money must purport, or must be shown by evidence, to be made by some person who might command the payment of the money, and to be made upon a person who was compellable to obey it. See R. v. Clinch, 2 East, P. C. 938, 940. Thus, an order to a tradesman to let the bearer have certain goods, and which it was optional with the tradesman to obey or not, was held not to be within 45 G. 3, c. 89 (rep.), the words of which were "warrant or order for the delivery of goods." R. v. Williams, 1 Leach, 114; 2 East, P. C. 938: R. v. Mitchell, Fost. 119: and see R. v. Baker, 1 Mood. C. C. 231: R. v. Newton, 2 Mood. C. C. 59: R. v. Thorn (ante, p. 734), R. v. Mitchell (ante, p. 734), R. v. Ellor, 1 Leach, 323; 2 East, P. C. 938. So forgery of a justice's order under 17 G. 2, c. 5 (rep.), for a reward for apprehending a vagrant, which appeared upon the face of it to be defective, as not being under seal, or directed to the constable, etc., was held not to be within 7 G. 2, c. 22 (rep.); for, without these requisites, it was nothing more than the order of a mere individual, which the treasurer was not bound to obey. R. v. Rushworth, R. & R. 317; 1 Stark. (N. P.) 396: cf. R. v. Graham, 2 East, P. C. 945. But such orders would be "authorities" or "requests" under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 23, ante, p. 731. An indictment for forging an order for relief to a discharged prisoner, under 5 G. 4, c. 85 (rep.), being in many places ungrammatical, and at variance from the Act, was held bad. R. v. Donnelly, 1 Mood. C. C. 438. Such an instrument, however, was properly described as an order for the payment of money. R. v. M'Connell, 2 Mood. C. C. 298; 1 C. & K. 371. Money orders issued by the Post Office were held to be warrants and orders for the payment of money within 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 5 (rep.). R. v. Gilchrist, 2 Mood. C. C. 233; C. & Mar. 224 (ante, p. 732). As to uttering such orders knowing them to be forged, see R. v. Vanderstein, 10 Cox, 177; 16 Ir. Rep. C. L. 574. Where a defendant was indicted for forging the order of a justice upon the treasurer of a county made under the Burial of Drowned Persons Act, 1808 (48 G. 3, c. 75), by which a justice may order the treasurer of a county to pay churchwardens, etc., the expenses of burying dead bodies cast on shore, and it did not appear on the order that the person to whom the money was to be paid was an officer within the words of that statute; it was held to be an order within the statute; because it did not appear that the party was not such an officer, and the treasurer was bound to conclude that the justice would not make such an order without satisfying himself that the party was such an officer. R. v. Froud, R. & R. 389; 1 B. & B. 300. In R. v. Baker, 1 Mood. C. C. 231, the forged instrument ran thus:—"Mr. Thomas: Sir, you will please pay the bearer, for Richard Power, three pounds, for three weeks, due to him, a country member, and you will oblige yours, etc., J. Beswick." Beswick was secretary to a friendly society, some of whose funds were in the hands of Thomas. The prisoner was convicted; but the judges held this not to be an order upon the face of it, and that the conviction was wrong. The forged instrument, however, in that case would have been an "authority" or "request" under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 23 (ante, p. 731). Where the defendant, who was in the employ of a tanner, and paid by the job, was employed also to arrange the accounts for himself and the other men, and made out the account weekly, and brought it to the foreman, stating therein the amount to which he was entitled, and the foreman looked it over, and if he found it correct, signed it, and then the defendant took it so signed to the cashier, who on seeing the signature paid the amount; and the defendant on one occasion presented to the cashier an account for a larger sum than was due to him, with the name of the foreman forged thereto; this was held not to be a forgery of a warrant for the payment of money, inasmuch as, assuming the document to be genuine, the cashier would have no claim in respect of it on the foreman. R. v. Pilling, 1 F. & F. 324. A forged draft on a banker, in a fictitious name, or in the name of a person who never kept cash with the banker, was held to be a warrant or order within the meaning of 7 G. 2, c. 22 (rep.) (R. v. Lockett, 2 East, P. C. 940; 1 Leach, 94: R. v. Abraham, 2 East, P. C. 941), for it imports, upon the face of it, to be an order by a person having authority to make it. So, a forged draft in the name of a person who does keep cash with the banker, is an order within the Act, whatever be the state of his account at the time. R. v. Carter, 1 Den. C. C. 65; 1 C. & K. 741. Where, on the contrary, a man obtains goods or cash upon his own draft on a banker, with whom he does not keep cash, we have seen (ante, p. 604) that the proper mode of proceeding against him criminally is by indictment for obtaining by false pretences.

The cases on this subject, some of which it is not easy to reconcile, were all considered by the judges in R. v. Vivian, 1 Den. 35; 1 C. & K. 719; in which they laid down the principle, that any instrument for the payment of money, under which, if genuine, the payer might recover the amount against the party signing it, might properly be considered as a warrant for the payment of money; and that it was equally such whatever were the state of account between the parties, and whether the party apparently signing it had at the time funds in the hands of the party to whom it was addressed or not. In that case the forged instrument was as follows:—"Mr. M. will be pleased to send by the bearer 10*l.* on Mr. H.'s account, as Mr. H. is very bad in bed, and cannot come himself." Signed, "M. R., foreman, St. A. foundry." M. was a clerk of bankers, with whom H. kept an account, and by drafts on whom he paid his workmen. M. R. was H.'s foreman, having authority to pay the workmen, but not to draw for the money. H. being ill in bed, the defendant forged this paper in the name of M. R. and obtained the 10*l.* from M. by means of it. It was held that he was properly convicted under 1 W. 4, c. 66, s. 3 (rep.), although M. R. had himself no account with the bankers; because by this instrument, if genuine, M. R. said in effect that he had authority from H., who had an account with them; and as against him, therefore, it was as much a warrant as if he himself had had such account, and would equally have bound him. This decision seems to render the authority of some of those before referred to at least questionable. (See also R. v. Carter, ubi supra: R. v. Ferguson, 1 Cox, 241: R. v. Rouse, 4 Cox, 7: R. v. Turberville, 4 Cox, 13, Erle, J.)

In R. v. Clinch, 2 East, P. C. 938, on an indictment under 45 G. 3, c. 89, s. 1 (rep.), the words of which were "warrant or order," etc., it was laid down that the order must, to satisfy the statute, purport on its face to be directed to the person having possession of the money, and therefore, where an order to deliver to the bearer 8 lbs. of silk did not appear to be directed to any person, it was held not within the statute. But the decision turned on the form of the indictment, and by 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 123, s. 3 (rep. and now replaced by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 42, ante, p. 705), it was declared sufficient to describe the forged instrument in the indictment in such manner as would sustain an indictment for stealing it. In R. v. Rogers, 9 C. & P. 41, Bosanquet, J., and Parke, B., held that a warrant for the payment of money need not, in order to come within that statute, be addressed to any particular person: but that it was sufficient if it would, if genuine, have been an authority to a certain person to pay the amount mentioned in it. And in R. v. Snelling, Dears. 219; 23 L. J. (M. C.) 8, where the forged instrument was thus:—"Sir, please, to pay," etc., it was held that it might be shown by evidence to be an order for the payment of money, and for whom it was intended. These cases appear to overrule contrary decisions on the prior statutes as to "orders," e.g., R. v. Richards, R. & R. 193: R. v. Denny, 1 Cox, 178: R. v. Ravenscroft, R. & R. 161.

It was no offence, under the repealed Acts, to forge an indorsement on a warrant or order for the payment of money (R. v. Arscott, 6 C. & P. 408); but the present statute expressly includes "any indorsement on or assignment of any such undertaking, warrant, order, authority, or request." See R. v. Wardell, 3 F. & F. 82; but see R. v. Wilton, 4 F. & F. 391 (ante, p. 734).

A written promise to pay a sum specified, or such other sum not exceeding the same, as A. B. may incur by reason of his suretyship, is an undertaking for the payment of money within the statute. R. v. Reed, 2 Mood. C. C. 62; 8 C. & P. 623; 2 Lewin, 185. So is a document purporting to guarantee a master to a certain amount in money against the dishonesty of a clerk. R. v. Joyce, L. & C. 576; 34 L. J. (M. C.) 168; or any guarantee: R. v. Coelho, 9 Cox, 8. So is an I O U given by a debtor to his creditor, whereby the debtor obtains further time for the payment of the debt, and to which I O U the debtor affixes his own signature, and also forges the signature of a third party as surety. R. v. Chambers, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 341; 41 L. J. (M. C.) 15. So is a sailor's shipping note purporting to be signed by the master and in the following form:—"In consideration of F. sailing as steward in the brig K. from the port of L., I undertake to pay to F. or bearer 2*l.* five days after the said brig shall sail from the said port." R. v. Anderson, 2 M. & Rob. 469. But a note, known as a seaman's advance note, purporting to be signed by the owner and master, and in the following form: "Ten days after the ship C. sails from the port of L., the undersigned hereby promise and agree to pay to any person who shall advance 4*l.* to H. on this agreement, the sum of 4*l.*, provided the said H. shall sail in the said ship from the said port of L.," was held not to be an order for the payment of money within the statute. R. v. Howie, 11 Cox, 320; sed contra, R. v. Lonsdale, 2 Cox, 222. And it seems to be an "undertaking." See R. v. Anderson (ubi supra): R. v. Bamfield, 1 Mood. C. C. 416. And the statute applies as well to a written promise for the payment of money by a third person as by the supposed party to the instrument. R. v. Stone, 1 Den. 181; 2 C. & K. 364.

An instrument professing to be a scrip certificate of a railway company is not a receipt acquittance or undertaking within the statute. R. v. West, 1 Den. 258; 2 C. & K. 496.

Indictment for Forging a Warrant, Order, Authority, or Request for the Delivery or Transfer of Goods, etc. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 23, ante, p. 731.)

The same as the precedent, ante, p. 732, only substituting the words "warrant," "order," "authority," or "request for the delivery [or 'transfer'] of goods" to —— ("any undertaking, warrant, order, authority or request for the delivery or transfer of any goods or chattels, or of any note, bill or other security for the payment of money"), for the words, "warrant, etc., for the payment of money." See R. v. Robson, 2 Mood. C. C. 182; 9 C. & P. 423: R. v. Smith, 2 Cox, 358. The request need not be set out verbatim. See 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 42 (ante, p. 705), and R. v. Williams, 2 Den. 61; 20 L. J. (M. C.) 106; 4 Cox, 358.

Felony. See the precedent, ante, p. 732; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 23.

Evidence.

Prove the forgery and uttering, etc., as directed, ante, pp. 712, 719. An order "to deliver my work to bearer" (and which was explained in evidence to mean an order to Goldsmiths' Hall to deliver certain plate a silversmith had sent there to be marked) was held to be within 7 G. 2, c. 22 (rep.), although it did not specify any particular articles. R. v. Jones, 1 Leach, 53; 2 East, P. C. 941. A pawnbroker's ticket is a warrant for the delivery of goods. R. v. Morrison, Bell, 158; 28 L. J. (M. C.) 210. At the London Docks, a person bringing a "tasting order" from a merchant having wine there, is not allowed to taste until the order has across it the signature of a clerk of the company. The defendant uttered a tasting order with the merchant's name forged to it, by presenting it to the company's clerk for his signature across it, which the clerk refused. It was held to be in this state a forged order for the delivery of goods. R. v. Illidge, 1 Den. C. C. 404; 2 C. & K. 871. A request for the delivery of goods need not be addressed to any one (R. v. Carney, 1 Mood. C. C. 351: R. v. Cullen, Id. 300; 5 C. & P. 116: R. v. James, 8 C. & P. 292: R. v. Pulbrook, 9 C. & P. 37); nor need it be signed by a person who can compel a performance of it, or who has any authority over or interest in the goods. R. v. Thomas, 2 Mood. C. C. 16; 7 C. & P. 851. See R. v. Thorn, 2 Mood. C. C. 210; C. & Mar. 206 (ante, p. 734). Where the prisoner represented that M. C. was dead, and had left him 50*l.* or 60*l.* which was in the hands of A. D., and that he wanted mourning, and brought a forged paper, purporting to be signed by A. D., containing the following: "Please let W. T. have such things as he wants for the purpose; I have got the amount of 27*l.* for M. C. in my keeping these many years"—this was held to be a forged request within the statute. R. v. Thomas, ubi supra. So a paper in the following form was held to be a request for the delivery of goods, though not addressed to any one:—"Aug. 3, '39. 1 16-in. helmet scoop; one 4 qt. kettle. Jas. Hayward." R. v. Pulbrook, 9 C. & P. 37; cf. R. v. Ellis, 4 Cox, 258. So, also, a paper as follows: "Please let the lad have a hat, and I will answer for the money. E. B." R. v. White, 9 C. & P. 282. And it is not the less a forged request for the delivery of goods, because it may also be a forged undertaking for the payment of money. Id. Nor will it make any difference, that the defendant alone was looked to for payment. R. v. Thomas, 2 Mood. C. C. 16; 7 C. & P. 851. Where it was the course of dealing between A. and B. that A. should make a list of persons with a sum against each name, on sight of which B. was to furnish the persons in the lists with goods on A.'s credit to the amount against their names, held that the list was a request for the delivery of goods. R. v. Walters, C. & Mar. 588.

Indictment for Forging a Receipt. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 23, ante, p. 731.)

Commencement as ante, p. 710]—a certain acquittance and receipt for money ("any accountable receipt, acquittance, or receipt for money or for goods, or for any note, bill, or other security for the payment of money, or any indorsement on or assignment of any such accountable receipt"), to wit, a (set out purport of document), with intent thereby then to defraud; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. (2nd Count). And the jurors aforesaid upon their oath aforesaid, do further present that the said J. S. afterwards, to wit, on the day and year aforesaid, feloniously did offer, utter, dispose of, and put off a certain other forged acquittance and receipt for money, to wit, a (as in first count), with intent thereby then to defraud (he the said J. S. at the time he so offered, uttered, disposed of, and put off the said last-mentioned forged acquittance and receipt for money as aforesaid, then and there well knowing the same to be forged); against the form [as ante, p. 465]. If the character of the document is doubtful or likely to be disputed, vary the counts. As to the word "other," see ante, p. 711.

Felony. See the precedent, ante, p. 732; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 23.

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126.

Evidence.

Prove the forging and uttering, etc., as directed, ante, pp. 712, et seq., 719, et seq. A scrip receipt, in which a blank was left for the subscriber's name, was held not to be a receipt within 2 G. 2, c. 25, s. 1 (rep.): R. v. Lyon, 2 Leach, 597; 2 East, P. C. 933; and see 2 Leach, 808; but it would have been otherwise if the blank had been filled up. A memorandum, importing that A. B. had paid to C. D. a sum of money, but importing no acknowledgment from C. D. of his having received it, was held not to be a "receipt" within 2 G. 2, c. 25, s. 1 (rep.), which however did not contain the words "accountable receipt." R. v. Harvey, R. & R. 227. A scrip certificate of a railway company was held not to be a receipt, or a receipt and acquittance within 1 W. 4, c. 66 (rep.). R. v. West, 1 Den. 258; 2 C. & K. 496: Clarke v. Newsam, 1 Ex. 131; 16 L. J. (Ex.) 296. A pawnbroker's ticket or duplicate, given in the form prescribed by 39 & 40 G. 3, c. 99, s. 6 (rep.), was held to be an accountable receipt for goods within this section. R. v. Fitchie, Dears. & B. 175; 26 L. J. (M. C.) 90. This decision appears to apply to tickets given under the Pawnbrokers Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 93), see ss. 6, 24, 49. A turnpike toll-gate ticket was held to be a receipt for money within this section. R. v. Fitch, R. v. Howley, L. & C. 159; 9 Cox, 160. An ordinary passenger's railway ticket is not an acquittance or receipt for money within this section. R. v. Gooden, 11 Cox, 672, Cleasby, B. (but see ante, p. 703). The following document was held to be an "accountable receipt" for goods:—"By order of R. F. Pries we have this day transferred into the name of Messrs. C. & S. 759 quarters and 4 bushels of wheat on 'August Ferdinand,' Captain Richards, at Neustadt, entered by R. F. Pries, and now lying at our granaries Bermondsey Wall. The wheat is insured against risk of fire by us. B. & Y. Corn Exchange, Oct. 23, 1852." R. v. Pries, 6 Cox, 165; and cf. R. v. Meigh, 7 Cox, 401. A document in the form of an agreement to release claims for a sum containing a receipt or release was held an accountable receipt. R. v. Hill, 2 Cox, 246, Coleridge, J. The prisoner was indicted for forging and uttering a receipt on an order for the payment of money, which appeared to be thus:—"Received, for R. Aikman, G. Arscott" (his own name being G. Arscott), written on the back of a bill of exchange payable at a banker's; Littledale, J., Vaughan, J., and Bolland, B., held that the evidence did not support the indictment, and directed an acquittal. R. v. Arscott, 6 C. & P. 408. Where it was shown to be the custom of bankers to give receipts on the deposit of money in the following form:—"Received of A. B. 85*l.* to his credit. This receipt not transferable;" and to repay the same, with interest, on the return of the receipt with a name written on it; it was held that the forging the name of A. B., and receiving the money due, on its return, was a forging and uttering of an acquittance for the 85*l.* and interest. R. v. Atkinson, 2 Mood. C. C. 215; C. & Mar. 325. A receipt given by bankers to poor-rate collectors for moneys paid to the account of the guardians was held an accountable receipt. R. v. Johnston, 5 Cox, 133 (C. C. R. Ir.). A receipt signed by the captain of a detachment, on the authority of which money is received from an army agent, on account of the monthly subsistence of such detachment, was held to be properly described as a receipt for money, although it appeared that such instruments were frequently cashed upon indorsement by tradesmen in the neighbourhood of the place where the regiment was stationed, and the amount afterwards received by them of the army agent. R. v. Rice, 6 C. & P. 634: R. v. Hope, 1 Mood. C. C. 414. Where a high constable had issued his precept for the payment of a county rate for a certain amount, and, having received it, wrote a receipt at the foot, and the prisoner, who had collected the rate, afterwards fraudulently altered the precept, by adding a figure in the amount (viz., changing 5*s.* to 15*s.*), and claimed to be allowed that larger amount in the account, this was held to be a forgery of the receipt. R. v. Vaughan, 8 C. & P. 276. And see R. v. Griffiths, Dears. & B. 548; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 205; 7 Cox, 501. Whether an addition by the prisoner of words to the receipt is an alteration is a matter for the jury. R. v. Milton, 10 Cox, 364: cf. Upfold v. Leit, 5 Esp. 100. The prisoner, who was a rate-collector, received money from the prosecutor on account of a rate for which he gave a receipt. After he had ceased to be a collector he called on the prosecutor for the balance, which the prosecutor paid to him, and for a receipt the prisoner altered the figures in the former receipt, which then appeared as a receipt for the entire rate. Pigott, B., and Martin, B., doubted whether these facts amounted to a forgery of a receipt. R. v. Sargent, 10 Cox, 161. It was the practice of the treasurer of the county of S., when an order had been made on him for the payment of the expenses of a prosecution, to pay the whole amount to the attorney for the prosecution or his clerk, and to require the signature of every person named in the order to be written on the back of it, and opposite to each name the sum ordered to be paid to each person respectively: it was held, that such a signature was not a receipt the forging of which is an offence against the statute, but was merely an authority to the treasurer to pay the amount. R. v. Cooper, 2 C. & K. 586: R. v. Parker, 2 Cox, 274, Erle, J. A friendly society had branches in various towns. A member belonging to one branch could not be received in another branch as a clearance member without a document called a "clearance," certifying that he had paid all the demands of the branch to which he originally belonged, and authorizing the other branch to receive him. The prisoner was secretary of the society, and had received from a member all the fees due to his branch, and the member thereupon became entitled to a clearance. The prisoner ought to have paid the money over to the treasurer of the society, but did not do so, and sent, nevertheless, a clearance to the member. To this clearance the prisoner forged the signatures of two of the officers of the society, without whose signatures the clearance would not have been accepted. It was held that this clearance was not an acquittance or receipt for money. R. v. French, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 217; 39 L. J. (M. C.) 58. If a person, with intent to defraud and to cause it to be supposed, contrary to the fact, that he has paid a certain sum into a bank, made in a book, purporting to be a pass-book of the bank, a false entry, which denotes that the bank has received the sum, he is guilty of forging an accountable receipt for money. R. v.

Moody, L. & C. 173; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 156: R. v. Smith, L. & C. 168; 13 L. J. (M. C.) 154; 9 Cox, 162: and see R. v. Hunter, 2 East, P. C. 928, 977.

24 & 25 Vict c. 98 (Forgery Act, 1861), s. 13.]—Whosoever, without lawful authority or excuse (the proof whereof shall lie on the party accused), shall purchase or receive from any other person, or have in his custody or possession any forged bank-note, bank bill of exchange, or bank post-bill, or blank bank-note, blank bank bill of exchange, or blank bank post-bill, knowing the same to be forged, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding fourteen years. . . . Indictment.

Central Criminal Court, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present, that J. S., on the first day of June, in the year of our Lord —— (in the parish of ——, in the county of ——), and within the jurisdiction of the said court, feloniously, and without lawful authority or excuse, had in his custody and possession ("purchase or receive from any person or have in his custody or possession") five forged bank-notes ("any forged bank-note, bank bill of exchange, or bank post-bill, or blank bank-note, blank bank bill of exchange, or blank bank post-bill") for the payment of ten pounds each, the said J. S. then well knowing the said several bank-notes and every of them to be forged; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

Felony: penal servitude for not more than fourteen and not less than three years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 13; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 51 (ante, p. 709).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant had in his possession the bank-notes set out in the indictment, or one of them; and prove the notes to be forgeries, as directed ante, pp. 712, et seq. The Act says, "in his possession or custody;" which, by a subsequent section (45, ante, p. 706), is interpreted to mean, in his personal custody or possession, or knowingly and wilfully in the actual custody and possession of any other person, or knowingly and wilfully in any dwelling-house or other building, lodging, apartment, field, or other place, open or enclosed, whether belonging to or occupied by himself or not, and whether it be had for his own use or for the use or benefit of another. See R. v. Rowley, R. & R. 110: Brooks v. Warwick, 2 Stark. (N. P.) 389; 20 R. R. 697. These several species of custody or possession are by the statute to be deemed and taken to be his custody and possession within the meaning of the Act: and therefore it is unnecessary to describe the custody and possession otherwise than as in the above precedent. As to the defendant's knowledge that the notes found upon him were bad, it can be proved by circumstantial evidence only. (See ante, pp. 303, 308, 340.) After proof that the defendant had in his possession forged notes, the proof of lawful authority or excuse lies upon the defendant. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 13. As to the meaning of lawful authority or excuse, see Dickins v. Gill [1896] 2 Q. B. 310; 18 Cox, 384: R. v. Harvey, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 284; 40 L. J. (M. C.) 63; 11 Cox, 662.

(2) Wilfully makes any false certificate or declaration under or for the purposes of this Act, or forges or falsifies any such certificate or declaration, or any order under this Act, or knowing any such certificate, declaration, or order to be false or forged, uses the same as true, or gives or sends the same as true to any person; or,

(3) Wilfully makes, gives, or uses any false statement or representation as to a child born alive having been still-born, or as to the body of a deceased person or a still-born child in any coffin, or falsely pretends that any child born alive was still-born; or,

(4) Makes any false statement with intent to have the same entered in any register of births or deaths; shall for each offence be liable on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding ten pounds, and on conviction on indictment to a fine or . . . to penal servitude for a term not exceeding seven years. of such register whereof such copy or extract shall be so given, to be false in any material particular, or shall forge or counterfeit the seal of or belonging to any register office or burial board, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off any such register, entry, certified copy, certificate, or seal, knowing the same to be false, forged, or altered, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off any copy of any entry in any such register, knowing such entry to be false, forged, or altered, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for life. . . . 61 & 62 Vict. c. 58 (Marriage Act, 1898), s. 7.]—Provision of register books, and for celebration of nonconformist marriages in absence of registrar.

Indictment for making a false entry in a Marriage Register. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 36, ante, p. 752.)

Commencement as ante, p. 710]—feloniously, knowingly, and unlawfully did insert ("insert, or cause or permit to be inserted") in a certain register of marriages, which was then by law authorized to be kept in England ("any register of births, baptisms, marriages, deaths, or burials, which now is or hereafter shall be by law authorized or required to be kept, etc., or any certified copy thereof"), to wit, in (describe the register), a certain false entry of a matter relating to a supposed marriage, and which said false entry is as follows: that is to say [set it out verbatim, with innuendoes if necessary to explain it]; whereas in truth and in fact the said A. B. was not married to the said C. D. at the said church on the said —— day of ——, as in the said entry is falsely alleged and stated; and whereas in truth and in fact the said A. B. was not married to the said C. D., at the said church or elsewhere, at the time in the said entry mentioned, or at any other time whatsoever; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. (2nd Count, for uttering)—feloniously did offer, utter, dispose of, and put off a copy of a certain [other] false entry relating to a certain supposed marriage, which said last-mentioned false entry was before then inserted in a certain register of marriages by law authorized to be kept in England, and which said last-mentioned false entry is as follows: that is to say [set it out]: whereas in truth and in fact [as above]. And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do say that the said J. S., at the time he so offered, uttered, disposed of, and put off the said copy of the said last-mentioned false entry, well knew the said last-mentioned false entry to be false; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. See R. v. Sharpe, 8 C. & P. 436. As to the word other, see ante, p. 711; and see note to next precedent.

A count (under 11 G. 4 & 1 W. 4, c. 66, s. 20 (rep.)) charging that the defendant "feloniously and wilfully did destroy, deface, and injure a parish register," is not bad for duplicity; and it is not necessary to allege a scienter as to such a charge. R. v. Bowen, 1 Den. 22; 1 C. & K. 501.

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 36; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 51 (ante, p. 709).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Indictment against A. B. for giving a false Certificate of Death. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 36, ante, p. 752.)

Commencement as ante, p. 710]—feloniously did knowingly and unlawfully give a certain false certificate relating to a certain death, to wit, a certain false certificate relating to the death of C. D., which said certificate was false in that [the said A. B. therein falsely described himself as a licentiate of the Royal College of Physicians in England]; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

It is submitted that the above form is sufficient. See note to indictment under the Falsification of Accounts Act, 1875 (ante, p. 591). It is further to be observed, however, that the terms of s. 36 do not expressly come within the words of ss. 42 & 43 (as to setting out the purport only of instruments; ante, pp. 705, 710).

Felony: see the last precedent.

Evidence.

To prove the indictment for making a false entry in a register, produce the register, prove it to be kept as stated in the indictment, and prove the forgery or uttering, as ante, pp. 712, 719, according as the fact is alleged in the indictment. Upon an indictment for making a false entry in a marriage register, it is not necessary that the entry should be made with intent to defraud: and it is no defence that the marriage, being bigamous, was void. If a person, knowing his name to be A., signs another name as a witness to a marriage in the register, he is guilty of inserting a false entry in the register although he so signs as a third witness, and the Marriage Act only requires two witnesses. R. v. Asplin, 12 Cox, 391, Martin, B. The court will take judicial notice that a parish in the county of Stafford, or any other English county, is in England, and the indictment need not aver that fact. R. v. Sharpe, 8 C. & P. 436.

It is not the less a "destroying, defacing, or injuring" of a register, within the meaning of the statute, because the register, when produced in evidence, has the torn part pasted in, and is as legible as before. R. v.

Bowen, 1 Den. 22; 1 Cox, 88. As to the uttering, see R. v. Heywood, 2 C. & K. 352.

Where a false entry had been actually made in a register of births, etc., on the information of the defendant, he was held to be thereby guilty of the felony mentioned in 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 86, s. 43 (re-enacted in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 36), and not merely of the misdemeanor of making a false statement for the same purpose, within the 41st section of that Act. R. v. Mason, 2 C. & K. 622: R. v. Dewitt, Id. 905; 4 Cox, 49.

Indictments for Forgery in other Cases.

With the assistance of the precedents already given, which are those most generally required in practice, indictments may readily be framed upon any of the statutes on the subject of forgery, attention being paid to the operative words in the statute creating the offence.

The following is, it is believed, a tolerably full list of the statutes relating to forgery and indictable offences connected therewith, which have not already been mentioned under the foregoing precedents, and do not find a place in other parts of this work. For completer list see Official Index to Statutes (ed. 1904), tit. "Forgery." All these statutes, with very few exceptions, make the uttering of these forged instruments respectively, knowing them to be forged, equally penal with forging them. It is necessary to premise that, by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 48 (ante, p. 708), in all cases of forgery, etc., in which, by any Act in force on Nov. 1, 1861, the punishment of death might, before the passing of 11 G. 4 & 1 W. 4, c. 66, have been inflicted, and which are not punishable under any of the other provisions of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, the offender shall be liable to penal servitude for life. By s. 47 of the same Act (ante, p. 708), whosoever shall be convicted of any offence which shall have been subjected by any Act to the same penalties as are imposed by 5 Eliz. c. 14 (for any of the offences first enumerated in that statute), shall be guilty of felony, punishable with penal servitude for any term not exceeding fourteen years. By the Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 69), s. 1 (1) where under any enactment in force when that section comes into operation, a court has power to award a sentence of penal servitude, the sentence may, at the discretion of the court, be for any period not less than three years, and not exceeding either five years, or any greater period authorized by the enactment; and (2) where under any Act then in force or under any future Act a court is empowered or required to award a sentence of penal servitude, the court may in its discretion, unless such future Act otherwise provides, award imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour (and see ante, p. 235). By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 39 (ante, p. 707) where by that or any other Act any person is, or shall hereafter be, made punishable for forging, etc., any instrument or writing designated by a special name or description, which, however designated, is in law a will, testament, codicil, or testamentary writing, or a deed or bond, or a bill of exchange or promissory note for the payment of money, or an indorsement or assignment of a bill or note, or an acceptance of a bill of exchange, or an undertaking, warrant, order, authority, or request for the payment of money, within the meaning of that Act, such person may be indicted under that Act and punished accordingly. With these observations, it has been thought best, in order to avoid repetition, to enumerate the more important of the existing statutes, with the punishments in the terms of the statutes respectively.

The venue as to all the following offences appears to be regulated by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 41 (ante, p. 705).

1. As to records and proceedings of courts of justice, proclamations, etc.]—Forging any record, writ, return, panel, process, rule, order, warrant, interrogatory, deposition, affidavit, affirmation, recognizance, cognovit actionem, or warrant of attorney, or any original document whatsoever of or belonging to any court of record, or any bill, petition, process, notice, rule, answer, pleading, interrogatory, deposition, affidavit, affirmation, report, order, or decree, or any original document whatsoever of or belonging to any court of equity or court of admiralty in England or Ireland, or any document or writing, or any copy of any document or writing, used or intended to be used as evidence in any court in this section mentioned; felony, penal servitude for not exceeding seven years. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98. s. 27. Forging the signature of a registrar, district registrar or commissioner of oaths; or forging or counterfeiting a seal of the Court of Probate, or knowingly using or concurring in the use of such forged or counterfeit signature or seal; or tendering in evidence documents with false seal or signature; felony, penal servitude for life. 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 28. The clerk of any court, or other officer having the custody of the records of any court, or being the deputy of any such clerk or officer, uttering any false copy or certificate of any record, knowing the same to be false; and any other person signing or certifying any copy or certificate of any record as such clerk, officer, or deputy, or forging any copy or certificate of any record, or uttering any copy or certificate of any record having thereon any false or forged name, handwriting, or signature, knowing the same to be false or forged; or forging the seal of any court of record, or forging or fraudulently altering any process of any court other than such courts as in the last preceding section mentioned; or serving or enforcing any forged process of any court whatsoever, knowing the same to be forged; or delivering to any person any paper falsely purporting to be any such process, or a copy thereof, or to be any judgment, decree, or order of any court of law or equity, or a copy thereof, knowing the same to be false; or acting or professing to act under any such false process, knowing the same to be false; felony, penal servitude for not exceeding seven years. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 28. An indictment for forgery under s. 28 must allege an intent to defraud. R. v. Powner, 12 Cox, 235, Quain, J. An affiliation order is "process" within the meaning of that section. Id. A certificate of letters of ordination is not a record within s. 28. R. v. Etheridge, 19 Cox, 676; 65 J. P. 761, Kennedy, J. Forging court rolls or copies thereof, relating to any copyhold or customary estate; felony, penal servitude for life. Id. s. 30. Forging any memorial, affidavit, affirmation, entry, certificate, indorsement, document, or writing, made or issued under the provisions of any Act passed or hereafter to be passed for or relating to the registry of deeds; or forging or counterfeiting the seal of any office for the registry of deeds, or any stamp or impression of any such seal; or forging the signature of any person to any such memorial, etc., which shall be required or directed to be signed by or by virtue of any Act passed or to be passed; felony, penal servitude not exceeding fourteen years. Id. s. 31. Forging any summons, conviction, order, or warrant of any justice of the peace, or any recognizance purporting to have been entered into before any justice of the peace, or other officer authorized to take the same, or any examination, deposition, affidavit, affirmation, or solemn declaration, taken or made before any justice of the peace; felony, penal servitude. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 32.

Uttering a false certificate of a previous conviction; felony, penal servitude, or imprisonment. 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 28, s. 11; cf. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 17. Forging or uttering a forged certificate, etc., of a chief justice, clerk of assize, or clerk of the peace given under the Crown Cases Act (11 & 12 Vict. c. 78); felony, penal servitude for any term not exceeding ten years. Id. s. 6 (ante, p. 275). Forging the seal, stamp, or signature of any document in the Evidence Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 99), mentioned or referred to (i.e., foreign and colonial acts of state and judgments, decrees, orders, and other judicial proceedings of any court of justice in any foreign state or British colony, and affidavits, pleadings, and other legal documents filed or deposited in any such court, s. 7; apothecaries' certificates, s. 8; registers of British vessels, and certificates of registry, s. 12; certified copies of records of a previous conviction or acquittal, s. 13; examined or certified copies of public documents admissible in evidence on production from the proper custody, s. 14); felony, penal servitude not exceeding seven years. Venue: where the accused is apprehended or in custody. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 17 (and see ante, p. 705). Forging the seal or any process of an inferior court having civil jurisdiction by custom or charter, or serving or enforcing forged process, or causing to be delivered, etc.; felony. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 19, s. 5. On an indictment charging A. with feloniously causing to be delivered to B. a certain paper falsely purporting to be a copy of a certain process of an inferior court within the meaning of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 19, s. 5, knowing the same to be false, and (2nd count) feloniously acting and professing to act under and by the authority of the said process, knowing, etc., it was held that no intent to defraud need be proved. R. v. Rippier, Norfolk Sum. Ass. [1897] Mathew, J., 32 L. J. Newsp. 350. J.* (M. C.) 92: R. v. Richmond, Bell, 142; 28 L. J. (M. C.) 188. Mere verbal "professing to act" is insufficient. There must be some "instrument." R. v. Myott, 6 Cox, 406. As to intent to defraud, see R. v. Powner, 12 Cox, 235 (ante, p. 756); and R. v. Rippier, ubi supra. A notice to produce was held not to be process within the corresponding provision in 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 57 (rep.). R. v. Castle, Dears. & B. 363; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 70. Indictment for personating a Seaman. (28 & 29 Vict. c. 124, s. 8, ante, p. 768.)

supposed to be payable, or any effects or money in charge or supposed to be in charge of the Admiralty") did unlawfully, falsely, and deceitfully personate one J. N., a person then entitled to receive the same pay ("any person entitled or supposed to be entitled to receive the same"); against the form [as ante, p. 465].

Misdemeanor: penal servitude for any term not exceeding five years and not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. 28 & 29 Vict. c. 124, s. 8; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1 (ante, p. 235).

In indictments for the personation of soldiers, etc., the intent may be laid to defraud "the Lords and others, Commissioners of the Royal Hospital for Soldiers at Chelsea, in the county of Middlesex (London)." 7 G. 4, c. 16, s. 35 (ante, p. 65).

Evidence.

Prove that J. N. was a person entitled to receive pay from the Admiralty. See R. v. Brown, 2 East, P. C. 1007: R. v. Tannet, R. & R. 351. Prove that the defendant personated or assumed the name and character of J. N. The offence will be complete, though the personated seaman be dead; R. v. Martin, R. & R. 324; and even though the wages have been paid. R. v. Cramp, Id. 327. So, upon an indictment on s. 38 of the Chelsea, etc., Hospitals Act, 1826 (7 G. 4, c. 16), for forging the name of a person to a letter of attorney for the receipt of a pension "supposed to be due" to such person; it was held that the defendant was rightly convicted, although it appeared that no such pension was actually existing. R. v. Pringle, 2 Mood. C. C. 127; 9 C. & P. 408. It is no defence to an indictment under 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 53, s. 49 (ante, p. 768), for personating a soldier to prove that the prisoner was authorized by the soldier to personate him; R. v. Lake, 11 Cox, 333; or that the prisoner had bought from the soldier personated the prize money to which the latter was entitled. Id.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100 (Offences against the Person Act, 1861), s. 1—Punishment of murder.]—Whosoever shall be convicted of murder shall suffer death as a felon. [This section re-enacts 9 G. 4, c. 31, s. 3.]

Sect. 2—Sentence for murder.]—Upon every conviction for murder the court shall pronounce sentence of death, and the same may be carried into execution, and all other proceedings upon such sentence and in respect thereof may be had and taken, in the same manner in all respects as sentence of death might have been pronounced and carried into execution, and all other proceedings thereupon and in respect thereof might have been had and taken, before the passing of this Act, upon a conviction for any other felony for which the prisoner might have been sentenced to suffer death as a felon. [As to the change in the law effected by this section, see ante, p. 233.]

31 & 32 Vict. c. 24 (Capital Punishment Amendment Act, 1868), s. 2—Judgment of death for murder to be executed within prison walls.]—Judgment of death, to be executed on any prisoner sentenced after the passing of this Act on any indictment or inquisition for murder, shall be carried into effect within the walls of the prison in which the offender is confined at the time of execution.

Sect. 3.—Provision for presence of sheriff and certain prison officials and others at execution.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 3—Burial of offender executed.]—The body of every person executed for murder shall be buried within the precincts of the prison in which he shall have been last confined after conviction, and the sentence of the court shall so direct. [This section was framed from 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 75, s. 16, and 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 26, s. 2.]

31 & 32 Vict. c. 24, s. 6—Burial of offender executed.]—The body of every offender executed shall be buried within the walls of the prison within which judgment of death is executed on him: provided that if one of [his] Majesty's principal secretaries of state is satisfied, on the representation of the visiting justices of a prison, that there is not convenient space within the walls thereof for the burial of offenders executed therein, he may, by writing under his hand, appoint some other fit place for that purpose, and the same shall be used accordingly.

Sect. 7—Power of Secretary of State to make regulations].—See Regulations of June 5, 1902. Statutes, Rules, and Orders Revised (ed. 1904), vol. 10, tit. "Prison E." p. 65.

Sect. 15—Saving clause as to legality of execution.]—The omission to comply with any provision of this Act shall not make the execution of judgment of death illegal in any case where such execution would otherwise have been legal.

Sect. 16—General saving.]—Except in so far as is hereby otherwise provided, judgment of death shall be carried into effect in the same manner as if this Act had not passed.

44 & 45 Vict. c. 64 (Central Criminal Court (Prisons) Act, 1881), s. 2 . . . (5).]—Where judgment of death is passed at the Central Criminal Court upon a person convicted of any offence, the judgment may be carried into execution in any prison in the Central Criminal Court district, or in the county, if any, where the offence was committed, or is supposed to have been committed, which the justice or judge of the said court passing sentence, or any other justice or judge of the court subsequently may order, and if no order is made, then in the prison in which the convict is for the time being confined; and such sheriff as is ordered by any justice or judge of the said court, or, if no order is made, the sheriff of the county in which the offence was committed or is supposed to have been committed, or if the offence was committed or is supposed to have been committed on the high seas, or if the county in which the offence was committed does not clearly appear, the sheriff of Middlesex shall be charged with the execution of the judgment; and the sheriff charged with the execution of the judgment shall for that purpose have the same jurisdiction and powers and be subject to the same duties in the prison in which the judgment is to be carried into execution, although such prison is not situate within his county, as he has by law with respect to the common gaol of his county, or would have had if the Prison Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 126), and the Prison Act, 1877 40 & 41 Vict. c. 21), had not passed.

The coroner whose duty it is to hold an inquest on the bodies of persons dying in any prison shall hold an inquest in accordance with the Capital Punishment Amendment Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 24) on the body of any convict executed in that prison. 50 & 51 Vict. c. 55 (Sheriffs Act, 1887), s. 13.]—Where judgment of death has been passed upon a convict at any court of assize or any sessions of oyer and terminer or gaol delivery held for any county or riding or division or other part of a county, the sheriff of such county shall be charged with the execution of such judgment, and may carry such judgment into execution in any prison which is the common gaol of his county or in which the convict was confined for the purpose of safe custody prior to his removal to the place where such court was held, and shall, for the purpose of such execution, have the same jurisdiction and powers over and in the prison in which the judgment is to be carried into execution, whether such prison is or is not situate within his county, and over the officers of such prison, as he has by law over and in the common gaol of his county and the officers thereof, or would have had if the Prison Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 126), and the Prison Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 21), had not passed, and shall be subject to the same responsibility and duties as if the said Acts had not passed. [For special provision as to sheriff of Cheshire, see 30 & 31 Vict. c. 36, s. 4.]

This section shall be in addition to, and not in derogation of, any power authorized to be exercised by order in council under the Winter Assizes Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 57), and the Spring Assizes Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 1) or either of them, and of the provisions of the Central Criminal Court (Prisons) Act, 1881 (ante, p. 775).

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 5—Punishment of manslaughter.]—Whosoever shall be convicted of manslaughter shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for life, . . . or to pay such fine as the court shall award, in addition to or without any such other discretionary punishment as aforesaid. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 6—Form of indictment for murder or manslaughter.]—In any indictment for murder or manslaughter, or for being an accessory to any murder or manslaughter, it shall not be necessary to set forth the manner in which or the means by which the death of the deceased was caused, but it shall be sufficient in any indictment for murder to charge that the defendant "did feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought kill and murder the deceased;" and it shall be sufficient in any indictment for manslaughter to charge that the defendant "did feloniously kill and slay the deceased;" and it shall be sufficient in any indictment against an accessory to any murder or manslaughter to charge the principal with the murder or manslaughter (as the case may be) in the manner hereinbefore specified, and then to charge the defendant as an accessory in the manner heretofore used and accustomed. [This section re-enacts 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 4, with the additions italicized.]

Sect. 8—Petit treason to be treated as murder.]—Every offence which before the commencement of the Act of the ninth year of King George the Fourth, chapter thirty-one [i.e., 1 July, 1828], would have amounted to petit treason, shall be deemed to be murder only, and no greater offence; and all persons guilty in respect thereof, whether as principals or as accessories, shall be dealt with, indicted, tried and punished as principals and accessories in murder. [This section re-enacts 9 G. 4, c. 31, s. 2. As to petit treason, see 1 Hawk. c. 32; 3 Chit. Cr. L. 742.]

Sect. 9—Murder or manslaughter abroad—Venue.]—Where any murder or manslaughter shall be committed on land out of the United Kingdom, whether within the [King's] dominions, or without, and whether the person killed were a subject of [his] Majesty or not, every offence committed by any subject of [his] Majesty, in respect of any such case, whether the same shall amount to the offence of murder or of manslaughter, or of being accessory to murder or manslaughter, may be dealt with, inquired of, tried, determined, and punished in any county or place in England or Ireland in which such person shall be apprehended or be in custody, in the same manner in all respects as if such offence had been actually committed in that county or place; provided that nothing herein contained shall prevent any person from being tried in any place out of England or Ireland for any murder or manslaughter committed out of England or Ireland, in the same manner as such person might have been tried before the passing of this Act. [This section is framed on 9 G. 4, c. 31, s. 7, *with the additions in italics. As to its effect, see Greaves, Crim. Law Cons. Sect. 10—Death within the realm of a person feloniously stricken outside the realm: Venue.]—Where any person, being feloniously stricken, poisoned, or otherwise hurt upon the sea, or at any place out of England or Ireland, shall die of such stroke, poisoning, or hurt in England or Ireland, or being feloniously stricken, poisoned, or otherwise hurt at any place in England or Ireland, shall die of such stroke, poisoning or hurt upon the sea, or at any place out of England or Ireland, every offence committed in respect of any such case, whether the same shall amount to the offence of murder or of manslaughter, or of being accessory to murder or manslaughter, may be dealt with, inquired of, tried, determined, and punished in the county or place in England or Ireland in which such death, stroke, poisoning, or hurt shall happen, in the same manner in all respects as if such offence had been wholly committed in that country or place. [This section re-enacts 9 G. 4, c. 31, s. 8; see ante, p. 37.]

25 & 26 Vict. c. 65—Jurisdiction in Homicides Act, 1862.]—Provisions for trial of persons subject to military law, for the murder or manslaughter of any person subject to military law, before the Central Criminal Court, where the offence has been committed in England or Wales, but out of the jurisdiction of that court. (See ante, p. 46.)

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 66—Persons loitering at night and suspected of any felony against this Act, may be apprehended.]—Any constable or peace officer may take into custody, without a warrant, any person whom he shall find lying or loitering in any highway, yard, or other place during the night, and whom he shall have good cause to suspect of having committed or being about to commit any felony in this Act mentioned, and shall take such person as soon as reasonably may be before a justice of the peace, to be dealth with according to law. [This section re-enacts 9 & 10 Vict. c. 25, ss. 13, 14, with the additions italicized.]

Sect. 67—Accessories, etc.]—In the case of every felony punishable under this Act, every principal in the second degree, and every accessory before the fact, shall be punishable in the same manner as the principal in the first degree is by this Act punishable; and every accessory after the fact to any felony punishable under this Act (except murder) shall be liable to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour; and every accessory after the fact to murder shall be liable at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for life or for any term not less than three years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years with or without hard labour; and whosoever shall counsel, aid, or abet the commission of any indictable misdemeanor punishable under this Act shall be liable to be proceeded against, indicted and punished as a principal offender. [This section re-enacts 9 G. 4, c. 31, s. 31; see ante, pp. 12–21.]

Sect. 68—Offences committed within Admiralty jurisdiction: Venue.]—All indictable offences mentioned in this Act which shall be committed within the jurisdiction of the admiralty of England or Ireland shall be deemed to be offences of the same nature and liable to the same punishments as if they had been committed upon the land in England or Ireland, and may be dealt with, inquired of, tried and determined in any county or place in England or Ireland in which the offender shall be apprehended or be in custody, in the same manner in all respects as if they had been actually committed in that county or place; and in any indictment for any such offence, or for being an accessory to such an offence, the venue in the margin shall be the same as if the offence had been committed in such county or place, and the offence shall be averred to have been committed "on the high seas;" provided that nothing herein contained shall alter or affect any of the laws relating to the government of her Majesty's land or naval forces. (See ante, pp. 39–43.)

Sect. 70—Whipping— . . .]—Whenever whipping may be awarded for any offence under this Act, the court may sentence the offender to be once privately whipped, and the number of strokes and the instrument with which they shall be inflicted shall be specified by the court in the sentence. And in case of any felony punishable under this Act otherwise than with death, the court may, if it shall think fit, require the offender to enter into his own recognizances and to find sureties, both or either, for keeping the peace, in addition to any punishment by this Act authorized; provided that no person shall be imprisoned for not finding sureties under this clause for any period exceeding one year. Prior to 1851 great particularity was necessary in the statement in the indictment of the manner in which the death was caused, and in the proof relating thereto. See 2 Hale, 185, 186: R. v. Mosley, 1 Mood. C. C. 97: R. v. Mackalley, 9 Co. Rep. 67 b. The technical strictness thus required led, in numerous instances, to a great and scandalous failure of justice, for examples of which see R. v. Kelly, 1 Mood. C. C. 113: R. v. Thompson, Id. 139: R. v. Hughes, 5 C. & P. 126: R. v. Jones, 1 C. & K. 243. By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 6 (ante, p. 776), it is not necessary to set forth the manner or means of death, but it is sufficient, in an indictment for murder, to charge that the defendant did feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought kill and murder the deceased; and in an indictment for manslaughter, to charge that he did feloniously kill and slay the deceased.

R. v. R. v. Antrobus*, 2 A. & E. 788, 798; 4 N. & M. 565. The question who is the proper sheriff to execute the sentence depends in the Central Criminal Court District on 44 & 45 Vict. c. 64, s. 2 (ante, p. 775), and elsewhere on 50 & 51 Vict. c. 55, s. 13 (Id.). In R. v. Garside, 2 A. & E. 266; 4 L. J. (*M. The offence of murder is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Indictment for Manslaughter. (Common Law: see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, ss. 5, 6.)

The form of the indictment for manslaughter is the same as an indictment for murder, omitting the words "wilfully and of his malice aforethought," and substituting the word "slay" for "murder." See 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 6 (ante, p. 776). Even before 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 24 (ante, p. 86), it need not conclude "contra formam statuti." R. v. Chatburn, 1 Mood. C. C. 403: R. v. Berry, 1 M. & Rob. 463. Nor is it necessary where the manslaughter arises from an act of omission, that such act of omission should be stated in the indictment. R. v. Smith, 11 Cox, 210. As to the cases in which homicide is manslaughter and not murder, see post, p. 782, et seq. A summary conviction for assault under s. 42 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, is not a bar to a subsequent indictment for manslaughter, upon the death of the man assaulted, consequent upon the same assault. R. v. Morris, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 90; 36 L. J. (M. C.) 84. (And see ante, p. 177.) On an indictment of a person over sixteen for the manslaughter of a child under sixteen, the jury may convict for an offence against s. 1 of the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904 (4 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 1 (3)), post, p. 877.

Felony: punishable with penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years, or with fine, in addition to or without such other punishment.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 5; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 71 (ante, p. 778).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence for the Prosecution.

The evidence on indictments of murder and manslaughter is the same except on the question of "malice aforethought" (post, p. 786). It is said that in manslaughter the prosecution must prove all the circumstances under which the homicide took place, and that in murder it is sufficient to prove the homicide. But in practice this distinction is not now made.

One J. N.]—It must be proved that J. N. was the person killed, otherwise the defendant must be acquitted, unless the variance be amended at the trial (ante, p. 300). If the name of the deceased be unknown, it should be stated so in the indictment. See ante, p. 56. The person killed must be in the King's peace. This includes even persons under sentence of death. See Commonwealth v. Bowen, 13 Mass. 91.

If the deceased were an alien enemy, and killed in the actual heat and exercise of war, this is matter of justification, as the alien is not in the King's peace, which may be proved on the part of the defendant. See 1 Hale, 433; 3 Co. Inst. 50.

But killing even an alien enemy within the kingdom, unless in the actual exercise of war, would be murder. 1 Hale, 433. The same rule applies where an alien enemy is charged with killing a British subject. R. v. Depardo, R. & R. 134; 1 Taunt. 26; 9 R. R. 693. And it is no matter either of excuse or justification, that the deceased was an outlaw, or one attained of præmunire. 1 Hale, 433; and see Commonwealth v. Bowen, ubi supra.

Feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought did kill and murder.]—The law presumes every homicide to be murder until the contrary appears. On charges of murder a distinction is drawn by Coke (3 Inst. 51) and Hale (1 P. C. 451) between "express malice," or "malice in fact," and "implied malice," or "malice in law." For a criticism of this distinction, see post, p. 768, and Steph. Dig. Cr. Law (6th ed.) p. 407; and see 3 Steph. Hist. Cr. Law, p. 18; Encycl. Eng. Law, tit. "Murder." According to Mr. Justice Foster, p. 255, "In every charge of murder, the fact of killing being first proved, all the circumstances of accident, necessity, or infirmity are to be satisfactorily proved by the prisoner unless they arise out of the evidence produced against him, for the law presumeth the fact to have been founded in malice until the contrary appeareth;" cf. R. v. Noon, 6 Cox, 137, Cresswell, J. Therefore the prosecutor is not bound to prove malice, or any facts or circumstances beside the homicide, from which the jury may presume it; and it is for the defendant to give in evidence such facts and circumstances as may prove the homicide to be justifiable or excusable, or that at most it amounted to manslaughter. Id. R. v. Greenacre, 8 C. & P. 35. Thus upon an indictment for manslaughter by negligent driving, on proof being given of the killing, it was held to lie on the accused to show that he had driven with proper skill and care. R. v. Cavendish, Ir. Rep. 8 C. L. 178. (See post, p. 801, et seq.) But it is said to be proper to call as witnesses for the prosecution all persons present when the killing took place to give all available accounts of the circumstances of the killing. R. v. Holden, 8 C. & P. 606; and see ante, p. 414.

In cases of express malice, homicide is usually committed in secret, and it is rarely practicable to substantiate it by direct and positive testimony; in most cases, therefore, the guilt of the defendant can be established upon circumstantial evidence merely. Upon this subject it is only necessary to refer to what has been already said upon the doctrine of presumptions (ante, p. 339), repeating here merely the caution laid down by Lord Hale (ante, p. 339), never to convict a man of murder or manslaughter on circumstantial evidence alone, unless the body has been found. 2 Hale, 290; 11 St. Tr. 464, n. This caution need not be followed where very strong circumstantial evidence of death can be given. (a) See R. v. Hindmarsh, 2 Leach, 569: R. v. Perry, 14 St. Tr. 1312: and see 1 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 158, 159: R. v. Hopkins, 8 C. & P. 591: R. v. Cheverton, 2 F. & F. 833, Erle, J.

The circumstantial evidence necessary to establish murder or manslaughter ought to be overwhelmingly strong. R. v. Hodge, 2 Lewin, 227: R. v. Gardner, 1 F. & F. 669, Bramwell, B.: R. v. Franz, 2 F. & F. 580, Blackburn, J.

In cases of implied malice (see post, p. 786), the homicide is usually committed in the presence of others, who may prove it; if not, it must be proved by circumstantial evidence.

It must also be shown that the deceased died of the wound or other injury given him by the defendant, within a year and day after he received it: for if he died after that time, the law would presume that his death had proceeded from some other cause. 1 Hawk. c. 31, s. 9; 1 East, P. C. 344. In R. v. McIntyre, 2 Cox, 379, Coleridge, J., where a blow was given which in the opinion rendered a restorative necessary, and the injured person being unable to swallow was choked in administering the restorative, it was held that the death was caused by the blow. If a man have a disease, which in all likelihood would terminate his life in a short time, and another give him a wound or hurt which hastens his death, this is such a killing as constitutes murder (1 Hale, 427), or at the least manslaughter. R. v. Murton, 3 F. & F. 492, Byles, J. Upon a trial for manslaughter, it appeared that the deceased, at the time of the blow given, was in an infirm state of health, and this circumstance was observed upon on behalf of the prisoner, but Parke, J., in summing up, said, "It is said that the deceased was in a bad state of health, but that is perfectly immaterial, as, if the prisoner was so unfortunate as to accelerate her death, he must answer for it." R. v. Martin, 5 C. & P. 128; and see R. v. Wall, 28 St. Tr. 51, 145, Macdonald, C.B.

If a man be wounded, and the wound turn to a gangrene or fever for want of proper applications, or from neglect, and the man die of the gangrene or fever: see R. v. Flynn, 16 W. R. 319 (C. C. R. Ir.); or if it become fatal from the refusal of the party to undergo a surgical operation (R. v. Holland, 2 M. & Rob. 351); or if death result from an operation rendered advisable by the act of the accused (R. v. Davis, 15 Cox, 174, Mathew, J.); this is homicide, and murder or not, according to the circumstances under which the wound is given. 1 Hale, 428. But if it appeared that the man's death was caused by improper applications to the wound, and not by the wound itself, it would be otherwise. Id. Murder may be committed without any stroke or wound; e.g., by neglect or ill-treatment. R. v. Huggins, 17 St. Tr. 309, 374; 2 Ld. Raym. 1574; and see post, p. 783.

(a) In Upington v. Solomon [1879] 9 Buchanan, Cape Supreme Court Reports, 240, at p. 276, Sir H. de Villiers, C.J., said: "I never understood the law as to the corpus delicti to go so far as to hold that where witnesses swear that they saw the person shot by means of a gun, and where they saw the deceased actually dying, a jury may be called upon to say that there is no proof of death whatsoever. I have always understood this rule as to corpus delicti to apply to those cases in which death is relied upon from the fact of the disappearance of the deceased." See also R. v. Kenniff [1903] Queensland St. Rep. 17.

Evidence for the Defendant.

The defendant has to prove, either that the murder was not committed by him, or that the offence actually committed does not amount to murder. This defence may be, and frequently is, made out by the examination in chief of the witnesses for the prosecution; but if not, it may be proved from their cross-examination, or by witnesses called for the defence.

We have seen (ante, p. 780) that the prosecutor is not bound to prove that the homicide was committed from malice prepense. If he prove the homicide, the law presumes the malice; but the defendant may rebut the presumption, by proving that the homicide was justifiable, or excusable (see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 7, ante, p. 776), or that at most it amounted to manslaughter only, and not to murder.

Justifiable homicide is of three kinds:—1. Where the proper officer executes a criminal in strict conformity with his sentence. 2. Where an officer of justice, or other person acting in his aid, in the legal exercise of a particular duty, kills a person who resists or prevents him from executing it. 3. Where the homicide is committed in prevention of a forcible and atrocious crime: as, for instance, if a man attempt to murder or rob another, and be killed in the attempt, the slayer shall be acquitted and discharged. See Bracton de Coronâ, ff. 120 b, 121; 1 Hale, 487, 488; 1 Hawk. c. 28; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 7 (ante, p. 776).

Excusable homicide is of two kinds:—1. Where a man doing a lawful act, without any intention of hurt, by accident kills another; as, for instance, where a man is working with a hatchet, and the head by accident flies off, and kills a person standing by. This is called homicide per infortunium, or by misadventure: see Stanley v. Powell [1891] 1 Q. B. 86; Fost. 264. 2. Where a man kills another upon a sudden encounter, merely in his own defence, or in defence of his wife, child, parent, or servant, and not from any vindictive feeling; which is termed homicide se defendendo. See 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 7 and note (ante, p. 776).

Definitions of Murder and Manslaughter.

Murder is thus defined or described by Lord Coke (3 Inst. 47): "Where a person of sound memory and discretion—unlawfully killeth—any reasonable creature in being—and under the king's peace (ante, p. 780) —with malice aforethought, either express or implied" (post, p. 786).

Manslaughter is the unlawful and felonious killing of another without any malice either express or implied. R. v. Taylor, 2 Lewin, 215; and see Steph. Dig. Cr. L. (6th ed.) 409. It is of two kinds:—(a) Involuntary manslaughter; where a man, doing an unlawful act not amounting to felony, by accident kills another (see R. v. Franklin, 15 Cox, 163, post, p. 800); or where a man, by culpable neglect of a duty imposed upon him, is the cause of the death of another. And it may be stated generally, that that which constitutes murder, if done by design and of malice prepense in the eye of the law, constitutes manslaughter when arising from culpable negligence. See R. v. Hughes, Dears. & B. 248; 26 L. J. (M. C.) 202 (C. C. R.). (b) Voluntary manslaughter; where upon a sudden quarrel, two persons fight, and one of them kills the other; or where a man greatly provokes another, by some personal violence, etc., and the other immediately kills him.

1. Murder and manslaughter can be committed only by a person of sound memory and discretion. They cannot be committed by an idiot, lunatic, or infant, unless, indeed, he show a consciousness of doing wrong, and a discretion or discernment between good and evil. 4 Bl. Com. 195; 1 Hawk. c. 1. (See ante, pp. 11, 22–30.) On the trial of a child of thirteen years of age for murder by poisoning, Pollock, C.B., in drawing the distinction between murder and manslaughter, laid it down that no one could commit murder unless he was conscious that the act done was one which would be likely to cause death. R. v. Vamplew, 3 F. & F. 520. But if any person procure a madman, etc., to murder another, the procurer is guilty of the murder; 1 Hawk, c. 31, s. 7; although, perhaps, not present at the time it was committed. (See ante, p. 12.) It is no defence on behalf of a foreigner, charged in England with an offence committed here, that he did not know he was doing wrong, the act not being an offence in his own country. R. v. Esop, 7 C. & P. 456.

2. The killing must be unlawful and not excusable or justifiable. It may be by poisoning, striking, starving, drowning, and a thousand other forms of death by which human nature may be overcome. 4 Bl. Com. 193; 1 Hale, 431; 1 Hawk. c. 31, s. 4. Taking away a man's life by perjury is not, in law, murder; see R. v. Macdaniel, Fost. 131; 19 St. Tr. 745; 1 Leach, 44; 1 East, P. C. 333; and see 4 Bl. Com. 196, n.; although in foro conscientiæ it is as much so as killing with a sword. If a man, however, do any other act, of which the probable consequence may be and eventually is death, such killing may be murder, although no stroke were struck by himself; as was the case of the gaoler, who caused the death of a prisoner by imprisoning him in unwholesome air; R. v. Huggins, 17 St. Tr. 309, 376; 2 Ld. Raym. 1574, 1585; cf. R. v. Acton, 17 St. Tr. 462, 511, 526, 546: R. v. Bambridge, Id. 383, 397; of the unnatural son, who exposed his sick father to the air against his will, by reason whereof he died; 1 Hawk. c. 31, s. 5; of the harlot, who laid her child in an orchard, where a kite struck it and killed it, Crompton, 24: of the mother, who hid her child in a pig-stye, where it was devoured; and of the parish officers, who moved a child from parish to parish till it died from want of care and sustenance. 1 Hale, 431, 433; 4 Bl. Com. 197; 1 Hawk. c. 31, s. 6. So, where an indictment charged the death of a child to have been caused by its mother casting and throwing it on a heap of ashes, and leaving it there in the open air exposed to the cold, whereby it died, this was held to contain a sufficient charge of murder, inasmuch as it alleged a misfeasance; but if it had charged the death to have been occasioned by a mere nonfeasance, in the neglect of the defendant's maternal duties, it would have been bad, unless it had also showed that the child was of so tender an age, or was placed in such a situation, as to be unable to take care of itself. R. v. Waters, 1 Den. 356; 2 C. & K. 864; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 53; 3 Cox, 300; and see R. v. Pinhorn, 1 Cox, 70;

R. v. Hogan, 2 Den. 277; 20 L. J. (M. C.) 219: R. v. Cooper, 1 Den. 459; 2 C. & K. 876; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 168: R. v. Phillpot, Dears. 179; 22 L. J. (M. C.) 113 (C. C. R.): R. v. Walters, C. & Mar. 164. So, where an apprentice died from harsh treatment, and want of care upon the part of his master, whilst he was labouring under disease; this was held to be murder in the master. R. v. Squire, 3 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 13. But where the death of an apprentice results rather from incautious neglect by the master, however culpable, than from actual malice or wilful intention to injure, or obstinate and reckless persistence in doing an act necessarily attended with danger, a verdict of manslaughter may properly be returned. R. v. Self, 1 East, P. C. 226; 1 Leach, 137; and see R. v. Crumpton, C. & Mar. 597. But if the charge be of a nonfeasance, as in neglecting to supply food, the prosecutor must not only show a duty in the defendant to supply food, but also that the apprentice (or child) was of tender years, and unable to provide for himself; R. v. Friend, R. & R. 20: R. v. Marriott, 8 C. & P. 425; and that the defendant was in the actual possession of means to provide for him; R. v. Saunders, 7 C. & P. 277: R. v. Edwards, 8 C. & P. 611: R. v. Chandler, Dears. 453; 24 L. J. (M. C.) 109; 6 Cox, 519; the mere fact that he might have obtained such means by application to the guardians of the poor or to a relieving officer was not sufficient. R. v. Chandler, ubi supra: R. v. Rugg, 12 Cox, 16 (C. C. R.). In R. v. Jones, 19 Cox, 678, on a charge of manslaughter by neglect, it was held that presumptive evidence of means had been given by proof that the prisoner at a date prior to the offence had such means as, having regard to the circumstances, would presumably not be exhausted by the date of the neglect. Under s. 23 (2) of the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904 (4 Edw. 7, c. 15), post, p. 885, neglect to provide for the maintenance, etc., of a child is not excused by inability to do so without resort to the poor law. See R. v. Mabbett, 5 Cox, 339. If the death of a destitute person arises from neglect by a relieving officer to provide medical assistance, the officer may be convicted of manslaughter. R. v. Curtis, 15 Cox, 746, Hawkins, J. It has been held, on the authority of R. v. Squire, and R. v. Saunders, ubi supra, that where a husband and wife are living together, the legal obligation to maintain is on the husband, and that the wife cannot be convicted of manslaughter by neglect to supply proper food or medical aid. R. v. Forsyth, Chester Summer Assizes, July 25, 1899, Kennedy, J.: see R. v. Senior [1899] 1 Q. B. 283; 68 L. J. (Q. B.) 175 (C. C. R.); 17 Cox, 602. If a grown-up person chooses to undertake the charge of a human creature, helpless either from infancy, simplicity, lunacy, or other infirmity, he is bound to execute that charge without wicked negligence; and if a person who has chosen to take charge of a helpless creature lets it die by wicked negligence, that person is guilty of manslaughter. Mere negligence will not do; there must be wicked negligence, that is, negligence so great as to satisfy a jury that the prisoner had a wicked mind in the sense that he was reckless and careless whether the creature died or not. R. v. Nicholls, 13 Cox, 75, Brett, J. If a person has the custody of another who is helpless, and leaves that other with insufficient food or medical attendance, and so cause his death, he is criminally responsible. R. v. Marriott, 8 C. & P. 425: R. v. Instan [1893] 1 Q. B. 450 (C. C. R.); 62 L. J. (M. C.) 86; 17 Cox, 602: R. v. Senior [1899] 1 Q. B. 283, 292 (C. C. R.). But if a person, having the exercise of freewill, chooses to stay in a place where he receives insufficient food, and his health is injured, and death supervenes, the master is not criminally responsible. R. v. Smith, L. & C. 607, 625; 10 Cox, 82; 34 L. J. (M. C.) 153, 162, Erle, C.J.; and see post, p. 872. As to the facts necessary to support an indictment for killing or misusing a lunatic, see R. v. Pelham, 8 Q. B. 959; 15 L. J. (M. C.) 105. As to the obligation of a husband to supply necessaries for a wife living apart from him, and his liability if she dies for want of them, see R. v. Plummer, 1 C. & K. 600.

So, if one, under a well-grounded apprehension of personal violence, does an act which causes his death, as, for instance, jumps out of a window, or into a river, he who threatened is answerable for the consequences. R. v. Evans, 3 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 12: R. v. Hickman, 5 C. & P. 151: R. v. Pitts, C. & Mar. 284. R. v. Evans was followed in a colonial case (R. v. Grimes [1894] 15 *N. S. W. R. v. Knights was followed in R. v. Izod, 20 Cox, 690, Channell, J., where it was held that to warrant the conviction of a woman for the manslaughter of her newly-born child, she must be proved to have been guilty of negligence towards the child after it was completely born. In the latter case the correctness of the ruling of Brett, J., in R. v. Handley, as cited on p. 752 of the 22nd edition of this work (p. 785 of the present edition), was doubted by Channell, J., and it is pointed out in the note to the report of R. v. Izod that the exact words of the direction of Brett, J., to the jury in R. v. Handley (13 Cox, at p. 81) were: "But supposing that the prisoner had not made up her mind that the child should die, yet had determined that none but herself should be present at its birth, without intending final concealment, but only for the purpose of hiding her shame for a time, and had to that intent delivered herself, she would, in the eye of the law, have invested herself with a responsibility from the moment of birth, viz., that of the care and charge of a helpless creature; and if, after having assumed such care and charge, she allowed the child subsequently to die from her wicked negligence, that would make her guilty of manslaughter. . . . If they (the jury) were satisfied that the mother, having made up her mind to be alone at the birth, caused its death by wicked negligence after its birth, they would return a verdict of guilty."

called to the ruling in R. v. Knights, ubi supra; and see R. v. Middleshi 5 Cox, 275, Erle, J. In R. v. Pritchard [1901] 17 T. L. R. 310; 5 *L. J. So, if a mortal wound be given t a child whilst in the act of being born, for instance, upon the head as soon as the head appears and before the child has breathed, it may be murder, if the child is afterwards born alive and dies thereof. R. v. Senior, 1 Mood. Rep. (Law), 209), where a Chinaman had been robbed and brutally assaulted in a train, and thinking that his life was in danger, jumped from the train and was thereby killed. The principle of the English cases was approved in R. v. Martin, 8 Q. B. D. 54; 14 Cox, 633; and R. v. Halliday, 61 L. T. 701; 38 W. R. 256 (C. C. R.), in cases of assault. It seems immaterial whether the fear arises from actual violence or threat of it. R. v. Evans, ubi supra. And frightening a person to death by an assault or otherwise seems to be manslaughter at the least. R. v. Towers, 12 Cox, 530, Denman, J.

3. The person killed must be "a reasonable creature in being and under the King's peace." Therefore, to kill a child in its mother's womb is no murder; but if the child be born alive, and die by reason of the potion or bruises it received in the womb, it may be murder in the person who administered or gave them. 3 Co. Inst. 50: 1 Hawk. c. 31, s. 16: 1 Hale, 433. Thus, if a person, intending to procure abortion, does an act which causes a child to be born so much earlier than the natural time that it is born in a state much less capable of living, and afterwards dies in consequence of its exposure to the external world; the person who by this misconduct so brings the child into the world, and puts it thereby in a situation in which it cannot live, is guilty of murder; and the mere existence of a possibility that something might have been done to prevent the death will not render it less murder. R. v. West, 2 C. & K. 784; 2 Cox, 500. As to abortion, see post, p. 826. But a woman cannot be convicted even of manslaughter merely on evidence that, knowing she was near the time of delivery, she wilfully abstained from taking the necessary precautions to preserve the life of her child after its birth, in consequence of which it died. R. v. Knights, 2 F. & F. 46, Cockburn, C.J., and Williams, J. But in R. v. Handley, 13 Cox, 79, Brett, J., held (1) that a woman is guilty of the murder of her new-born child if, either before or after the birth of the child, she makes up her mind that it shall die, and, the child being born alive, she, with the intent that it shall die, leaves it to die, and it dies in consequence; (2) that she is guilty of murder if, without intending murder, she resolves to conceal the birth of the child by methods which will probably end in its death, and which do end in its death (see post, p. 825); and (3) that she is guilty of manslaughter, if, without intending the death of the child, she determines to be alone at the birth for the purpose of temporary concealment, and the child afterwards dies by reason of her wicked negligence. Before so ruling, the learned judge had his attention called to the ruling in R. v. Knights, ubi supra; and see R. v. Middleship, 5 Cox, 275, Erle, J. In R. v. Pritchard [1901] 17 T. L. R. 310; 36 L. J. Newsp. 119, Wright, J., stated that the third proposition was not a full statement of the law. So, if a mortal wound be given to a child whilst in the act of being born, for instance, upon the head as soon as the head appears and before the child has breathed, it may be murder, if the child is afterwards born alive and dies thereof. R. v. Senior, 1 Mood. C. C. 346; 1 Lewin, 183, n. But it must be proved that the entire child has actually been born into the world in a living state; R. v. Poulton, 5 C. & P. 329; and the fact of its having breathed is not conclusive proof thereof. R. v. Sellis, 7 C. & P. 850: R. v. Crutchley, 7 C. & P. 814. There must be an independent circulation in the child before it can be accounted alive. R. v. Enoch, 5 C. & P. 539: R. v. Wright, 9 C. & P. 754. A child is born alive when it exists as a live child, breathing and living by reason of breathing through its own lungs alone, without deriving any of its living or power of living by or through any connection with its mother. R. v. Handley, 13 Cox, 79, Brett, J. But the fact of the child's being still connected with the mother by the umbilical cord will not prevent the killing from being murder. R. v. Crutchley, ubi supra: R. v. Reeves, 9 C. & P. 25: R. v. Trilloe, 2 Mood. C. C. 260; C. & Mar. 650: R. v. Pritchard [1901] 17 T. L. R. 310, Wright, J.

As to killing alien enemies, see ante, p. 780.

4. Malice aforethought. Express malice.]—To amount to murder, the killing must be committed with malice aforethought. (See as to proof of malice and intent, ante, p. 308, et seq.) According to the early writers, malice is express or implied. Express malice is when one, with a sedate and deliberate mind, and formed design, doth kill another; which formed design is evidenced by external circumstances discovering that inward intention; as lying in wait, antecedent menaces, former grudges, and concerted schemes to do him some bodily harm. 1 Hale, 451. Neither shall he be guilty of a less crime, who kills another in consequence of such a wilful act as shows him to be an enemy to mankind in general; as going deliberately with a horse used to strike, or discharging a gun amongst a multitude of people. 1 Hawk. c. 29, s. 12: c. 31, s. 8. So, if a man resolve to kill the next person he meets, and do kill him, it is murder, although he knew him not; for it is universal malice. 4 Bl. Com. 200. And it may be necessary here to observe, that no provocation, however great, will extenuate or justify homicide, where there is evidence of express malice. See R. v. Mason, Fost. 132. So, where A. and B. having fallen out, A. said he would not strike, but would give B. a pot of ale to strike him; upon which B. did strike, and A. thereupon killed him; this as held to be murder. 1 Hawk. c. 31, s. 24. For criticism of these definitions, see Steph. Dig. Cr. Law (6th ed.), 407. As to the effect of proof that the defendant was drunk when he committed the homicide on the question of his malice, see R. v. Doherty, 16 Cox, 306, Stephen, J., and ante, p. 29. As to the effect of proving that the prisoner is insane, see ante, pp. 23–29, 183, 221.

Implied malice.]—And in many cases, where no malice is expressed or openly indicated, the law will imply it. Thus, where a man wilfully poisons another—in such a deliberate act the law presumes malice, though no particular enmity can be proved. 1 Hale, 455. So if a man kill another suddenly, without any, or without a considerable provocation; if he kill an officer of justice in the legal execution of his duty; or if, intending to do another felony (see post, p. 798), he undesignedly kill a man; in all these cases the law implies malice, and the offence is murder. But in all but the last of these cases there seems to be an intent to do bodily harm. Steph. Dig. Cr. Law (6th ed.), 409.

If two persons mutually agree to commit suicide together, and accordingly take poison or attempt to drown themselves together, but only one of them dies, the survivor is guilty of murder. R. v. Dyson, R. & R. 523; R. v. Alison, 8 C. & P. 418, Patteson, J.: R. v. Jessop, 16 Cox, 204, Field, J., R. v. Stormonth, 61 *J. Kennedy, J. In like manner, where A. procures a drug, and gives it to B. with her assent, in order that she may take it to procure abortion, and B., believing herself (though not being) pregnant, takes it for that purpose, and dies from its effects, this, it seems, is murder in A. In such a case, however, a conviction for manslaughter (for which offence only the grand jury had found a bill) was upheld. R. v. Gaylor, Dears. & B. 288; 7 Cox, 253 (C. C. R.). So where an indictment charged W. with murdering herself with arsenic, and the prisoner with inciting her to commit the said murder, and it appeared on the trial that W., who was pregnant, was persuaded by the prisoner to take arsenic for the purpose of procuring miscarriage, that she received the arsenic from him and took it, in his absence, with intent to procure miscarriage, it was held that the prisoner was an accessory before the fact to the self-murder of W. R. v. Russell, 1 Mood C. C. 356. But where the prisoner, at the request of a pregnant woman who wished to procure abortion, obtained for her a poisonous drug, knowing the purpose for which she wanted it, but being unwilling that she should use it, but she did use it and died in consequence, it was held that the prisoner was not guilty of murder. R. v. Fretwell, L. & C. 161; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 145; 9 Cox, 152 (C. C. R.): but see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, ss. 58, 59 (post, p. 826); and as to unintentional homicide in consequence of criminal acts, see post, p. 797, et seq.

As there are very many nice distinctions, however, upon this subject of malice prepense, express and implied, it may be desirable to consider the subject more fully and minutely, which we shall do under the following heads.

Killing by poison, or by surgical instruments.]—Of all the forms of death by which human nature may be overcome, the most detestable is that of poison; because it can of all others be the least prevented either by manhood or forethought. 3 Co. Inst. 48. And therefore, in all cases where a man wilfully administers poison to another, 1 Hale, 455, or lays poison for him, and either he or another takes it, and is killed by it (Id. 431), the law implies malice, although no particular enmity can be proved. 4 Bl. Com. 34. This rule applies where a man is plied with excessive quantities of drink with intent to kill him, or knowledge that it is likely to kill him. R. v. Packard, C. & Mar. 236. And if a person knowingly give poison to A. to administer as a medicine to B., but A. neglecting to do so, it is accidentally given to B. by a child or other unconscious agent, this is in law a poisoning by the party himself, as much as if he had administered it with his own hands. R. v. Michael, 2 Mood. C. C. 120; 9 C. & P. 356. If, however, it were administered by mistake and without gross negligence, or if it were laid with an innocent intention in the place from which the deceased took it, it is merely homicide by misadventure. So, if a physician or surgeon give his patient a potion or plaister to cure him, which, contrary to expectation, kills him, this also is neither murder nor manslaughter, but misadventure. Mirror, Book IV., c. 16 (Seld. Soc. Publ. Vol. VII., pp. 135–139). But the medical man must, at his peril, use proper skill and caution in administering a poisonous drug. R. v. Macleod, 12 Cox, 534. A distinction, indeed, has been taken between the administering of a potion, etc., by a regular physician, etc., and one who is not so, and the death in the latter case is said to be manslaughter at the least; Britton, c. 5; 4 Co. Inst. 251; but Hale very much questions the soundness of this distinction. 1 Hale, 430. And it seems that if a person, whether he be a regular practitioner or not, honestly and bonâ fide perform an operation, or use a dangerous instrument, which causes the patient's death, he is not guilty of manslaughter; R. v. Van Butchell, 3

C. & P. 629; but if he be guilty of criminal misconduct, arising from gross ignorance or criminal inattention, and not from mere error of judgment, then he will be guilty of manslaughter. R. v. Williamson, 3 C. & P. 635: R. v. Spiller, 5 C. & P. 333: R. v. Chamberlain, 10 Cox, 486: R. v. Simpson, 1 Lewin, 172: R. v. Ferguson, ib. 181: R. v. Spilling, 2 M. & Rob 107: R. v. Macleod, 12 Cox, 534. In R. v. Long, 4 C. & P. 398, 423, where the defendant, not a regular physician, killed a woman by an application, and the jury found that he entertained a criminal disregard of human life, he was convicted of and punished for manslaughter. See R. v. Senior, 1 Mood. C. C. 346; 1 Lewin, 183, n.: R. v. Ellis, 2 C. & K. 470. In R. v. Webb, 1 M. & Rob. 405; 2 Lewin, 196: Lord Lyndhurst laid down the following rule:—"In these cases there is no difference between a licensed physician or surgeon and a person acting as physician or surgeon without licence. In either case, if a party having a competent degree of skill and knowledge, makes an accidental mistake in his treatment of a patient, through which mistake death ensues, he is not thereby guilty of manslaughter; but if, where proper medical assistance can be had, a person totally ignorant of the science of medicine takes on himself to administer a violent and dangerous remedy to one labouring under disease, and death ensues in consequence of that dangerous remedy having been so administered, then he is guilty of manslaughter. If I entertained the least doubt of this position, I might fortify it by referring to the opinion of Lord Ellenborough in R. v. Williamson (ubi supra). I shall leave it to the jury to say, first, whether death was occasioned or accelerated by the medicines administered; and if they think it was, then I shall tell them, secondly, that the prisoner is guilty of manslaughter, if they think that in so administering the medicine he acted with a criminal intention or from very gross negligence." See also R. v. Crick, 1 F. & F. 519: R. v. Crook, Id. 521: R. v. Bull, 2 F. & F. 201: R. v. Markuss, 4 F. & F. 356: R. v. Chamberlain, 10 Cox, 486: R. v. Macleod, 12 Cox, 534. Upon such a charge, evidence cannot be gone into, on either side, of former cases treated by the prisoner, but experts can be asked their opinion as to the state of the accused, as shown by his treatment of the case in question. R. v. Whitehead, 3 C. & K. 202, Maule, J. Evidence is admissible of the effect on other patients of a drug said to have been used with fatal effects. R. v. Long, 4 C. & P. 398. The prisoner, a druggist, was in the habit of using bottles of a peculiar make and colour in which to send out poisons from his shop. The deceased sent to the prisoner for aconite, to be used as a liniment, and henbane to be taken internally. He also sent two bottles, one for the aconite and one for the henbane, both being bottles of the ordinary kind, but the bottle for the henbane being labelled "henbane," and also with the words "30 drops at a time." The prisoner, by mistake, put the aconite in the henbane bottle, deceased took a dose of it, and was poisoned. On the trial of the prisoner for manslaughter, Erle, C.J., put it to the jury that they ought not to call upon the prisoner for his defence, and that they could not convict, unless there was such a degree of complete negligence as the law meant by the word felonious. The prisoner had been put out of his ordinary course by the deceased's sending his own bottles, and although there was no doubt negligence in not observing the label on the bottle, yet the deceased had for years been sending to the shop for aconite, and only rarely for henbane. R. v. Noakes, 4 F. & F. 920. And on an indictment for manslaughter against a medical man by administering poison by mistake for some other drug, it is not sufficient for the prosecution merely to show that the prisoner, who dispensed his own drugs, supplied a mixture which contained a large quantity of poison; they are bound also to show that this happened through the gross negligence of the prisoner. R. v. Spencer, 10 Cox, 525, Willes, J.

Killing by fighting.]—Killing by fighting may be either murder, or manslaughter, or homicide se defendendo, according to circumstances.

1. Quarrels.]—If two persons quarrel and afterwards fight, and one of them kill the other—in such a case, if there intervened, between the quarrel and the fight, a sufficient cooling time for passion to subside and reason to interpose, the killing would be murder: Post. 296; 1 Hale, 453; Lord Morley's Case, 6 St. Tr. 769, 771: R. v. Oneby, 17 St. Tr. 29, 48; 2 Str. 766; but if such time had not intervened—if the parties, in their passion, fought immediately, or even if, immediately upon the quarrel, they went out and fought in a field (for this is deemed a continued act of passion), the killing in such a case would be manslaughter only, 3 Co. Inst. 51; 1 Hale, 453; 1 Hawk. c. 31, s. 29; Post. 295, whether the party killing struck the first blow or not. Post. 295; 1 Hale, 456; and see R. v. Snow, 1 Leach, 151; 1 East, P. C. 244; Re Barronet, 1 E. & B. 1; and 1 East, P. C. 241, 270. Lord Byron's Case, 19 St. Tr. 1177: R. v. Walters, 12 St. Tr. 114.

Therefore, if two persons deliberately fight a duel, and one of them be killed, the other and his second are guilty of murder, 1 Hale, 443, 453: 1 Hawk. c. 31, s. 31: 1 East, P. C. 225–241; see R. v. Oneby, ubi supra, no matter how grievous the provocation, or by which party it was given. R. v. Rice, 3 East, 581; 7 R. R. 523: R. v. Kinnear, 2 B. & Ald. 462. The second of the deceased also is deemed guilty of murder, as being present aiding and abetting; although Lord Hale seems to think the rule of law, as to principals in the second degree, too far strained in that case. 1 Hale, 443, 453. See R. v. Murphy, 6 C. & P. 103: R. v. Young, 8 C. & P. 644: R. v. Cuddy, 1 C. & K. 210.

Chance medley.]—Killing in chance medley was by 22 H. 8, c. 14 and 24 H. 8, c. 5, distinguished from murder by malice prepense. See 1 Hawk. c. 31, ss. 28, 29; 4 Bl. Com. 184; Woodburn's Case, 16 St. Tr. 54, 80. But even in the case of a sudden quarrel, where the parties immediately fight, the case may be attended with such circumstances as will indicate malice on the part of the party killing; and the killing then would be murder, and not merely manslaughter. If, for instance, the party killing began the attack under circumstances of undue advantage—as if A. and B. quarrel, and A. draw his sword and make a pass at B., and B. thereupon draw his sword and they fight and B. is killed; A. would be guilty of murder; for his making the pass before B. had drawn his sword shows that he sought his blood. Post. 295. So, where A. and B. quarrelled, and A. threw a bottle at B. and then drew his sword, and B. then threw the bottle back at A. and wounded him, upon which A. immediately stabbed him; this was held to be murder. R. v. Mawgridge, 17 St. Tr. 57; Kel. (J.) 119. But if the parties at the commencement attack each other upon equal terms, and afterwards, in the course of the fight, one of them in his passion snatch up a deadly weapon and kill the other with it; this would be manslaughter only. R. v. Snow, 1 Leach, 151; 1 East, P. C. 244: R. v. Taylor, 5 Burr. 2793: R. v. Anderson, 3 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 63. But if use of a deadly weapon was intended from the first, the killing is murder. R. v. Whiteley, 1 Lewin, 173: R. v. Kessal, 1 C. & P. 437. So, also use of a deadly weapon used after a feigned reconciliation. R. v. Selton, 11 Cox, 674, Hannen, J. Where a third person interferes to stop a fight or assault, and is killed, the killing is murder, unless the deceased were doing more than was necessary to stop the fight or assault. R. v. Bourne, 5 C. & P. 120.

The proper direction for the jury in such cases seems to be that given in R. v. Smith, 8 C. & P. 160, 162, by Bosanquet, J., with the concurrence of Bolland, B., and Coltman, J.:—"Did the prisoner enter into a contest with an unarmed man, intending to avail himself of a deadly weapon? If he did, it will amount to murder. But if he did not enter into the contest with the intention of using it, then the question will be, did he use it in the heat of passion in consequence of an attack made upon him? If he did, then it will be manslaughter. But there is another question, did he use the weapon in defence of his own life? Before a person can avail himself of that defence he must satisfy the jury that the defence was necessary, that he did all he could to avoid it, and that it was necessary to protect his own life, or to protect himself from such serious bodily harm as would give a reasonable apprehension that his life was in immediate danger. If he used the weapon having no other means of resistance and no means of escape, in such case, if he retreated as far as he could, he would be justified." Where after mutual blows between the defendant and the deceased the defendant knocked the deceased down, and after he was upon the ground, stamped upon his stomach and belly with great force, and thereby killed him; this was held to be only manslaughter. R. v. Ayes, R. & R. 166: cf. R. v. Rankin, R. & R. 43: R. v. Brown, 1 Leach, 176. But where two men fought, and one overpowered the other, and put a rope round his neck and strangled him, it was held murder. R. v. Shaw, 6 C. & P. 372: and see R. v. Thorpe, 1 Lewin, 171.

So, if there be any other circumstances in the case indicative of malice in the party killing, it will be murder. As, for instance, if two persons fight upon a sudden quarrel, and be separated, and one of them afterwards, having provided himself with a deadly weapon, lies in wait for the other, to have an opportunity, thus armed, to renew the quarrel, and they accordingly meet, quarrel, and fight, and the man who is armed kills the other, this is murder. See R. v. Snow, 1 Leach, 151; 1 East, P. C. 244, 245: R. v. Whiteley, 1 Lewin, 173. So, if two persons fight from malice, and pretend or feign a reconciliation, and they afterwards meet and suddenly fight upon the score of the old malice, and one of them be killed, this is murder, and not merely manslaughter. 1 Hale, 451. So, if B. challenge A., and A. refuse to meet him, but tell him that he shall be on his way to such a place upon business at such a time, and B. meets him on the way and assaults him, and they fight, and A. kills B.: if it appear that A. made this communication for the purpose of evading the law, by giving the fight the appearance of a sudden quarrel, the killing would be murder; but if the communication were made undesignedly it would be manslaughter only. 1 Hawk. c. 31, s. 25.

2. Unlawful contests.]—A tilt or tournament, the martial diversion of our ancestors, was nevertheless an unlawful act, unless held under the commandment of the King: see R. v. Coney, 8 Q. B. D. 534, at 549; and so are boxing and sword-playing, the succeeding amusements of their posterity: see 1 East, P. C. 270: R. v. Perkins, 4 C. & P. 537: R. v. Hargrave, 5 C. & P. 170: R. v. Murphy, 6 C. & P. 103; therefore, if a knight in the former case, or a gladiator in the latter, be killed, such killing is manslaughter. 4 Bl. Com. 183. And in cases of this kind, however "fair" the fight may have been, all who are present at it and parties to it are equally guilty of manslaughter. R. v. Turner, 4 F. & F. 339. It is said, however, that if the King command or permit such diversion, the act being in that case lawful, the killing would be misadventure only. Fost. 259; contrà, Hale, 473. And a sparring match with gloves fairly conducted is not unlawful, and therefore death caused by an injury received during such a match, does not amount to manslaughter. R. v. Young, 10 Cox, 371, Bramwell, B. If, however, parties meet, intending to fight till one gives in from exhaustion or injury received, such fighting is unlawful, whether the combatants fight in gloves or not. R. v. Orton, 14 Cox, 226 (C. C. R.). So also a sparring match with gloves fairly conducted at its commencement may become unlawful if the men fight on until they are so weak that a dangerous fall is likely to be the result of the continuance of the game. R. v. Young, ubi supra. All these cases are fully discussed in R. v. Coney, 8 Q. B. D. 534 (C. C. R.). And if, while engaged in a friendly game, as football, one of the players commit an unlawful act whereby death is caused to another, he is guilty of manslaughter. And the act, although in accordance with the rules of the game, would be unlawful if the person committing it intended to produce serious injury to another, or if, committing an act which he knows may produce serious injury, he is indifferent and reckless as to the consequences. R. v. Bradshaw, 14 Cox, 83, Bramwell, L.J.: R. v. Moore, 14 Times, L. R. 229. In the latter case Hawkins, J., refused to allow the rules of the game to be put in evidence, and ruled that the only question for the jury was whether the accused was guilty of illegal violence.

All struggles in anger, whether by fighting, wrestling, or in any other mode, are unlawful, and death occasioned by them is manslaughter at the least. R. v. Canniff, 9 C. & P. 359.

3. Self-defence.]—If two men fight upon a sudden quarrel, and one of them after a while endeavour to avoid any further struggle, and retreat as far as he can, until at length no means of escaping his assailant remain to him, and he then turn round and kill his assailant in order to avoid destruction; this homicide is excusable, as being committed in self-defence; Fost. 277; and, malice apart, it is little matter, in such a case, which struck the first blow at the beginning of the contest. Id.; 1 Hale, 479, 482; but see 1 Hawk. c. 29, s. 17; 63 J. P. 769: R. v. Smith, 8 C. & P. 160. And the same, of course, where one man attacks another, and the latter, without fighting, flies (see note, post, p. 797), and then turns round and kills his assailant, as above mentioned. But, in either of these cases, to show that it was homicide se defendendo, it must appear that the party killing had retreated either as far as he could, by reason of some wall, ditch, or other impediment, or as far as the fierceness of the assault would permit him; 1 Hale, 481, 483; for the assault may have been so fierce as not to allow him to yield a step, without manifest danger of his life, or enormous bodily harm; and then, in his defence, if there be no other way of saving his own life, he may kill his assailant instantly. The distinction between this kind of homicide and manslaughter, is, that here the slayer could not otherwise escape, although he would; in manslaughter he would not escape if he could. If, said Lindley, J., in R. v. Knock, 14 Cox, 1, 2, a man attacks me, I am entitled to defend myself, and the difficulty arises in drawing the line between mere self-defence and fighting. The test is this: a man defending himself does not want to fight, and defends himself solely to avoid fighting. Then, supposing a man attacks me and I defend myself, not intending or desiring to fight, but still fighting—in one sense—to defend myself, and I knock him down, and thereby unintentionally kill him, that killing is accidental.

And, as the manner of the defence, so is also the time, to be considered; for if the person assaulted do not fall upon the aggressor until the affray is over, or when he is running away, that is revenge and not defence. 4 Bl. Com. 185. Neither, under the cover of self-defence, will the law permit a man to screen himself from the guilt of deliberate murder; for if A. and B. agree to fight a duel, and A. give the first onset, and B. retreat as far as he safely can, and then kill A., this is murder, because of the previous malice and concerted design. 1 Hale, 479.

Under this excuse of self-defence, the principal civil and natural relations are comprehended; therefore master and servant, parent and child, husband and wife, killing an assailant in the necessary defence of each other respectively, are excused: the act of the relation assisting being construed the same as the act of the party himself. 1 Hale, 484; 4 Bl. Com. 182. And where under circumstances that might reasonably have induced the belief that a man was cutting his wife's throat their son shot at and killed his father, it was held that if the son had reasonable grounds for believing and honestly believed that his act was necessary for the defence of his mother, the homicide was excusable. R. v. Rose, 15 Cox, 540, Lopes, J.

Lord Bacon (Elem. c. 5; see also 1 Hawk, c. 28, s. 26) mentions a case where two persons being shipwrecked got on the same plank, but, finding it not able to save them both, one of them thrust the other from it, and he is drowned, and says that this homicide is excusable through unavoidable necessity, and upon the principle of self-defence. This dictum is, however, unsupported by authority, and if Lord Bacon meant to lay down the broad proposition that a man may save his own life by killing, if necessary, an innocent and unoffending neighbour, it certainly is not now law. R. v. Dudley, 14 Q. B. D. 273, 286; 54 L. J. (M. C.) 32; 15 Cox, 624. Therefore a man who, in order to escape death from hunger, kills another for the purpose of eating his flesh, is guilty of murder; although at the time of the act he is in such circumstances that he believes, and has reasonable ground for believing, that it affords the only chance of preserving his own life. Id. Dr. Bishop (American Criminal Law (8th ed.), vol. 1, s. 348 a) suggests that the offence was manslaughter only. On the subject of "choice of evils," see Mayne, Indian Criminal Law (ed. 1896), p. 364. R. v. Stratton, 21 St. Tr. 1046, 1224.

If, when two persons are fighting, a third comes up, and takes the part of one of them, and kills the other; this will be manslaughter in the third party; 1 Hawk. c. 31, ss. 35, 36; and murder or manslaughter in the person whom he assisted, according as the fight was deliberate and premeditated, or upon a sudden quarrel. Id. s. 55. If the fighting, however, were deliberate, or otherwise of malice, and the third party, when he interfered, knew it to be so, the killing would be murder, both in the party who thus interfered, and in the person whom he assisted. 1 East, P. C. 291, 292. If, on the other hand, the third party who thus interferes be killed, it is but manslaughter. Id.; and see Anon., 12 Co. Rep. 87; Kel. (J.) 60.

Killing upon provocation.]—No provocation whatever can render homicide justifiable, or even excusable; but provocation may reduce the offence to manslaughter. If a man kill another suddenly, without any, or, indeed, without a considerable provocation, the law implies malice, and the homicide is murder; R. v. Noon, 6 Cox, 137: R. v. Welsh, 11 Cox, 336; but if the provocation were great, and such as must have greatly excited him, the killing is manslaughter only. R. v. Mawgridge, 17 St. Tr. 57; Kel. (J.) 119, 135; 1 Hale, 466; Fost. 290, 296, 299. In considering, however, whether the killing upon provocation amounts to murder or manslaughter, the instrument wherewith the homicide was effected must also be taken into consideration; for if it were effected with a deadly weapon, the provocation must be great indeed to extenuate the offence to manslaughter; if with a weapon or other means not likely or intended to produce death, a less degree of provocation will be sufficient: in fact, the mode of resentment must bear a reasonable proportion to the provocation, to reduce the offence to manslaughter. Where some provoking words being used by a soldier to a woman, she gave him a box on the ear, and the soldier immediately gave her a blow with the pommel of his sword on the breast, and then ran after her, and stabbed her in the back, this was at first deemed murder; but it appearing afterwards that the blow given to the soldier was with an iron patten, and that it drew a great deal of blood, the offence was held to be manslaughter only. R. v. Stedman, Fost. 292. Where two soldiers demanded to be admitted to a public-house to drink, and the landlord refused, because it was eleven o'clock at night; one of them, however, upon the door being afterwards opened to let out company, rushed in, and whilst the landlord was struggling to get him out, the other soldier struck the landlord on the head with a sharp instrument and killed him: this was held to be murder, notwithstanding the struggle with the other soldier; besides, the landlord had a right to put him out of his house. R. v. Willoughby, 1 East, P. C. 288; 3 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 42. So, where a park-keeper, having found a boy stealing wood, tied him to a horse's tail, and dragged him along the park, and the boy died of the injuries he thereby received: this was held to be murder. R. v. Halloway, Cro. Cor. 131; 1 Hale, 454. So, in all other cases where, upon a sudden provocation, one beats another in a cruel and unusual manner, so that he dies, it is murder. 4 Bl. Com. 199; 1 Hawk. c. 31, s. 33: and see R. v. Reason and Tranter, 16 St. Tr. 1; 1 Str. 499; Fost. 292. An unwarrantable imprisonment of a man's person, however, has been held sufficient provocation to make a killing, even with a sword, manslaughter only. Protector v. Buckner, Sty. 467: R. v. Withers, 1 East, P. C. 233. Therefore, where a constable took a man without a warrant, upon a charge which gave him no authority to do so, and the prisoner ran away, and J. S., who was with the constable all the time, ran after the prisoner, who, to prevent his being retaken, killed J. S.; it was held to be manslaughter only, although, whilst under the charge of the constable, the prisoner struck the man who gave the charge, because a blow under the provocation of the illegal arrest would not justify the constable in detaining him, unless the blow were likely to be followed by dangerous consequences, and formed a new and distinct ground of detainer. R. v. Curvan, 1 Mood. C. C. 132. See R. v. Thompson, Id. 80 (post, p. 807). An order by a policeman to move on given to a person playing music in a street, followed by a push to give effect to the remonstrance, is not provocation excusing use of a dangerous weapon. R. v. Hagan, 8 C. & P. 167. Where A., to prevent B. from fighting with his brother, laid hold of him and held him down, but struck no blow, upon which B. stabbed A.; it was held, that if A. did nothing more than was necessary to prevent B. from beating his brother, and had died of the stab, the offence of B. would have been murder: but that if A. did more than was necessary to prevent the beating of his brother, it would have been manslaughter only. R. v. Bourne, 5 C. & P. 120. If a man pulls another's nose, or offer him any other great personal indignity, and the other thereupon immediately kills him, it is manslaughter only. Kel. (J.) 135; 4 Bl. Com. 191. Or if a man takes another in adultery with his wife, and kills him directly upon the spot, this is manslaughter merely. 1 Hale, 486: R. v. Manning, Sir T. Raym, 212: R. v. Maddy, 1 Ventr. 158: R. v Pearson, 2 Lewin, 216: R. v. Kelly, 2 C. & K. 814. So, if a father sees another person in the act of committing an unnatural crime with his son, and instantly kills him, it is manslaughter only: but if, hearing of it, he goes in quest of the party and kills him, it is murder. R. v. Fisher, 8 C. & P. 182. Where a boy, after fighting with another, ran home bleeding to his father, and the father immediately took a small cudgel, and ran three-quarters of a mile to the place where the other boy was, and struck him a single blow of the stick, of which blow the boy afterwards died; this was held to be manslaughter only. Anon., 12 Co. Rep. 87; and see Fost. 294. Where a man was indicted for the murder of his wife, and evidence was given that she assaulted him, to prove the nature of the assault which the accused had reason to apprehend, evidence was admitted of previous assaults and their character and effect. R. v. Hopkins, 10 Cox, 229, Byles, J. And where a father, seeing his daughter violently assaulted by her husband, struck the latter a fatal blow in strong resentment, it was held manslaughter. R. v. Harrington, 10 Cox, 370, Cockburn, C.J. Where a mob threw a pickpocket into a pond for the purpose of ducking him, but he was unfortunately drowned; this was held to be manslaughter. R. v. Fray, 1 East, P. C. 236.

Insufficient provocation.]—But as a general rule, no words or gestures, however opprobrious or provoking, will be considered in law to be provocation sufficient to reduce homicide to manslaughter, if the killing be effected with a deadly weapon, or an intention to do the deceased some grievous bodily harm be otherwise manifested; R. v. Welsh, 11 Cox, 336; and see Lord Morley's Case, 6 St. Tr. 769, 771: R. v. Maugridge, 17 St. Tr. 57, 66; Kel. (J.) 119: R. v. Chetwynd, 18 St. Tr. 289, 312; Steph. Dig. Cr. Law (6th ed.), p. 185; but if effected with a blow of a fist, or with a stick, or other weapon not likely to kill, it is manslaughter only. Fost. 290, 291; 1 Hale, 456. And if there be a provocation by blows, which are not sufficiently violent in themselves to reduce the killing below the crime of murder, yet if they be accompanied by very aggravated words and gestures, this may make it manslaughter only. R. v. Sherwood, 1 C. & K. 556: R. v. Smith, 4 F. & F. 1066. In the case last named the assault was very slight, although of a very offensive nature, spitting in the prisoner's face, but accompanied by words of great provocation. And under special circumstances there may be such a provocation by words as will reduce a killing which would otherwise be murder to manslaughter; for instance, if a husband suddenly hearing from his wife that she had committed adultery, he having had no idea of such a thing before, were thereupon to kill his wife, it might be manslaughter. R. v. Rothwell, 12 Cox, 145, Blackburn, J.

But in all cases, to reduce a homicide upon provocation to manslaughter, it is essential that the battery, wounding, etc., appear to have been inflicted immediately upon the provocation being given; for if there be a sufficient cooling time for passion to subside and reason to interpose, and the person so provoked afterwards kill the other, this is deliberate revenge, and not heat of blood, and accordingly amounts to murder. Fost. 296: R. v. Thomas, 7 C. & P. 817. The prisoner and the deceased, who were previously on intimate terms, were at a public-house drinking, when a scuffle ensued, and the deceased struck the prisoner in the eye and gave him a black eye; the prisoner called for the police and went away upon the policeman coming up; in about five minutes, however, he returned and stabbed the deceased with a knife which he usually carried about him: Lord Tenterden, C.J., said that it was not every slight provocation, even by a blow, which will, when the party receiving it strikes with a deadly weapon, reduce the offence from murder to manslaughter; and that, if there had been any evidence of an old grudge between the parties, the crime would probably be murder: but he left it to the jury to say, whether in the interval during which the prisoner was absent, there was time for his passion to cool and reason to gain dominion over his mind; if not, they should find him guilty of manslaughter only. R. v. Lynch, 5 C. & P. 324; cf. R. v. Eagle, 2 F. & F. 827, Erle, C.J. Again, where the prisoner was at the house of the deceased's mother, who desired the deceased to turn the prisoner out, and he did so, giving him a kick at the time, upon which the prisoner said he would make him remember it, and went home, about 300 yards, passed through his bedroom to a kitchen adjoining, and into the pantry, where he kept a knife, and having got it, returned hastily, and met the deceased coming towards him with his hat, when a conversation ensued, and they walked together, when the deceased giving the prisoner his hat, the prisoner swore he would have his rights, and stabbed the deceased in two places, saying he had served him right: after this the prisoner ran home, repassed through the rooms to the pantry, and then went to bed, where he was shortly afterwards apprehended, and the knife found on the shelf in the pantry; Tindal, C.J., told the jury, that the principal question was, whether the wounds were given by the prisoner whilst smarting under a provocation so recent, as showing that he might be considered at the moment not master of his understanding, in which case it would be manslaughter only; or whether, after the provocation, there had been time for the blood to cool and reason to resume its sway, before the wound was inflicted, in which case the offence would be murder; the jury found the prisoner guilty of murder. R. v. Hayward, 6 C. & P. 157. If there be evidence of express malice, the killing will be murder, however great the provocation. R. v. Mason, Fost. 132; 1 East, P. C. 239; and see Fost. 296: R. v. Kirkham, 8 C. & P. 115.

Killing by correction.—The right of parents, schoolmasters, etc., to inflict chastisement on children or apprentices, is recognized at common law. Combe's case, 9 Co. Rep. 76 a; Halliwell v. Counsell, 38 L. T. (N. S.) 176; Cleary v. Booth [1893] 1 Q. B. 465. The right to chastise servants was also recognized at common law. See R. v. Mawgridge, 17 St. Tr. 57, Kel. (J.) 133; 33 H. 8, c. 12, ss. 6, 12. And shipmasters are said to be entitled to inflict reasonable corporal punishment at sea on seamen for disobeying orders. The Agincourt, 1 Hagg. Adm. 271: Lamb v. Burnett, 1 Cr. & J. 291. As to servants who are not apprentices, the right is in desuetude. As to seamen, it is controlled by 57 & 58 Vict. c. 60, ss. 220–238. As to parents, guardians, etc., it is preserved by 4 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 28 (post, p. 886). Where a parent or person in loco parentis is moderately correcting his child, a master his servant or scholar, or an officer punishing a criminal, and he happens to occasion his death, it is only misadventure; but if he exceed the bounds of moderation, either in the manner, the instrument, or the quantity of punishment, and death ensue, it is manslaughter at the least, and in some cases (according to the circumstances) murder. 1 Hale, 474: R. v. Grey, Kel. (J.) 64. And see R. v. Wall, 28 St. Tr. 51, 144, 145, Macdonald, C.B.: R. v. Bird, 5 Cox, 1, 10: R. v. Drake [1903] 22 N. Z. L. R. 478. Where a master corrected his servant with an iron bar, and a schoolmaster stamped on his scholar's belly, so that each of the sufferers died; these were held to be murders; because the correction being excessive, and such as could not proceed but from a bad heart, it was equivalent to a deliberate act of killing. Kel. (J.) 133, 134; Fost. 262; 1 Hawk. c. 29, s. 5. So, in all cases where the correction is inflicted with a deadly weapon, and the party dies of it, it will be murder;

if with an instrument not likely to kill, though improper for the purpose of correction, it will be manslaughter. Fost. 262. See R. v. Hopley, 2 F. & F. 201. Beating a child for theft so severely as to cause death has been held manslaughter. Anon., 1 East, P. C. 261; 3 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 136. A mother being angry with one of her children, took up a poker, and on his running to the door of the room, which was open, threw it after him and killed another child who was entering the room at the time; and it was held to be manslaughter, although she did not intend to hit the child she threw the poker at, but merely to frighten him; because it was an improper mode of correction. R. v. Conner, 7 C. & P. 438. In R. v. Cheeseman, 7 C. & P. 455, maltreatment and cruel and excessive correction of a child with fatal results by a person in loco parentis was held manslaughter only where the defendant honestly believed the child to be malingering. Where the father of a child two years and a half old beat it with a strap on the lower part of its back and on its thighs on its committing some childish fault, and the death of the child was accelerated by the beating, this was held to be manslaughter. R. v. Griffin, 11 Cox, 402. For the prisoner it was urged that there was no case to go to the jury, as the father had a right to correct his child; but Martin, B., after consulting with Willes, J., ruled that the law as to correction had reference only to a child capable of appreciating correction, and not to an infant two years and a half old, and that although a slight slap might be lawfully given to an infant by her mother, more violent treatment of an infant so young by her father would not be justifiable. Id. Where a master struck his servant with one of his wife's clogs, because he had not cleaned them, and death unfortunately ensued, it was held to be manslaughter only, because the clog was very unlikely to cause death, and the master consequently could not have the intention of taking away the servant's life by hitting him with it. R. v. Turner, Comb. 407, 408, cit.: and see R. v. Wiggs, 1 Leach, 378, n.; 3 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 135, where the defendant threw a stick at his sheep-boy for his negligence, and killed him; R. v. Leggett, 8 C. & P. 191, a case of alleged maltreatment of a seaman by the captain and mate of his ship. As to corporal punishment by order of a court martial, see R. v. Wall, 28 St. Tr. 51, 145.

Killing in defence of person or property.]—If any person attempts to rob or murder another in or near the highway (R. v. Bull, 9 C. & P. 22) or in a dwelling-house, or attempts burglariously to break any dwelling-house in the night-time, and is killed in the attempt, the slayer shall be acquitted and discharged; for the homicide is justifiable, and the killing is without felony. See 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 7 (ante, p. 776): and see 1 Hale, 481, 482. And the same, where a man is killed in attempting to burn a house; 1 Hale, 488; or where a woman kills a man who attempts to ravish her; Bac. Elem. 34; 1 Hale, 485; 1 Hawk. c. 28, s. 21; or where a man is killed in attempting to break open a house in the daytime, with intent to rob, 1 Hale, 488, or to commit any other forcible and atrocious crime. Bracton Pl. Cor. 155; Fost. 273; 1 Hale, 484; R. v. Levett, Cro. Car. 538, cit.; Fost. 299: R. v. Cooper, Cro. Car. 544: R. v. Ford, Kel. (J.) 51; Fost. 274: see R. v. Symondson, 60 J. P. 645, Kennedy, J. The killing need not be in self-defence, but may be in defence of another against whose person or property serious felony is threatened. R. v. Rose, 15 Cox, 540, Lopes, J.: and see Handcock v. Baker, 2 B. & B. 260; 5 R. R. 857. Thus not only the party whose person or property is thus attacked, but his servants or other members of his family, and even strangers who are present at the time, are equally justified in killing the assailant. 1 Hale, 483; Post. 274; R. v. Rose, ubi supra (a). The above rule, however, does not extend to felonies without force, such as picking pockets, 1 Hale, 488, nor to misdemeanors of any kind: and even in cases within the rule, it must be proved that the intent to commit such forcible and atrocious crime was clearly manifested by the felon, 1 Hale, 484, otherwise the homicide will be manslaughter at least, if not murder. Where a servant set to watch in his master's garden at night, shot a person whom he saw going into his master's hen-roost; it was held that he was not justified in so doing, unless he had fair ground to believe his own life to be in actual danger. R. v. Scully, 1 C. & P. 319; 28 R. R. 780: and see R. v. Weston, 14 Cox, 346, Cockburn, C.J., as to use of firearms. A constable found a man wrongfully carrying off wood (a misdemeanor); he did not know that the man had been twice before convicted, which made the offence felony. He fired at him and wounded him. Held that he had no justification. R. v. Dadson, 2 Den. 35; 3 C. & K. 148; 20 L. J. (M. C.) 57 (C. C. R.). In cases within the rule, it may be necessary to observe, that the party whose person or property is attacked is not obliged to retreat, as in other cases of self-defence, but may even pursue the assailant until he find himself or his property out of danger. 1 East, P. C. 271; Post. 273; and see Aldrich v. Wright, 53 New Hampshire, 398, where the English authorities are collected. But he must not strike blows except in self-defence. See R. v. Knock, 14 Cox, 1 (b).

What we have now said relates to felonies by force. In the case of forcible misdemeanors, such as trespass in taking goods, although the owner may justify beating the trespasser, in order to make him desist, yet, if it kill him, it will be manslaughter. 1 Hale, 485, 486. Where the defendant had kicked a trespasser out of his house and the injuries received caused the death of the trespasser, this was held to be manslaughter. R. v. Wild, 2 Lewin, 214. Or if, instead of beating him, he attack him with a deadly weapon, it would perhaps be murder, particularly if the wound were given after the party had desisted from the trespass. 1 Hale, 473. See R. v. Smith, 3 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 132, where a man was shot while masquerading as a ghost. But in defence of a man's house, the owner or his family may kill a trespasser who would forcibly dispossess him of it, in the same manner as he might, by law, kill in self-defence a man who attacks him personally; with this distinction, however, that in defending his house he need not retreat, as in other cases of self-defence, for that would be giving up his house to his adversary. 1 Hale, 485, 486.

Personal assaults, where the party assaulted kills his adversary, are considered ante, pp. 789–796. The right of killing another in self-defence does not extend to cases where a man is killed at sea, and eaten to save his comrades from otherwise an inevitable starvation. R. v. Dudley, 14 Q. B. D. 273; 54 L. J. (M. C.) 32; 15 Cox, 624 (ante, p. 792).

Killing without intention whilst doing another act.]—If a person, whilst

(a) In a colonial case, R. v. Theriault [1894] 32 New Brunswick, 504, where, on an indictment for murder, there was evidence that the accused acted under a reasonable apprehension of grievous bodily harm to his wife and family, it was held that this belief was a justification for the homicide on the authority of R. v. Bull (ante, p. 796); and R. v. Smith, 8 C. & P. 160 (ante, p. 790).

(b) In Beard v. U. S. [1894] 158 U. S. 550, 560, it was held that a man assailed on his own land without provocation by a person armed with a deadly weapon and apparently seeking his life was not bound to retreat, but might stand his ground: and is not guilty of murder or manslaughter if he kill his adversary by a blow given simply with the object of protecting himself.

In Alberty v. U. S., 162 U. S. 499, where the accused had found a man attempting in the night-time to get into his wife's room by a window, it was held that he was right to repel the attempt by force, and was under no obligation to retreat if attacked.

doing or attempting to do another act, undesignedly kill a man—if the act intended or attempted were a felony, the killing is murder; if unlawful, but not amounting to felony, the killing is manslaughter (R. v. Hodgson, 1 Leach, 6; S. C. sub nom. R. v. Hubson, 1 East P. C. 258): if lawful, homicide by misadventure merely. R. v. Woodburn, 16 St. Tr. 54, 80. A distinction appears to have been taken at one time between unlawful acts which are mala in se, and mala prohibita. But it is doubtful whether this distinction is now of any value, and the unlawfulness of the act would now be determined by the law of England, and not by reference to the law of nature, or any moral standard. See R. v. Senior [1899] 1 Q. B. 283; 68 L. J. Q. B. 175: R. v. Instan [1893] 1 Q. B. 450. Thus, homicide in consequence of unlawful assembly is manslaughter; R. v. McNaughten, 14 Cox, 576 (Ir.); as is homicide due to an unlawful act in a game of football; R. v. Bradshaw, 14 Cox, 83 (and see ante, p. 791); or by kicking out a trespasser. R. v. Wild (ante, p. 797): R. v. Bruce, 2 Cox, 262, Erle, J.; and a person selling unwholesome food is liable for manslaughter of persons dying in consequence of eating it: R. v. Stevenson, 3 F. & F. 106: R. v. Kempson, 28 L. J. Newsp. 477 (and see ante, p. 2). If a man shoot at another's poultry, with intent to steal them, and by accident kill a man, it has been said to be murder (see R. v. Woodburn, 16 St. Tr. 57, 80); if without such intent, it is manslaughter, the act of shooting at the poultry being unlawful and not felonious; Fost. 258; but in R. v. Keate [1697] Comb. 406, 409, Holt, C.J., says that Coke's dictum on this subject (3 Inst. 56) is "too large. There must be a design of mischief to the person, or to commit a felony or great riot," and considerable doubt was expressed by Stephen, J., whether the rule that if a person whilst committing or attempting to commit a felony undesignedly kills a man—as in the case put above, of a person shooting at poultry with intent to steal them—such killing is murder, is not too broadly stated, and whether it ought not to be limited to cases where a person whilst committing or attempting to commit a felony does an act which is known to be dangerous to life, and likely in itself to cause death—as in the case of a person setting fire to a house with intent to defraud—and thus undesignedly killing a man. R. v. Serné, 16 Cox, 311; and cf. R. v. Horsey, 3 F. & F. 287, Bramwell, B. Where the prisoner was charged with the murder of a woman as the result of a felonious operation performed by him upon her (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 58), Bigham, J., told the jury that if they were of opinion that the deceased died as a result of the prisoner's unlawful operation, he was guilty of murder, but added that if they should be of opinion that the prisoner could not as a reasonable man have expected death to result, they might find a verdict of manslaughter. R. v. Whitmarsh, 62 J. P. 711; followed by Lawrance, J., in R. v. Bottomley [1903] Liverpool Assizes, 38 L. J. Newsp. 270; 115 L. T. J. 88; cf. R. v. Radyalski, 24 Victoria L. R. 687: R. v. Dowdle, 26 Victoria L. R. 637. In R. v. Greenwood, 7 Cox, 404, Wightman, J., told the jury that they might ignore the doctrine of constructive malice and return a verdict of manslaughter in a case where a child had died in consequence of a felony committed on her by the prisoner. And there appears to be considerable divergence of opinion amongst the judges as to the proper direction to the jury in these cases; see 33 L. J. Newsp. 546, 615.

If a man deliberately shoot at A., and miss him, but kill B., this is murder. Fost. 261; 1 Hale, 438, 441. So, if he stab at A., and by accident strike and kill B., it is murder. R. v. Hunt, 1 Mood. C. C. 93: and see R. v. Latimer, 17 Q. B. D. 359 (C. C. R.). If a man lay poison for A., and B. (against whom he had no malicious intent) take it, and it kill him, this is likewise murder. 1 Hale 436: R. v. Saunders, Plowd. 473:

R. v. Gore, 9 Co. Rep. 81. So, if whilst two men are deliberately fighting, and a third go between them to part them, and be killed by one of them, it is murder, 1 Hale, 441, whether he were killed accidentally or designedly. If a man throw a stone at a horse, and it hit the rider and kill him, it is manslaughter. 1 Hale, 39, 475. If, when engaged in an unlawful or dangerous sport, a man kill another by accident, it is manslaughter; Fost, 259, 260, 261; 1 Hale, 472, 473; 1 Hawk. c. 29, s. 6; if the sport were lawful and not dangerous, it would be homicide by misadventure merely. Fost. 260. So, if a man, intending to kill a person attempting to commit a forcible and atrocious crime against his person or property (see ante, pp. 791, 796), by mistake kill one of his own family, it is homicide by misadventure merely. See Cro. Car. 538; Fost. 299. Where a man is at work with a hatchet, and the head of it flies off and kills a bystander, this is homicide by misadventure. 1 Hawk. c. 29, s. 2. So, if a man, shooting at game, by accident kill another, it is homicide by misadventure merely, even although the party be unqualified; Fost. 259; for the use of firearms by an unqualified person was merely a prohibited act, and not malum in se (v. supra).

There are two seeming exceptions, however, to the above rule.

First. If two persons be fighting under such circumstances, that if one were killed it would be manslaughter only in the other; if in such a case an innocent party be unintentionally killed by one of them, it is manslaughter only. Fost. 262: R. v. Brown, 1 Leach, 148; 1 East, P. C. 231, 245, 274. This perhaps is not strictly an exception; for the act in which the parties are engaged, namely, the fighting, is not in itself felonious, although the result of it may be so. See ante, p. 789.

Secondly. Where an act of omission or commission, in itself lawful, is at the same time dangerous, it must appear, in order to render an unintentional homicide from it excusable, that the party whilst doing the act, acted without gross negligence, in that he used such a degree of caution as to make it improbable that any danger or injury should arise from it to others; if not, the homicide will be manslaughter at the least, the doctrine being well established that act or omission arising from culpable neglect of duty and having a fatal result is manslaughter, and if done by design or of malice prepense would be murder. R. v. Hughes, Dears. & B. 248; 26 L. J. (M. C.) 202; 7 Cox, 301 (C. C. R.). Where a dangerous and unlawful act is done, even in sport, if death results it is manslaughter: e.g. where the prisoners in sport had thrown stones down a coal mine, which broke a scaffolding therein and overturned a corf in which the deceased was, and precipitated him to the bottom of the mine. R. v. Fenton, 1 Lewin, 179, Tindal, C.J. If a workman throws stones or rubbish, etc., from a house, and thereby kills a person passing underneath it, it is murder, manslaughter, or homicide by misadventure, according to the degree of precaution taken by him that no person should be injured by them, and to the necessity of such precaution. R. v. Hull, Kel. (J.) 40. If he did it without previously warning the persons beneath, and at a time when it was likely that persons were passing, it would be murder; 3 Co, Inst. 57; if at a time when it was not likely that any persons were passing, it would be manslaughter; Fost. 262; if in a retired place, where no persons were in the habit of passing, or likely to pass, it would be misadventure merely. Fost. 262; 1 Hale, 472, 475. But if he previously gave warning to the persons beneath,—then, if it happened in a country village, where few persons pass, it is misadventure only: Fost. 263; 1 Hale, 472, 475: if in London, or other populous towns, Kel. (J.) 40, at a time when the streets are full, Fost. 263, it would be manslaughter.

Where death results in consequence of a negligent act, it would seem that to create criminal responsibility the degree of negligence must be so gross as to amount to recklessness. Mere inadvertence, while it might create civil liability, would not suffice to create criminal liability. See R. v. Noakes, 4 F. & F. 920: R. v. Markuss, ib. 356, Willes, J.: R. v. Finney, 12 Cox, 625, Lush, J.: R. v. Doherty, 16 Cox, 306, Stephen, J.: Hammack v. White, 31 L. J. (C. P.) 131, Willes, J. And it is not sufficient to create criminal liability to show that the act which caused death constituted a tort. R. v. Lowe, 3 C. & K. 123; 4 Cox, 449, Campbell, C.J.: R. v. Franklin, 15 Cox, 163, Field, J.: R. v. Doherty, ubi supra.

In all such cases it must appear that the death was the direct and immediate result of the personal neglect or default of the defendant. For instance, where trustees appointed under a local Act for the purpose of repairing roads within a particular district, with a power to contract for executing such repairs, neglected so to contract, and by reason of such neglect one of such roads became out of repair, and a person using it was accidentally killed in consequence of its so being out of repair, it was held that the trustees were not chargeable with manslaughter. R. v. Pocock, 17 Q. B. 34; 6 Cox, 172. And see R. v. Ledger, 2 F. & F. 857: R. v. Haines, 2 C. & K. 368 (post, p. 803).

Contributory negligence.]—It is no defence to an indictment for manslaughter, where the death of the deceased is shown to have been caused in part by the negligence of the prisoner, that the deceased was also guilty of negligence, and so contributed to his own death. R. v. Swindall, 2 C. & K. 230; 2 Cox, 141. In summing up, Pollock, C.B., said: "The prisoners are charged with contributing to the death of the deceased by their negligence and improper conduct; and if they did so, it matters not whether he was deaf, or drunk, or negligent, or in part contributed to his own death; for in this consists a great distinction between civil and criminal proceedings. If two coaches run against each other, and the drivers of both are to blame, neither of them has any remedy for damages against the other. But in the case of loss of life, the law takes a totally different view: for there each party is responsible for any blame that may ensue, however large the share may be; and so highly does the law value human life, that it admits of no justification wherever life has been lost, and the carelessness or negligence of any one person has contributed to the death of another person." Id. This ruling was cited by Mellor, J., apparently with approval, in R. v. Dant, L. & C. 567; 10 Cox, 102; 34 L. J. (M. C.) 119 (C. C. R.); and Byles, J., so laid down the law to the grand jury in directing them in the case of R. v. Hutchinson, 9 Cox, 555, where a major-general was indicted for manslaughter of a man who was killed by a shot from a cannon fired by an artilleryman acting under a superior officer, who was practising under general orders from the major-general. See 3 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 187, 188; and R. v. Longbottom, 3 Cox, 439; R. v. Walker, 1 C. & P. 320; 28 R. R. 781. In R. v. Birchall 4 F. & F. 1087, however, Willes, J., ruled that where the deceased has contributed to his death by his own negligence, although there may have been negligence on the part of the prisoner, the latter cannot be convicted of manslaughter, observing, that until he saw a decision to the contrary, he should hold that a man was not criminally responsible for negligence for which he would not be responsible in an action. But in R. v. Jones, 11 Cox, 544, the facts of which are set forth at p. 802, post, Lush, J., ruled that contributory negligence on the part of the deceased was not allowed as an excuse in a criminal case, and upon the case of R. v. Birchall, ubi supra, being cited, stated that that case was quite at variance with what he had always heard laid down. And in

R. v. Kew, 12 Cox, 355, Byles, J., held that contributory negligence on the part of the deceased was no answer to a charge of manslaughter. But it is submitted that evidence which in a civil case might be given to prove contributory negligence, might in a criminal case be relevant to show that the death of the deceased was not due to the culpable negligence of the accused. See R. v. Bunney [1894] 6 Queensland L. J. 80, 82, Griffith, C.J.

Animals.]—If a man have a beast that is used to do mischief, and he, knowing it, suffer it to go abroad, and it kill a man, this is manslaughter in the owner. Thus, if a commoner turns out on a common, across which there are public footpaths, a horse which he knows to be vicious, and the horse kicks and kills a child, the commoner is liable to be convicted of manslaughter, even though the child has strayed on to the common a little off the path. R. v. Dant (ante, p. 800). But if he had purposely turned it loose, though merely to frighten people, and to make what is called sport, it is as much murder as if he had incited a bear or dog to worry them. 1 Hale, 431; 4 Bl. Com. 197.

If a man, breaking an unruly or vicious horse, ride him amongst a crowd, and the horse kick a man and kill him, this is murder, if the rider brought the horse into the crowd with intent to do mischief, or even to divert himself by frightening the crowd; 1 Hawk. c. 31, s. 68; manslaughter, if done heedlessly and incautiously only. 1 East. P. C. 231. See 1 Hale, 475; 1 Hawk. c. 29, s. 12.

Carriages.]—If a man, driving a cart or other carriage, drive it over another man and kill him—if he saw or had timely notice of the probable mischief, and yet drove on, it would be murder; 1 Hale, 476; Fost. 263; if he purposely drove it furiously in amongst a crowd, it would probably be murder; semble, if in a street where persons were much in the habit of passing, it would be manslaughter; per Holt, C.J., Anon., 1 East, P. C. 263; if in a place where people did not usually pass, misadventure merely, provided he took that care which persons in similar situations are accustomed to do. Id. The degree of care to be used in driving depends on the number of persons or vehicles in the street; R. v. Murray, 5 Cox, 509 (Ir.); and if reasonable care and diligence is used, no criminal liability is incurred. Upon an indictment for manslaughter, it appeared that the deceased was walking in the road drunk, when the prisoner, who was in a cart driving two horses without reins, and going at a furious pace, ran over him and killed him; the prisoner had called out twice to the deceased, who, from the state in which he was, and the pace of the horses, could not get out of the road: Garrow, B., held this to be manslaughter. R. v. Walker, 1 C. & P. 320; 28 R. R. 781. Two persons were riding furiously on horseback along the road; one passed the deceased, who was also on horseback, but the other rode against him, and both fell, the deceased being killed by the concussion: Patteson, J., directed an acquittal of the first who passed; and as to the second, told the jury to find him guilty of manslaughter, if they thought that by furious riding he ran against the deceased; but to acquit him if they thought that the deceased's horse was unruly, and ran against the horse of the prisoner. R. v. Mastin, 6 C. & P. 396. A foot-passenger was walking along the road by lamplight, when the defendant, who was near-sighted, drove along at the rate of eight or nine miles an hour, sitting at the time at the bottom of his cart, and ran over the foot-passenger and killed him; and it was held to be manslaughter. R. v. Grout, 6 C. & P. 629; 40 R. R. 830. The prisoner drove the deceased (a friend of his) in a trap to some races.

At the races the former became drunk. This was noticed by the deceased, and before commencing the journey home together, he proposed to drive. This, however, the prisoner declined, and insisted upon driving himself. He did so, setting off at a furious rate, standing up and flogging the horse, and finally the trap was upset and the deceased was thrown out and killed: Lush, J., directed the jury to find the prisoner guilty of manslaughter if they thought that the carriage was overturned by the prisoner's culpably negligent driving, and that that caused the death of the deceased. R. v. Jones, 11 Cox, 544. If the driver of a carriage race with another carriage and urge his horses to so rapid a pace that he cannot control them, it is manslaughter in both drivers if in consequence the carriage upset and a passenger be killed. R. v. Timmins, 7 C. & P. 499: R. v. Swindall, 2 C. & P. 230; 2 Cox, 141 (ante, p. 800). R. v. Dalloway, 2 Cox, 273. A lad out of frolic took the trapstick out of the front part of a cart, in consequence of which it upset, and the carman, who was loading sacks therein, was killed; and this was held to be manslaughter. R. v. Sullivan, 7 C. & P. 541. The law as above stated applies to bicycles as well as to other carriages. R. v. Parker, 59 J. P. 793: R. v. Thirgood, 63 J. P. 442.

Vessels.]—To make the captain of a vessel liable for manslaughter in causing a person to be drowned by running down a boat in which he was, it was held that it must be shown that the captain did some act which conduced to the death; and that a mere omission to do the whole of his duty was not sufficient. R. v. Green, 7 C. & P. 156: R. v. Allen, Id. 153; see R. v. Barrett, 2 C. & K. 343: R. v. Haines, Id. 368. In the case of navigation of a river, the same care must be taken as on a public highway on land. R. v. Taylor, 9 C. & P. 672. Gross mismanagement of a boat by the person in charge, whereby it is upset and an occupant drowned, is manslaughter. R. v. Williamson, 1 Cox, 97; and cf. R. v. Waters, 6 C. & P. 328.

Engines and trains.]—Persons in charge of trains are guilty of manslaughter if a fatal accident results from gross and culpable negligence or recklessly negligent conduct. R. v. Trainer, 4 F. & F. 105: R. v. Birchall, Id. 1087: R. v. Gray, Id. 1098: R. v. Elliott, 16 Cox, 710 (Ir.). Deliberate or gross neglect of the rules of the railway would amount to gross negligence, but honest errors of judgment would not. Id. A man was held not guilty of manslaughter who stopped a steam engine and left it, and in his absence another set it in motion, whereby a man was killed. R. v. Hilton, 2 Lewin, 214. But it was held manslaughter where a man in charge of an engine left it in the care of an ignorant boy, by whose lack of skill another was killed. R. v. Lowe, 3 C. & K. 123; 4 Cox, 449, Campbell, C.J. Where a fatal accident was caused by a train running off the line at a place where the rails had been taken up without allowing sufficient time to replace them, and without giving sufficient warning to the engine driver, it was held that the foreman of platelayers was liable if his negligence was a material and substantial cause of the accident, although he was under the general directions of an inspector, and though the engine driver had not kept a good look out. R. v. Benge, 4 F. & F. 504. Where the prisoner was employed by the owner of a tramway crossing a public road to warn persons when trucks were crossing the road, with strict orders never to be absent from his post, and the deceased was killed by some trucks, which were travelling on the tramway and crossing the road, of the approach of which he had received no notice from the prisoner, who was absent from his duty; it was held, that there being no duty imposed by statute upon the owner of the tramway to place a watchman where the tramway crossed the road, the prisoner was merely the private servant of such owner, and that, consequently, his negligence did not constitute such a breach of duty as to make him guilty of manslaughter. R. v. Smith, 11 Cox, 210, Lush, J. In R. v. Pittwood, 19 T. L. R. 37; 47 Sol. J. 42, 182, Wright, J., the prisoner, a gatekeeper on a railway, forgot to close the gates. A man drove over the line and was killed by a train. A contention that the defendant owed no duty to deceased, but only to the railway company, was overruled, and the prisoner was convicted of manslaughter.

Mines.]—Where it appeared that the deceased was employed with others in walling the inside shaft of a colliery, and that it was the duty of the defendant to place a stage on the mouth of the shaft, and the death of the deceased was the direct consequence of the negligent omission on the part of the defendant to perform that duty, he was held to have been properly convicted of manslaughter. R. v. Hughes, Dears. & B. 248; 26 L. J. (M. C.) 209; 7 Cox, 301: see R. v. Gregory, 2 F. & F. 158. Neglect of a duty to ventilate a mine leading to a fatal explosion of fire damp renders the person on whom the duty lay liable to conviction of manslaughter. R. v. Haines, 2 C. & K. 368.

Explosives.]—The defendant made fireworks, contrary to 9 & 10 W. 3, c. 7 (rep.), and kept upon his premises a quantity of combustibles for the purpose of his business as a maker of fireworks. In his absence, by the negligence of one of his servants, a fire broke out amongst such combustibles, and a rocket ignited thereby flew across the street, set fire to the opposite house, and caused the death of a person therein. The defendant was held not to be guilty of manslaughter, because the death did not happen by any personal interference or negligence on his part. R. v. Bennett, Bell, 1; 28 L. J. (M. C.) 27; 8 Cox, 74. 9 & 10 W. 3, c. 7, is repealed, but similar provisions are made by the Explosives Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 17), and the regulations made thereunder.

Neglect of the helpless.]—Premeditated neglect or ill-treatment by persons having custody, charge, or control of helpless persons, whether children, imbeciles, or lunatics, or sick or aged, by deliberate omission to supply them necessary food, etc., if attended with fatal results, seems to be murder. R. v. Condè, 10 Cox, 547: R. v. Bubb, 4 Cox, 455: R. v. Self, 1 Leach, 137; 1 East, P. C. 226, and if the same result flows from gross neglect in such a case, the offender is guilty of manslaughter. R. v. Instan [1893] Q. B. 450 (C. C. R.); and see ante, p. 784. As to the distinction drawn in such cases between misfeasance and mere nonfeasance, see ante, p. 784.

By s. 1 of the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 41, now repealed and re-enacted as s. 1 of the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904 (4 Edw. 7, c. 15), post, p. 877), if any person who has the custody, charge, or care of a child wilfully neglects such child in a manner likely to cause such child injury to its health, that person is guilty of a misdemeanor. In R. v. Senior [1899] 1 Q. B. 283 (C. C. R.), the prisoner was charged with the manslaughter of his infant child, of which he had the custody. It was proved that he belonged to a sect known as the Peculiar People, who objected on religious grounds to calling in medical aid and to the use of medicine, and that he had wilfully and deliberately abstained from providing medical aid and medicine necessary for the child, though he knew it to be dangerously ill, but that in other respects he had done all he could in the best interests of the child; and that the prisoner had the means to procure medical aid which would have prolonged and probably saved the child's life. Upon these facts, it was held that there was evidence that the prisoner had wilfully neglected the child in a manner likely to cause injury to its health within the meaning of the Act, and that having thereby caused or accelerated the death of the child the prisoner was rightly convicted of manslaughter (a): and Russell, L.C.J., was inclined to the opinion that at common law, and apart from the statute, the result would have been the same. R. v. Semor [1899] 1 Q. B. at p. 292. As to evidence of means, see R. v. Jones, 19 Cox, 678. But it is to be observed that under s. 23 of the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904 (4 Edw. 7, c. 15, post, p. 885), want of means is no defence if the accused could have resorted to the poor law for relief.

A young unmarried woman being about to be confined, returned to the house of her stepfather and mother. There she was taken in labour, during her stepfather's absence, and the mother did not take ordinary care to procure the assistance of a midwife, though she could have got one had she wished to do so. In consequence of such want of assistance the daughter died in her confinement. There was no evidence that the mother had any means of paying for the midwife's services. It was held, under these circumstances, that there was no legal duty on the part of the mother to call in a midwife, and consequently no such breach of duty as to render her liable to be convicted of manslaughter. R. v. Shepherd, L. & C. 147; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 102; 9 Cox, 123 (C. C. R.).

Poison.]—Where a man lays poison to kill rats, and another man takes it, and it kills him, if the poison were laid in such a manner or place as to be mistaken for food, it is, perhaps, manslaughter; 1 Hale, 431; if otherwise, misadventure only. Id. If an improper quantity of spirituous liquors be given to a child of tender years heedlessly and for brutal sport, if death ensue it will be manslaughter. R. v. Martin, 3 C. & P. 211: and see R. v. Packard, ante, p. 787.

Weapons.]—If a man knowing that people are passing along the street throws a stone, or shoots an arrow over the house or wall with intent to do hurt to people, and one is thereby slain, this is murder, and if it were without such intent, yet it is manslaughter, and not barely per infortunium, because the act itself was unlawful: 1 Hale, 474: 1 Hawk. c. 29, s. 9: 3 Co. Inst. 57. If he discharge a gun merely for the purpose of unloading it, or the like, and death ensue—then, if it were in a place where persons were likely to pass, it is manslaughter; R. v. Burton, 1 Str. 481; otherwise, misadventure only. As to death occasioned by spring-guns, see Ilott v. Wilks, 3 B. & Ald. 304: Bird v. Holbrook, 4 Bing. 628; R. v. Heaton, 60 J. P. 508; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 31 (post, p. 852). Where a man gave a loaded gun to his servant to protect a corn-field from deer during the night, with instructions to fire when he heard any bustle in the corn by the deer; and the master himself unfortunately rushed into the corn during the night, and the servant imagining it to be deer, fired, and shot his master; this was held to be misadventure. 1 Hale, 476: 1 East, P. C. 266. Where a man, finding a pistol in the street, brought it home, and imagining (from having tried it with a rammer) that it was not loaded, presented it in sport at his wife, drew the trigger and killed her; this was held to be manslaughter; R. v. Rampton, Kel. (J.) 41; but Mr. Justice Foster doubts the propriety of the decision, as the defendant took the usual precaution to ascertain that the pistol was not loaded; see Fost. 263, 264, 265; but clearly, if he took not this or other reasonable precaution, it would be manslaughter. R. v. Campbell, 11 Cox, 323: R. v. Jones, 12 Cox, 628. It has been held that killing by accidental discharge of a gun used without legal excuse, is manslaughter. R. v. Weston, 14 Cox, 346, Cockburn, C.J.: and see R. v. Skeet, 4 F. & F. 931, where the gun of a poacher, who was resisting lawful arrest by a keeper, accidentally went off and killed the keeper. If a man shooting at butts, or a target, by accident kill a bystander, it is misadventure; 1 Hale, 472; but this must be understood of cases where a proper precaution to prevent accidents has been taken; for if the target, etc., be placed near a highway or path, where persons are in the habit of passing, the killing would probably be held to be manslaughter. A., B., and C. went into a field in proximity to certain roads and houses, taking with them a rifle which would be deadly at a mile, and all three practised firing with it at a target which they erected in the field, from a distance of about 100 yards. They took no precautions of any kind to prevent danger from the firing. One of the shots, thus fired by one, though it was not proved by which one, of them, killed a boy in a tree in a garden near the field, at a spot distant 393 yards from the firing-point. It was held that A., B., and C. had been guilty of a breach of duty in firing at the place in question, without taking proper precautions to prevent injury to others, and were guilty of manslaughter. R. v. Salmon, 6 Q. B. D. 79; 50 L. J. (M. C.) 25; 14 Cox, 494. A cannon which had burst and had been returned to an ironfounder was sent back by him in so imperfect a state that on being fired it burst again and killed a person; and it was held to be manslaughter. R. v. Carr, 8 C. & P. 163. The defendant having a right to the possession of a gun which was in the hands of the deceased, and which he knew to be loaded, attempted to take it away by force, and in the struggle which ensued the gun accidentally went off, and caused the death of the deceased. This was held by Campbell, C.J., to be manslaughter, inasmuch as the discharge of the gun was the result of the defendant's unlawful act, in attempting to retake the gun by force. R. v. Archer, 1 F. & F. 351.

Killing officers of justice, and the like.]—If a man kill an officer of justice, either civil or criminal, such as a bailiff, constable, watchman, etc., in the legal execution of his duty, or any person acting in aid of him (whether specially called thereunto or not, 1 Hale, 462), or any private person endeavouring to suppress an affray or apprehend a felon, knowing his authority or the intention with which he interposes, the law will imply malice, and the offender will be guilty of murder. 1 Hale, 457, 460: Fost. 270, 308, et seq.: R. v. Porter, 12 Cox, 444. And the officer and persons acting in aid of him enjoy this protection, eundo, morando, et redeundo: therefore, if an officer, on his way to do his duty, be opposed and killed, or if he arrive at the place, and in consequence of opposition retreat, and on his retreat be killed, it is murder. Fost. 308, 309: 9 Co. Rep. 68 a. and b.: 1 Hale, 462: R. v. Phelps, C. & Mar. 180. Three things are to be attended to in matters of this kind: the legality of the deceased's authority, the legality of the manner in which he executed it, and the defendant's knowledge of that authority; for if an officer be killed in attempting to execute a writ or warrant invalid on the face of it, or against a wrong person, or out of the district in which alone it could legally be executed; or if a private person interfere and act in a case where he has no authority by law to do so; or if the defendant had no knowledge of the officer's business, or of the intention with which a private person interferes, and the officer or private person be resisted and killed; the killing will be manslaughter only: see Fost. 311, 312.

1. As to the legality of the authority.]—If an officer having a warrant from a proper magistrate to apprehend B. for felony; or if B. be indicted for felony; or if the hue and cry be levied against B.; in these cases, if B. or any of his accomplices kill the officer or any person joining in the hue and cry, or lawfully effecting or attempting to effect B.'s arrest, it is murder, whether B. be guilty or innocent of the felony charged against him. Fost. 318: R. v. Porter, 12 Cox, 444. But it is murder only if violence is used to prevent arrest, or to effect rescue or escape. Accidental killing in course of a struggle with the officers of justice seems to be manslaughter only, Id., and see R. v. Tooley, 2 Ld. Raym. 1296, 1300, and for the killing to be murder the accused must know or be told that the person seeking his arrest is acting as an officer of justice. R. v. Gordon, 1 East, P. C. 315; 1 Leach, 515; and see post, p. 811. But the killing is not murder, but only manslaughter, where the warrant under which the officer of justice is acting is not sufficient to justify him in arresting or detaining a prisoner, or he has no warrant at all, and the case is one in which he has not at law authority to arrest without warrant. See R. v. Allen, 17 L. T. (N. S.) 222; Steph. Dig. Cr. L. (6th ed.) 420, Blackburn, J. This rule has been held to apply where the warrant is illegal, and void upon the face of it, see 1 Hale, 457; 1 East, P. C. 310, or issued with a blank in it, and the blank afterwards filled up; R. v. Stockley, 1 East, P. C. 310; and see Housin v. Barrow, 6 T. R. 122; 3 R. R. 135: R. v. Winwick, 8 T. R. 454: R. v. Hood, 1 Mood. C. C. 281; 22 R. R. 746; or issued with an insufficient description of the defendant, as, for instance, if it were to take the son of J. S., Id., or if it be attempted to be executed against C. instead of B. But a mere informality in the warrant is no excuse for hitting the officer who attempted to execute it. R. v. Allen, 17 L. T. (N. S.) 222; Steph. Dig. Cr. L. (6th ed.) 184, 414, where the decisions are considered; and see R. v. Fursey, 3 St. Tr., N. S. 543, and cf. 6 Id. 219, n. If a writ of execution in civil cases be correct upon the face of it, although the judgment be erroneous, or the proceedings irregular, if the officer, in endeavouring to execute it, be resisted and killed, it is murder; 1 Hale, 457: Fost. 311, 312. So in the case of process out of an inferior court, as the county court, the production of a warrant good on the face of it, and appearing to be issued in a case in which the court had jurisdiction, is sufficient to justify an arrest under it, and render the party, if he resist the arrest, liable to an indictment for an assault upon the officer. R. v. Davis, L. & C. 64; 30 L. J. (M. C.) 159. But if the writ were a nullity on the face of it, or if the warrant upon it were attempted to be executed by any other than the officer to whom it was directed (the officer himself not being present, or at least acting in the arrest, see 1 Cowp. 65), the killing would be manslaughter only. If an innocent person be charged with a felony, and an attempt be made to arrest him for it without warrant, and he resist and kill the party attempting to arrest him; if the party attempting to arrest were a constable, the killing is murder; 1 Hawk. c. 28, s. 12: 2 Hale, 84, 87, 91; if a private person, manslaughter; see 2 Hale, 83, 92; because the constable has authority by law to arrest in such a case, but a private person has not. And the same in all cases where a person is arrested, or attempted to be arrested, upon a reasonable suspicion of felony. See Samuel v. Payne, 1 Doug. 359. Upon an indictment for shooting at and cutting a constable with intent, etc., it appeared that the defendant had been given in charge to the constable for having a forged note in his possession, and upon the constable attempting to handcuff him, had fired a pistol at the constable and wounded him, and afterwards cut him with the cock of the pistol, it was argued that the charge imported no legal offence, for if he did not know the note to be forged, the defendant was no felon, and the arrest was illegal; but it was held that the defect in the charge was immaterial, and that it was not necessary for the charge to contain the same accurate description of the offence as an indictment, and that the charge must have been considered as importing a guilty knowledge. R. v. Ford R. & R. 329. But where the defendant took his tools and left his work, saying that "he would do for any constable that offered to stop him," and his master applied to a constable to take the defendant, but made no charge against him, and the master and the constable followed the defendant, and found him in a public privy as if he had occasion there, and the master said, "This is the man, I give you charge of him;" upon which the constable said, "Your master gives me charge of you, you must go with me;" and the defendant immediately stabbed the constable: it was held by a majority of the judges, that, as the actual arrest would have been illegal, the attempt to arrest when the defendant was in such a situation that he could not get away, and when the waiting to give notice might have enabled the constable to complete the arrest, was such a provocation as reduced the offence to manslaughter only. R. v. Thompson, 1 Mood. C. C. 80. If a constable take a man without warrant, upon a charge which gives him no authority to do so, and the prisoner run away, and is pursued by J. S., who was with the constable all the time, and charged by him to assist, and the man kill J. S., it is manslaughter only, because the arrest was illegal, and J. S. ought to have known it: and therefore the attempt to take the prisoner was illegal also. R. v. Curvan, 1 Mood. C. C. 132. A constable, without warrant, apprehended N. on suspicion of having recently stolen potatoes out of the ground, and called O. to assist him; a rescue was attempted, in the course of which one of the party killed O.; and this was held to be manslaughter only; for, without warrant, the constable could only arrest a person found committing such offence, under 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 68 (rep.); R. v. Phelps, C. & Mar. 180. But if a constable, having a charge of felony against a defendant, take him without a warrant, and the defendant, knowing the constable, kill him, it will be murder, even though the constable do not tell him of the charge, and the defendant, in fact, has done nothing for which he is liable to be arrested. R. v. Woolmer, 1 Mood. C. C. 334. So, if a man actually commit a felony, and another, in whose presence he committed it, attempt to arrest him for it, and be resisted and killed; 2 Hawk. c. 12, s. 1; or if a person present at any affray, interfere for the purpose of restraining the offenders and keeping the peace, and be killed; 3 Co. Inst. 52: 1 Hawk. c. 31, ss. 48, 54: Fost. 311, 318; or if a person present when another attempts to commit a treason or felony, lay hold of him in order to prevent him, and be killed; 2 Hawk. c. 12, s. 19; the killing in these cases would be murder, whether the person arresting or interfering, etc., be a constable or not; for either has power to arrest or interfere, etc., in such a case. R. v. Hunt, 1 Mood. C. C. 93: R. v. Curran, 3 C. & P. 397: R. v. Price, 8 C. & P. 282: R. v. Weir, 1 B. & C. 288. So, where a man seen attempting to commit a felony on fresh pursuit kills his pursuer, it is as much murder as if the party were killed while attempting to take the defendant in the act. R. v. Howarth, 1 Mood. C. C. 207: see Beckwith v. Philby, 6 B. & C. 635. But where an affray, which has taken place out of the constable's view, is over, and there is no continued pursuit, the constable has no right to arrest the affrayer, unless there is an immediate danger of the affray being renewed. R. v. Walker, Dears. 358; 23 L. J. (M. C.) 123: see Timothy v. Simpson, 1 Cr. M. & R. 757; 4 L. J. (Ex.) 81; Baynes v. Brewster, 2 Q. B. 375; 11 L. J. (M. C.) 5. The prisoner was engaged in a disturbance in the street, when R., a constable, interfered to prevent it. A struggle ensued between R. and the prisoner. R. retired, and the prisoner went into and fastened up his house. After an interval of an hour, R. returned with W. and two other constables to the house, which was then fastened and all quiet. The prisoner from inside the house refused to admit the constables, who spent about a quarter of an hour in trying to get in, and finally burst open the door. They found the prisoner on the top of the stairs with a bill-hook in his hand, which he used against the constables to resist his apprehension, and with which in so doing he wounded W., one of the constables. Under these circumstances it was held that the apprehension was not lawful, as the first disturbance was at an end, and there was no fear of its renewal; nor was there a fresh pursuit by the constables, and the conviction of the prisoner upon an indictment for wounding W., with intent to resist his lawful apprehension, was therefore quashed. R. v. Marsden, L. R., 1 C. C. R. 131; 37 L. J. (M. C.) 80. Where the constable, standing outside the defendant's house, saw him hold a spade in a threatening attitude over his wife's head, and heard him at the same time say, "If it was not for the policeman outside I would split your head open;" in about twenty minutes afterwards the defendant left his house, after saying he would leave his wife altogether, and after he had proceeded a short distance in the direction of his father's residence, was taken into custody by the constable without warrant; the apprehension was held lawful. R. v. Light, Dears. & B. 332; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 1. If a person be taken before a magistrate for an assault, and whilst the warrant is being made up for his commitment, escape, a constable may, by verbal directions from the magistrate, pursue and apprehend him; and if in so doing the constable is killed, it is murder. R. v. Williams, 1 Mood. C. C. 387. If a seamen be impressed, and the press-gang be resisted, and any of them be killed; if the press-gang at the time were under the direction of a commissioned officer, and such officer were then acting with them, the killing would be murder, otherwise only manslaughter; R. v. Broadfoot, Fost. 154; for the presence of a commissioned officer is necessary to the due execution of an impress warrant. Where two soldiers not belonging to a recruiting party, who were in a public-house, wished to enlist M., and gave him a shilling for that purpose, and M. afterwards wishing to go away, an altercation ensued, and one of the soldiers stood at the door with his drawn sword, and swore he would stab any person who attempted to come in, and the landlord of the house was stabbed in the scuffle: it was argued that the soldiers had authority to enlist M., and that what was done was merely to prevent his rescue; but the judges held, that they had no authority, and that the offence amounted to murder. R. v. Longden, R. & R. 228. A constable, who had verbal orders from the magistrate to apprehend all thimbleriggers, attempted to apprehend the defendant and his companions, who were playing at thimblerig in a public fair: he succeeded in apprehending one of his companions, whom the defendant rescued, and afterwards, in the evening, seeing the defendant in a public-house, endeavoured to apprehend him, telling him that he did so for what he had been doing in the fair; the defendant escaped into a privy, and the constable, calling others to his assistance, broke open the privy and attempted to apprehend the prisoner, who stabbed one of the party; it was held that the constable had authority to apprehend the defendant. R. v. Gardener, 1 Mood. C. C. 390. In R. v. Prebble, 1 F. & F. 325, a constable (out of the limits of the Metropolitan Police Acts) was held not to be acting in the execution of his duty in clearing a public-house, unless there be a breach, or danger of a breach, of the public peace therein; R. v. Hems, 7 C. & P. 312: but see now s. 18 of the Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94). A constable has no right to arrest a person for mere disorderly conduct, unless he be at least on the point of committing a breach of the peace, and the person so attempted to be arrested, and his companions, may use necessary force to prevent such an arrest. If, however, they use unnecessary violence, and kill the constable, they are guilty of manslaughter; and if the constable has given up his intention of making the arrest, and they know it, and still continue their violence, and the constable is killed, they are guilty of murder. R. v. Lockley, 4 F. & F. 155.

A special constable duly appointed under 1 & 2 W. 4, c. 41, is appointed for an indefinite time, and retains all the authority of a constable at common law, until his services are suspended or determined under the 9th section of that statute. R. v. Porter, 9 C. & P. 778.

By the Night Poaching Act, 1828 (9 G. 4, c. 69), s. 2 (post, p. 865), gamekeepers are empowered to apprehend persons "found upon any land committing any such offence as is hereinbefore mentioned," i.e., in s. 1; and though this 2nd section appears only to authorize the apprehension for the offences mentioned in s. 1, yet they may apprehend the offenders, where three or more are out by night armed, etc., for although that offence is punishable by s. 9, it is still an offence under s. 1. R. v. Ball, 1 Mood. C. C. 330. To authorize an apprehension under this statute, it is not necessary that the gamekeeper should give notice of his purpose; R. v. Payne, 1 Mood. C. C. 378; nor that he should have a written authority from his master for so doing, provided the poacher be on his master's land or manor; R. v. Price, 7 C. & P. 178: see R. v. Fielding, 2 C. & K. 621; but he could not, under this statute, without authority, apprehend him upon the land or manor of another person; R. v. Davis, 7 C. & P. 785; or even on land on which he has the right to preserve game. R. v. Addis, 6 C. & P. 388. If a keeper, attempting lawfully to apprehend a poacher, be met with violence, and in opposition to such violence and in self-defence strike or lay hands on a poacher, and then be killed by him or one of the gang, it will be murder. R. v. Ball, 1 Mood. C. C. 330: R. v. Whithorne, 3 C. & P. 394. Even an interference by a gamekeeper with persons found armed in the pursuit of game on the lands of an adjoining proprietor, without any attempt forcibly to apprehend, is not a sufficient provocation to reduce a malicious wounding and killing to manslaughter. R. v. Warner, 1 Mood. C. C. 380. A gamekeeper appointed by a person who has only a permission to shoot over lands has no authority to apprehend a poacher in pursuit of game on such land, or to take a gun from him; and where such a gamekeeper endeavoured to do so, and in the struggle which ensued the gun went off and killed the poacher, this was held to be manslaughter. R. v. Wesley, 1 F. & F. 528; see R. v. Wood, Id. 470. By 14 & 15 Vict. c. 19, s. 11 (ante, p. 622), any person whatsoever may apprehend and convey or deliver over to a constable any person found committing any indictable offence in the night. This section has been held to apply to persons committing an offence against s. 9 of the Night Poaching Act 1828 (9 G. 4, c. 69). R. v. Sanderson, 1 F. & F. 598.

2. As to the legality of the manner in which the authority is exercised.]—If the constable of the vill of A. attempt without warrant to suppress a tumult in the vill of B., and be resisted and killed, it is manslaughter only; for he had authority in such a case within the vill of A. alone. 1 Hale, 459. So, if a sheriff's officer attempt to execute a writ out of the proper county, and be resisted and killed, it is manslaughter only; 1 Hale, 458, et seq. A justice's warrant of commitment, directed "To the constable of G.," a parish in the county of L., must be read as directed to the parish constable of G., there being such an officer, who must execute it, and its execution by a county policeman is illegal. R. v. Sanders, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 75; 36 L. J. (M. C.) 87. Therefore a conviction for wounding a county policeman in the execution of such a warrant, with intent to resist the prisoner's lawful apprehension thereunder, was quashed. Id. And where the defendant was convicted of an assault on two police constables of the county police of Worcestershire in the execution of their duty, who were apprehending him in the city of Worcester under a warrant issued by two justices of and for the county of Worcestershire for his commitment to prison for default in payment of a fine but not backed by any justice of and for the city of Worcester, which city is a borough having a separate commission of the peace with exclusive jurisdiction, and a separate police force, and the defendant was not pursued from the county, but found in the city, it was held that the constables were not acting in the execution of their duty in so executing such warrant, and therefore that the conviction was wrong. R. v. Cumpton, 5 Q. B. D. 341; 49 L. J. (M. C.) 41. But by s. 10 of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 42), constables and other peace officers may execute warrants out of their respective precincts, provided the place where the warrant is executed be within the jurisdiction of the magistrate granting or backing the warrant. If an officer were to attempt the arrest of a man on Sunday (unless for treason, felony, or breach of the peace, see 29 Car. 2, c. 7, s. 6), and were resisted and killed, it would be manslaughter only. A constable who had a warrant to apprehend A., gave it to his son, who, in attempting to apprehend A. was stabbed with a knife which he happened to have in his hand, the constable being in sight, but a quarter of a mile off; it was held that the son had no authority to apprehend A. R. v. Patience, 7 C. & P. 775. A justice issued a warrant directed to the constable of N., and all peace officers in and for the county of C., commanding him or them to apprehend G. for disobedience to an order in bastardy. A police officer arrested G., but at the time of doing so the warrant was not actually in his possession. It was held, that the arrest was illegal, as the officer ought to have had the warrant ready to be produced at the time of arrest. Galliard v. Laxton, 2 B. & S. 363; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 123. And in order to justify an arrest by a police officer, under a warrant, for a misdemeanor, it is necessary that he should have the warrant with him at the time of the arrest. R. v. Chapman, 12 Cox, 4: Codd v. Cabe, 1 Ex. D. 352; 45 L. J. (M. C.) 101; 13 Cox, 202. So, where the prisoner against whom a warrant had been issued for his apprehension on a charge of threatening to shoot, was apprehended by a constable who at the time had not the warrant in his possession, and the prisoner drew a revolver, and shot the constable, it was held that the apprehension was unlawful, and the killing merely manslaughter. R. v. Carey, 14 Cox, 214, Lindley, J. It seems to have been suggested by the prosecution in that case that the prisoner, who was apprehended early in the morning while passing along a street with something evidently buttoned up in his coat, had been apprehended by the constable not under the warrant, but under the powers of a local act which authorized constables to stop, search, and detain persons reasonably suspected of knowingly having or conveying anything stolen, and therefore that the apprehension was lawful. It was held, however, that there was no evidence from which the jury could infer that the constable reasonably suspected the prisoner of the possession of stolen goods, and that it lay on the prosecution to give such evidence. Id.

[3. As to the defendant's knowledge of the deceased's authority or intention.] —When any officer is in the legal execution of his duty, or a private person endeavouring to suppress an affray, or apprehend a felon, and is resisted and killed; if it appear that the slayer knew the officer's business or the intent of the private person, either expressly from the deceased, or impliedly from circumstances, R. v. Howarth, 1 Mood. 1 C. C. 207; the killing is murder; if it appear that he was ignorant in this respect, it is manslaughter only. 1 Hawk. c. 31, ss. 49, 50: Fost. 310, 311: 1 Hale, 458, et seq.: R. v. Gordon, 1 East, P. C. 315; 1 Leach, 515. Where a bailiff rushed into a gentleman's bedchamber early in the morning, without giving the slightest intimation of his business, and the gentleman not knowing him, in the impulse of the moment, wounded him with his sword and killed him: this was held to be manslaughter. 1 Hale, 470. But where the bailiff or constable shows the warrant, 1 Hale, 461; or where it appears that he is known to the defendant to be an officer; as, for instance, when the defendant said, "Stand off, I know you well enough, come at your peril;" R. v. Pew, Cro. Car. 183; if after this the officer be killed, it will be murder. If the constable interfere to prevent any affray within his own vill, if he be killed by one of the inhabitants, or other person, who knows him to be the constable, it will be murder; if by a stranger who does not know him, it is manslaughter. So, if one of several know him to be a constable, it will be murder in him, manslaughter in the rest. 1 Hale, 438. If a constable command the peace, 1 Hale, 461, or show his staff of office, Fost. 311, this, it seems, is a sufficient intimation of his authority. And in such a case it is not necessary to prove the deceased's appointment as constable; proof that he was accustomed to act as constable is sufficient. 1 East, P. C. 315. But private persons when they interfere must expressly intimate their intention, otherwise killing them will be manslaughter only. Fost. 310, 311. Where the outer door of a dwelling-house may be broken open, in order to execute process: as, for instance, in the case of a capias upon an indictment, 2 Hawk. c. 14, s. 3, a warrant to search for stolen goods, 2 Hale, 151, a capias utlagatum, 2 Hawk. c. 14, s. 4, a warrant of a magistrate for levying a penalty, Id. s. 5, a magistrate's warrant to arrest for any specific crime; Fost. 320: 2 Hawk. c. 14, s. 3: 1 Hale, 584; or where a person lawfully arrested escapes into a house; 2 Hawk. c. 14, s. 9; where one known to have committed treason or felony, or to have dangerously wounded another, escapes into a house; Id. s. 7; where an affray is made in a house, and the constable wants to suppress it, or take the offender; Id. s, 8: 1 Hale, 589; where there is disorderly drinking or noise in a house at any unseasonable time of night, particularly in inns, taverns, or ale-houses, and the constable or his watch wish to suppress the disorder; 2 Hale, 95; and in the case of forcible entry or detainer; 2 Hawk. c. 14, s. 6 (but not in the execution of writs in civil cases, Fost. 389, excepting writs of seisin, or habere facias possessionem, Semayne's case, 5 Co. Rep. 91); in all such cases, before the outer door is broken open, there must be a demand of admittance, or something equivalent thereto, and a refusal; Fost. 136, 320; see Launock v. Brown, 2 B. & Ald. 592; otherwise, if the officer be killed, it will be manslaughter only.

In all cases, however, above stated to be manslaughter only, if there be evidence of express malice in the party killing, the homicide will be murder. See R. v. Stockley, 1 East, P. C. 310: R. v. Curtis, Fost. 135.

Killing by officers and others.]—Where an officer of justice (including prison officers: Prison Act, 1898, 61 & 62 Vict. c. 41, s. 10), in endeavouring to execute his duty, kills a man, this is justifiable homicide, or manslaughter, or murder, according to circumstances.

1. Where an officer of justice is resisted in the legal execution of his duty (see ante, p. 809), he may repel force by force; and if, in doing so, he kill the party resisting him, it is justifiable homicide; and this in civil as well as in criminal cases. 1 Hale, 494; 2 Hale, 118. And the same as to persons acting in aid of such officer. Thus, if a peace officer have a legal warrant against B. for felony, or if B. stand indicted for felony, or if hue and cry be levied against B.; in these cases, if B. resist, and in the struggle be killed by the officer, or any person acting in aid of him, or joining in the hue and cry, the killing is justifiable. Fost. 318. So, if a private person attempt to arrest one who commits a felony in his presence, or interfere to suppress an affray, and be resisted, and kill the person resisting, this is also justifiable homicide. 1 Hale, 481, 484; Fost. 274. And this, not merely on the principle of self-defence (for the officer or private person is not bound to retreat, as in the case of homicide se defendendo, 1 Hale, 479, et seq.; ante, pp. 791, 797), but upon that principle, and the necessity of executing the duty the law has imposed upon him, jointly: see R. v. Forster, 1 Lewin, 187: R. v. Daunt, 1 Crawf. & Dix (Ir. Circ. Rep.) 166. Still, there must be an apparent necessity for the killing; for if the officer were to kill after the resistance had ceased, 1 East, P. C. 297, or if there were no reasonable necessity for the violence used upon the part of the officer, etc., see R. v. Goffe, 1 Vent. 216, the killing would be manslaughter at the least. Also, in order to justify an officer or private person in these cases, it is necessary that they should, at the time, be in the act of legally executing a duty imposed upon them by law, and under such circumstances, that if the officer or private person were killed, it would have been murder (see ante, pp. 805–811); for if the circumstances of the case were such, that it would have been manslaughter only to kill the officer or private person, it will be manslaughter at least in the officer or private person to kill the party resisting. See Fost. 318; 1 Hale, 490.

2. If the prisoners in a gaol, or going to a gaol, assault the gaoler or officer, and he, in his defence, kill any of them, it is justifiable, for the sake of preventing an escape. 1 Hale, 496; cf. 61 & 62 Vict. c. 41, s. 10.

3. Where an officer or private person, having legal authority to apprehend a man, attempts to do so, and the man, instead of resisting, flies, or resists and then flies, and is killed by the officer or private person in the pursuit; if the offence with which the man was charged were a treason or felony, or a dangerous wound given, and he could not otherwise be apprehended, the homicide is justifiable; 1 Hale, 481; 2 Hale, 118, 119; 1 Hawk. c. 28, ss. 11, 12; Fost. 271: R. v. Finnerty [1830] 1 Crawf. & Dix (Ir. Circ. Rep.) 167, n.; but the killing, if intentional, would be murder if the deceased were charged merely with a breach of the peace, or other misdemeanor, Fost. 271; 1 Hale, 481; 2 Hale, 117: R. v. Forster, 1 Lewin, 187, Holroyd, J.: and see R. v. Dadson, 2 Den. 35; 3 C. & K. 148; 20 L. J. (M. C.) 57 (C. C. R.); or if the arrest were intended in a civil suit. 1 Hale, 481; Fost. 271; or if a press-gang kill a seaman or other person flying from them, R. v. Browning, 1 East, P. C. 312; and see R. v. Phillips [1778] Id. 308; 2 Cowp. 830: R. v. Borthwick [1779] 1 Doug. 207. But if homicide were occasioned by means not likely or intended to kill, such as tripping up his heels, giving him a blow of an ordinary cudgel, or other weapon not likely to kill, or the like, it would at most be only manslaughter. See Fost. 271.

4. In case of a riot or rebellious assembly, the officers endeavouring to disperse the mob are justified in killing them, both at common law, 1 Hale, 495; 1 East P. C. 304, and under the Riot Act, 1 G. 1, st. 2, c. 5, if the riot cannot otherwise be suppressed. 4 Bl. Com. 179, 180: R. v. Pinney, 3 St. Tr., N. S. 11; 37 R. R. 599. As to the position of soldiers who fire on a riotous mob and kill rioters, see Report on Featherstone Riots, Parl. Pap. 1893–94, C. 7234.

5. Where a criminal is executed by the proper officer, in pursuance of his sentence, this is justifiable homicide. 4 Bl. Com. 178. But if it be done by any other person, 1 Hale, 501, or not done in strict conformity with the sentence, as, for instance, if an officer behead one who is adjudged to be hanged, or the contrary, 3 Co. Inst. 52; 1 Hale, 501, it is murder.

6. Where in an attempt to impress a person not subject to impressment he resists and is killed, it is murder by the members of the press-gang. R. v. Dixon, 1 East, P. C. 313: R. v. Rokeby, 1 East, P. C. 312.

CONSPIRACY TO MURDER AND INCITING TO MURDER.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100 (Offences against the Person Act, 1861), s. 4.]—All persons who shall conspire, confederate and agree to murder any person, whether he be a subject of [his] Majesty or not, and whether he be within the [King's] dominions or not, and whosoever shall solicit, encourage, persuade, or endeavour to persuade, or shall propose to any person, to murder any other person, whether he be a subject of [his] Majesty or not, and whether he be within the [King's] dominions or not, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for any term not more than ten . . . years. [This section was new as statute law in England in 1861. Conspiracy to murder was a common law misdemeanor; see Greaves' Crim. Law Cons. Acts (2nd ed.), p. 34: R. v. Bernard, 8 St. Tr., N. S. 887; 1 F. & F. 240.]

Indictment for Conspiracy to Murder. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 4.)

Central Criminal Court, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present, that J. S., J. T., and E. T., on the —— day of ——, in the year of our Lord —— [in the parish of —— and within the jurisdiction of the said court], unlawfully and wickedly did conspire, confederate, and agree together one J. N. feloniously, wilfully, and of their malice aforethought, to kill and murder; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. [You may add counts charging the defendants, or any of them, with "soliciting, encouraging, persuading, or endeavouring to persuade, or proposing to any other of the defendants, or any other person, to murder a certain other person, to wit, J. N.," if the facts warrant such a charge. If the "solicitation," etc., is made by means of articles in a newspaper it may be alleged to be made to "certain persons whose names are to the jurors aforesaid unknown" and to "all such persons as might read a copy of" the newspaper in question. Cf. R. v. Most, post, p. 814.]

Misdemeanor: penal servitude for not more than ten and not less than three years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 4; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to fining the offender, and requiring him to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, and being of good behaviour, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 71 (ante, p. 778.)

No indictment can be preferred for conspiracy unless one or other of the preliminary steps required by 22 & 23 Vict. c. 17, s. 1, as extended by 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35 s. 1, has been taken. (See ante, p. 7.)

Conspiracy to murder is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove a conspiracy between the defendants, or between them and other persons, as the case may be (see post, Book II. Part III.), and that the object of the conspiracy was to murder J. N. It is immaterial whether J. N. be a subject of the King or not, and whether he be within the King's dominions or not. It seems not to be essential that the conspiracy should have been formed in England or Ireland. Greaves' Crim. Law Cons. Acts (2nd ed.), 34; 3 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 274: provided that some overt act be done within the realm or the Admiralty jurisdiction; but see R. v. Bernard, 8 St. Tr., N. S. 887. The publication and circulation of an article in a newspaper may be an encouragement, or endeavour to persuade to murder, within this section, although not addressed to any person in particular. R. v. Most, 7 Q. B. D. 244; 50 L. J. (M. C.) 113; 14 Cox, 583. M. was indicted under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 4. The encouragement and endeavour to persuade to murder proved at the trial, was the publication and circulation by him of an article, written in German in a newspaper published in that language in London, exulting in the recent murder of the Emperor of Russia, and commending it as an example to revolutionists throughout the world. The jury were directed that if they thought that by the publication of the article M. did intend to and did, encourage or endeavour to persuade any person to murder any other person, whether a subject of her Majesty or not, and whether within the Queen's dominions or not, and that such encouragement and endeavouring to persuade was the natural and reasonable effect of the article, they should find him guilty. It was held that such direction was correct. Id.; cf. R. v. Bourtzeff, 129 Cent. Crim. Court, Sess. Pap., p. 284. As to the evidence necessary to prove solicitation or incitement to murder, see R. v. Fox, 19 W. R. 109 (Ir.): R. v. Ransford, 13 Cox, 9 (C. C. R.).

To constitute an offence against s. 4, it must be shown that there was some actual communication between the accused and the person solicited; but it is not necessary to show that the latter's mind was affected by the communication. R. v. Krause, 66 J. P. 121, Alverstone, L.C.J.; and see R. v. McCarthy [1903] 2 Ir. Rep. 146, 154; 37 L. J. Newsp. 494.

[See ante, p. 218. *This enactment is limited to cases "where the indictment shall allege that the defendant did cut, stab, or wound," and therefore upon an indictment charging a felonious shooting with intent to do grievous bodily harm, and doing grevious bodily harm, with intent to do grievous bodily harm, it is not competent for the jury to convict of unlawful wounding. The offences mentioned in this section are not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove the administering of the poison by the defendant to the prosecutor, as stated in the indictment. R. v. Cadman, 1 Mood. C. C. 114, has been cited as an authority that it is necessary to prove that something more than delivery, such as swallowing, was essential. The case is differently reported in Car. Supp. 137 (see R. v. Dale, 6 Cox, 16, n), and was dissented from in R. v. Walford, Essex Assizes, Feb. 1899, 34 L. J. Newsp. 116, Wills, J. Where a female servant, in preparing breakfast for her mistress, put arsenic into the coffee, and afterwards told her mistress that she had prepared the coffee for her, and she (the mistress) drank the coffee, Park, J., held that it was an administering within the meaning of the statute. R. v. Harley, 4 C. & P. 369. So also, where the defendant knowingly gave poison to A. to administer as a medicine to B., but A. neglecting to do so, it was accidentally given to B. by a child, this was held to be an administering by the defendant, as much as if she had given it to B. with her own hands. R. v. Michael, 2 Mood. C. C. 110; 9 C. & P. 356. Where the prisoner, having mixed corrosive sublimate with sugar, put it into a parcel, directing it to "Mrs. Daws, Townhope," and left it on the counter of a tradesman, who sent it to Mrs. Davis, who used some of the sugar, Gurney, B., held it to be an administering: for that, although it was intended for Mrs. Daws, yet as it found its way to Mrs. Davis, it was as much within the Act as if it had been intended for Mrs. Davis. R. v. Lewis, 6 C. & P. 161. In R. v. Ryan, 2 M. & Rob. 213, however, Parke, B., after consulting Alderson, B., expressed an opinion that an indictment for causing poison to be taken by A., with intent to murder A., was not sustained by evidence showing that the poison, though taken by A., was intended for another person; and doubted the propriety of the decision in R. v. Lewis; and accordingly, after the defendant had been convicted, he directed a fresh indictment to be preferred, charging the intent to be generally "to commit murder;" upon which the defendant was again tried, convicted, and sentenced. See, however, R. v. Smith, Dears. 559; 25 L. J. (M. C.) 29; 7 Cox, 51 (C. C. R.) (post, p. 820). Prove also the intent to murder, by circumstances from which that intent may be implied. See ante, pp. 303, 308–312, 340: R. v. Voke, R. & R. 531. Evidence of administering at different times may be given to show the intent. R. v. Mogg, 4 C. & P. 364. The defendant administered to a child two cocculus indicus berries entire in the pod, with intent to murder the child. The kernel is a poison; the pod is not, and will not dissolve in the stomach, and they were therefore harmless. This was held to be an administering of poison, with intent to murder, within this section. R. v. Cluderay, 1 Den. 514; 2 C. & K. 907; 19 L. J. (M. C.) 119; 4 Cox, 84 (C. C. R.).

Indictment for Wounding with intent to Murder. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 11, ante, p. 814.)

Commencement as ante, p. 813]—one J. N. feloniously and unlawfully did wound ("wound or cause any grievous bodily harm") with intent, etc., as in the precedent (ante, p. 815). Add a count charging the intent to be "to commit murder" and counts for wounding with intent to maim, etc., as post,

p. 839); or at all events one for wounding with intent to do grievous bodily harm, under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 18 (post, p. 840).

Felony: 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 11. See the last precedent.

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant wounded J. N. (See post, pp. 840, 841.) The instrument or means by which the wound was inflicted need not be stated, and if stated, would not confine the prosecutor to prove a wound, etc., by such means. R. v. Briggs, 1 Mood. C. C. 318. A wounding by any means whatever, whether by stabbing, cutting, or otherwise, will support the indictment under this statute. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 11. Prove the intent as directed (ante, pp. 303, 308). See R. v. Jones (post, p. 819). It is not necessary that the prosecutor should be in fact wounded in a vital part; for the question is not what the wound is, but what wound was intended. R. v. Hunt, 1 Mood. C. C. 93: R. v. Griffith, 1 C. & P. 298.

Power to convict of unlawful wounding.]—If the intent be not proved, the defendant may, by virtue of 14 & 15 Vict. c. 19, s. 5 (ante, p. 815), be convicted of unlawfully wounding, and thereupon he may be punished in the same manner as if he had been convicted upon an indictment for the misdemeanor of unlawfully wounding: that is, by penal servitude for any period not less than three years, and not exceeding five years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 20 (post, p. 839); 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). 14 & 15 Vict. c. 19, s. 5, is to be read as if the word "maliciously," as well as "unlawfully," had been inserted therein, with reference to the wounding of which the jury may convict the prisoner, and it is therefore essential to a conviction under that section that the act done which caused the wound should be done maliciously. The unlawful wounding of which the jury are at liberty to find the prisoner guilty under that section, is the unlawful and malicious wounding referred to in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 20 (post, p. 839): R. v. Ward, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 356; 41 L. J. (M. C.) 69. As to what constitutes a malicious wounding under the last-mentioned enactment, see R. v. Ward (ubi supra): R. v. Martin, 8 Q. B. D. 54; 51 L. J. (M. C.) 36 (post, p. 841). The defendant cannot, on an indictment for the felony, plead guilty to the misdemeanor; for the acquittal of the felony is to be the act of the jury. See R. v. Calvert, 3 C. & K. 201, Maule, J. On an indictment against several for the felony, it seems that some may be convicted of the felony, and another or others of the misdemeanor, under this section (R. v. Cunningham, Bell, 72; 28 L. J. (M. C.) 66; see R. v. Archer, 2 Mood. C. C. 283: R. v. Elliott, 1 Cox, 36), on the principle that there may be a joint assault with a felonious intent in some only, R. v. Archer, ubi supra.

ATTEMPTING TO POISON, SHOOT, DROWN, ETC., WITH INTENT TO MURDER.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100 (Offences against the Person Act, 1861), s. 14.]—Whosoever shall attempt to administer to or shall attempt to cause to be administered to or to be taken by any person any poison or other destructive thing, or shall shoot at any person, or shall, by drawing a trigger or in any other manner, attempt to discharge any kind of loaded arms at any person, or shall attempt to drown, suffocate, or strangle any person, with intent, in any of the cases aforesaid, to commit murder, shall, whether any bodily injury be effected or not, be guilty of felony; and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for life. . . . [This is taken from 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 85, s. 3, with modifications.]

Sect. 19—Loaded arms, defined.]—Any gun, pistol, or other arms which shall be loaded in the barrel with gunpowder or any other explosive substance, and ball, shot, slug, or other destructive material, shall be deemed to be loaded arms within the meaning of this Act, although the attempt to discharge the same may fail from want of proper priming or from any other cause. [This clause was new law in 1861, and was framed to get rid of R. v. Williams, 1 Den. 39; 1 C. & K. 589: R. v. Carr, R. & R. 377: R. v. Harris, 5 C. & P. 159. As to the effect of this definition, see post, p. 820.]

Indictment for attempting to Poison, with Intent, etc. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 14, supra.)

Commencement as ante, p. 813]—feloniously did attempt to administer ("attempt to administer to or attempt to cause to be administered to or to be taken by") to one J. N., a certain poison, to wit, two drachms of a certain poison called white arsenic ("any poison or other destructive thing") with intent, etc., as in the precedent (ante, p. 815). Add counts charging that the defendant "attempted to cause to be administered to," and that he "attempted to cause to be taken by" J. N. the poison, etc.

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 14; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2, ante, p. 235). As to requiring the defendant to enter into recognizances, and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 71 (ante, p. 778).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove the attempt to administer the poison or other destructive thing, as stated in the indictment. As to what is "administering," see ante, p. 816. Putting poison where it is likely to be found and taken seems to be an attempt to murder within this enactment. R. v. Dale, 6 Cox, 14. Prove the intent, as in the last case. It is immaterial whether bodily injury be or be not effected.

The delivery of poison to an agent, with directions to him to cause it to be administered to another, under such circumstances that if administered the agent would be the sole principal felon, would doubtless come within the words "shall attempt to cause to be administered to or to be taken by," which are for the first time to be found in the present statute. It was held not an attempt to administer within 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 85, s. 8 (rep.): R. v. Williams, 1 C. & K. 589; 1 Den. 39.

Indictment for attempting to Drown, etc., with intent to Murder. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 14, ante, p. 817.)

Commencement as ante, p. 813]—feloniously did attempt to drown and suffocate ("drown, suffocate, or strangle") one J. N., with intent thereby then feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, the said J. N., to kill and murder; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. Add a count charging the intent to be "to commit murder." In former editions of this work prior to the 22nd ed. the indictment for this offence set out the manner in which the attempt was made. The provisions of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 6 (ante, p. 776), do not apply to attempts; it is, however, now the practice simply to charge the attempt, following the words of the statute: moreover, it is submitted that "with intent to murder the said J. N." would be a sufficient averment of the intent in the first count. And see ante, p. 815.

Felony: 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 14. See the last precedent.

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove the attempt to drown, as stated in the indictment, and the intent as directed, ante, pp. 303, 308-312, 340. It is immaterial whether bodily injury be or be not proved.

Indictment for Shooting with intent to Murder. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 14, ante, p. 817.)

Commencement as ante, p. 813]—a certain gun, then loaded with gunpowder and divers leaden shot, at one J. N. feloniously did shoot, with intent, etc., as in the last precedent. Add a count charging an intent to commit murder and, if a wound was caused, one for wounding with intent to do grievous bodily harm. Unless wounding is charged the jury cannot convict of unlawful wounding. See R. v. Miller, 14 Cox, 356 (ante, p. 815). On an indictment under 1 Vict. c. 84, s. 4 (rep.), it seems to have been held unnecessary to state with what the gun was loaded, and sufficient to say "with a certain loaded gun." R. v. Cox, 3 Cox, 58, Platt, B.

Felony: 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 14. See the last precedent but one.

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove the shooting, as stated in the indictment, and that the gun was loaded in the barrel with gunpowder or some other explosive substance, and with ball, shot, slug, or other destructive material. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 19 (ante, p. 818). See R. v. Kitchen, R. & R. 95: R. v. Hughes, 5 C. & P. 126: R. v. Coates, 6 C. & P. 394: R. v. Oxford, 9 C. & P. 525; 4 St. Tr., N. S. 497. Prove also the intent as directed ante, pp. 303, 308-312, 340. In R. v. Jones, 9 C. & P. 258, Patteson, J., appeared to think it doubtful whether, under 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 85, s. 3 (rep.) (which was in the same terms as the present statute), it must not appear, in order to make out the intent to murder, that that intent existed in the mind of the defendant at the time of the offence, or whether it would be sufficient if it would have been murder had death ensued; he said, however, that the circumstance that it would have been murder if death had ensued would be a good ground whence the jury might infer the existing intent, as every man must be taken to intend the necessary consequences of his acts.

Upon an indictment for shooting at H. with intent to murder H., it appeared that the defendant intended to shoot at and kill L., but shot at H. by mistake, and Littledale, J., left it to the jury to say whether the defendant intended to murder H.: and upon their finding that he shot at H. intending to murder L., directed an acquittal. R. v. Holt, 7 C. & P. 518. That case arose under 9 G. 4, c. 31, ss. 11, 12 (rep.), the words of which were "with intent to murder such person." But it would seem, however, from R. v. Ryan, 2 M. & Rob. 213 (ante, p. 816), that the intent must still be proved as laid; and therefore that an allegation of an intent to murder A. would not be satisfied if it appeared that, although A. was struck, the shot was intended for another person. But where the defendant was charged with wounding T. with intent to murder him, and it appeared in evidence that the defendant intended to murder M., and that he shot at and wounded T., supposing him to be M., and the jury found that he intended to murder the man at whom he shot, supposing him to be M., the court held the conviction right. R. v. Smith, Dears. 559; 25 L. J. (M. C.) 29; 7 Cox, 51; followed in R. v. Stopford, 11 Cox, 643; see also post, p. 842. To avoid such questions, the indictment should always contain a count charging an intent "to commit murder" generally.

Indictment for attempting to Shoot, with Intent, etc. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 14, ante, p. 817.)

Commencement as ante, p. 813]—feloniously, by drawing the trigger ("drawing a trigger, or in any other manner") of certain loaded arms, to wit, a pistol ("any kind of loaded arms"), then loaded in the barrel with gunpowder and one leaden bullet, did attempt to discharge the said pistol at one J. N., with intent, etc., as in the precedent, ante, p. 465. It does not appear essential to state with what the gun is loaded. R. v. Cox, 3 Cox, 58. Add a count charging an intent "to commit murder," and counts for attempting to shoot with intent to maim, etc., as post, p. 843.

Felony: 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 14. See the punishment, ante, p. 818.

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant presented a pistol (or gun) at J. N., and attempted, by pulling the trigger, to discharge it at him. If the weapon be "loaded in the barrel with gunpowder or other explosive material and ball, etc.," the fact that the prisoner fails to discharge it "from want of proper priming or any other cause" is no defence to an indictment under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 14, by reason of s. 19 of that statute (ante, p. 818). R. v. Carr, R. & R. 377, and the other decisions on statutes prior to 1861, cited ante, p. 818 (the effect of which was that the weapon must be so loaded as to be capable of being discharged), are no longer law. See Greaves, Cr. Law Cons. Acts (2nd. ed.), 53. In R. v. Gamble, 10 Cox, 545, an attempt to fire off an unprimed pistol was held not to be within s. 14; but in that case the attention of the court was not called to s. 19. An attempt to fire a revolver loaded in some chambers, which fails because the hammer falls on a barrel containing an empty cartridge case, is within s. 14. R. v. Jackson, 17 Cox, 104, Charles, J. So also where the prisoner pulls the trigger of a central-fire revolver loaded with rim-fire cartridges, unless he knows that such cartridges could not be discharged in such a weapon. R. v. Jones, Staff. Autumn Assizes (1901), 36 L. J. Newsp. 650, Kennedy, J.

If B. draw a loaded pistol from his pocket for the purpose of murdering S., but before he has time to do anything further in pursuance of his purpose the pistol is snatched out of his hand—semble, that B. commits an offence within s. 14 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100; R. v. Brown, 10 Q. B. D. 381; 52 L. J. (M. C.) 49; 15 Cox, 199; and at all events, if he puts his finger on the trigger and attempts to pull it, and is only prevented from doing so by the forcible interference of bystanders, he commits that offence. R. v. Duckworth [1892] 2 Q. B. 83; 17 Cox, 495; overruling on that point R. v. St. George, 9 C. & P. 483 (post, p. 834) and R. v. Lewis, Id. 523. Prove the intent as directed, ante, pp. 303, 308–312, 340; and see R. v. Lallement, 6 Cox, 204.

DESTROYING BUILDINGS BY EXPLOSIVES WITH INTENT TO MURDER.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100 (Offences against the Person Act, 1861), s. 12.]—Whosoever, by the explosion of gunpowder or other explosive substance, shall destroy or damage any building with intent to commit murder, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for life. . . . [This section re-enacts 9 & 10 Vict. c. 25, s. 2, omitting the words "unlawfully and maliciously," and substituting the words "intent to commit murder" for the words "with intent to murder any person."]

Sect. 64—Possessing or making gunpowder, etc., to commit felonies.]—Whosoever shall knowingly have in his possession or make or manufacture any gunpowder, explosive substance, or any dangerous or noxious thing, or any machine, engine, instrument, or thing, with intent by means thereof to commit any of the felonies in this Act mentioned, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, . . . and, if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping. [Cf. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 54, ante, p. 664.]

38 & 39 Vict. c. 75, s. 86.]—Search for Explosives.

Commencement as ante, p. 813]—feloniously did, by the explosion of a certain explosive substance, that is to say, gunpowder, destroy ("destroy or damage") a certain building situate in the parish of ——, in the county aforesaid, with intent to commit murder; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. [The words "with intent to commit murder" generally have been held sufficient. R. v. Ryan, 2 M. & Rob. 213.] If there be evidence of an intent to murder any particular person, add a count or counts charging such particular intent, which may be framed from the precedents (ante, pp. 818, 819).

Felony: penal servitude for life, or for not less than three years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 12; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 71 (ante, p. 778).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

As to the proof of the act charged, and of its having been done maliciously, see ante, pp. 651, 669, 701.

As to the proof of the intent, see ante, pp. 303, 308-312, 340.

DESTROYING SHIPS WITH INTENT TO MURDER.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100 (Offences against the Person Act, 1861), s. 13.]—Whosoever shall set fire to any ship or vessel or any part thereof, or any part of the tackle, apparel, or furniture thereof, or any goods or chattels being therein, or shall cast away or destroy any ship or vessel, with intent in any of such cases to commit murder, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for life. . . .

[This section re-enacts 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 89, s. 4, with the addition of the words in italics and omission of the words "unlawfully and maliciously," and substituting "intent to commit murder" for "intent to murder any person."]

The indictment may be easily framed from the precedents, ante, pp. 659, 660, alleging the intent to commit murder, as in the last precedent.

The punishment is the same as under the last precedent.

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

The evidence also will be the same as under the precedents above mentioned, together with proof of the intent, as directed ante, pp. 303, 308-312, 340.

OTHER ATTEMPTS TO MURDER.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100 (Offences against the Person Act, 1861), s. 15.]—Whosoever shall, by any means other than those specified in any of the preceding sections of this Act, attempt to commit murder, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable to . . . be kept in penal servitude for life. . . .

[This enactment was new in 1861.]

Indictment.

Commencement as ante, p. 813]—feloniously did, by then [state the act] attempt feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, one J. N. to kill and murder; against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace of our lord the King, his crown and dignity. [Add a count charging the intent to be "to commit murder." It would appear that, having regard to the words "by any means other than those specified, etc.," in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 15, the "means" should be set out in an indictment thereunder, at all events in one set of counts.]

Felony: punishable by penal servitude for life or not less than three years, or by imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 15: 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1 (ante, p. 235); as to fine and recognizances, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 71 (ante, p. 778).

No offence against this section is triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant committed or procured the commission of the overt act stated in the indictment; and that it was done with intent to murder, which of course may be implied from the nature of the act itself, or may be proved by other evidence, or by threats or declarations of the defendant to that effect (see ante, pp. 303, 308, et seq.).

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 15, includes every attempt to murder not specified in any preceding section of the Act. Where a woman jumped out of a window to avoid the violence of her husband, it was held that he could not be convicted of an attempt to murder unless it were proved that he intended by his conduct to make her jump out. R. v. Donovan, 4 Cox, 399: but see R. v. Halliday, 61 L. T. 701; 38 W. R. 256 (C. C. R.), and other cases (ante, p. 785). It therefore embraces cases where machinery used in lowering miners into mines has been injured with intent that it may break and precipitate the miners to the bottom of the pit. And cases where steam-engines are injured in order to kill any person, fall within it; and cases of sending or placing infernal machines with intent to murder. R. v. Mountford, 1 Mood. C. C. 441; 7 C. & P. 242; 3 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 280, n. This section, however, does not embrace attempts to murder which are ejusdem generis with those mentioned in ss. 11–14 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100. R. v. Brown, 10 Q. B. D. 381; 52 L. J. (M. C.) 49; 15 Cox, 199 (C. C. R.). Therefore, where the prisoner drew a loaded pistol from his pocket, for the purpose of murdering the prosecutor, but before he had time to do anything further in pursuance of his purpose, the pistol was snatched out of his hand, it was held that the offence was not within s. 15, being ejusdem generis with the offences mentioned in s. 14, even if it did not actually come within s. 14, but semble that it did come within s. 14. Id.: and see now R. v. Duckworth [1892] 2 Q. B. 83 (ante, p. 821).

An attempt to commit suicide is not an attempt to commit murder within the meaning of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 15, but remains a common law misdemeanor triable at quarter sessions. R. v. Burgess, L. & C. 258; 32 L. J. (M. C.) 55; 9 Cox, 302 (C. C. R.).

Sect. 2.

Endeavouring to conceal the birth of children.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100 (Offences against the Person Act, 1861), s. 60.]—If any woman shall be delivered of a child, every person who shall, by any secret disposition of the dead body of the said child, whether such child died before, at, or after its birth, endeavour to conceal the birth thereof, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour: Provided, that if any person tried for the murder of any child shall be acquitted thereof, it shall be lawful for the jury by whose verdict such person shall be acquitted, to find, in case it shall so appear in evidence, that the child had recently been born, and that such person did, by some secret disposition of the dead body of such child, endeavour to conceal the birth thereof; and thereupon the court may pass such sentence as if such person had been convicted upon an indictment for the concealment of the birth. [This section was taken from 9 G. 4, c. 31, s. 14; and 10 G. 4, c. 34, s. 17 (1), with the alterations printed in italics. Under the former enactments the mother only could be tried for the offence, and the words, "by any secret disposition" have been substituted for "by secret burying or otherwise disposing of the dead body." For the history of the legislation on this subject, see 3 Russ. Cr. (6th. ed.) 162. As to indictments for murder, see ante, p. 778.]

Indictment against a Mother.

Yorkshire, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present, that A. S., being delivered of a child, unlawfully on the —— day of ——, in the year of our Lord ——, by a certain secret disposition of the dead body of the said child, to wit, by (describe means of concealment) did endeavour to conceal the birth thereof; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. The terms of the repealed Act 9 G. 4, c. 31, s. 14, under which the precedent given in editions of this work prior to the 22*nd appears to have been drawn, were "by secret burying or otherwise disposing of the dead body;" and an indictment under that Act for concealing the birth "by secretly disposing of the dead body," etc., without showing the mode of disposing of it, was held bad. R.* v. Hounsell, 2 M. & Rob. 292. Where the indictment charged that the defendant cast and threw the dead body of the child into the soil in a certain privy, "and did thereby then and there unlawfully dispose of the dead body of the said child, and endeavour to conceal the birth thereof," it was held sufficient; the word "thereby" being referred as well to the endeavour as to the disposing of the body. R. v. Coxhead, 1 C. & K. 623. The indictment must state that the child is dead (R. v. Davis, 3 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 167), but need not state whether the child died before, at, or after its birth. R. v. Coxhead, ubi supra. Under the present statute a person assisting the mother in concealing a birth (who was formerly only indictable as an aider and abettor) is indictable as a principal.

The proviso extends to a trial on a coroner's inquisition as well as on an indictment. R. v. Cole, 2 Leach, 1095; 3 Camp. 371: R. v. Maynard, R. & R. 240: and see 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 30 (ante, p. 55).

Misdemeanor: imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 60. As to fining the offender and requiring her to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour, Id. s. 71 (ante, p. 778).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant was delivered of a child as stated in the indictment; that the child was dead at the time of the secret disposition of its body. R. v. May, 10 Cox, 448: R. v. Bell, Ir. Rep., 8 C. L. 542 (C. C. R.): R. v. Williams, 11 Cox, 684: and cf. R. v. Bate, Id. 686. It is immaterial whether it die before, at, or after its birth, 24 & 25 Vict.

c. 100, s. 60 (ante, p. 823). And prove the concealment, etc., in the mode stated in the indictment. A fœtus not bigger than a man's finger, but having the shape of a child, has been held to be a child within the statute. R. v. Colmer, 9 Cox, 506, Martin, B.; but see R. v. Hewitt, 4 F. & F. 1101: R. v. Berriman, 6 Cox, 388, Erle, J.

Concealment—Secret Disposition.]—Where a woman was delivered of a child, the dead body of which was found in a bed amongst the feathers, but there was no evidence to show who put it there, and it appeared that the mother had sent for a surgeon at the time of her confinement, and had prepared child's clothes, the judge directed an acquittal of the charge for endeavouring to conceal the birth. R. v. Higley, 4 C. & P. 366. But the fact that the mother had previously allowed the birth to be known to some persons is not conclusive evidence negativing concealment. R. v. Douglas, 1 Mood. C. C. 480: cf. R. v. Cornwall, R. & R. 336. On the other hand, the denial of the birth only is not sufficient to convict her; she must be proved to have done some act of disposal of the body after the child was dead. R. v. Turner, 8 C. & P. 755. The putting of the dead body between a bed and the mattress, or under a bolster on which the defendant laid her head, was held to be a sufficient "disposing of" it to constitute an offence within 9 G. 4, c. 31, s. 14 (rep.), though the disposition may have been only temporary. R. v. Perry, Dears. 471; 24 L. J. (M. C.) 137; 6 Cox, 531 (C. C. R.): following R. v. Goldthorpe, 2 Mood. C. C. 244; C. & Mar. 335, which overruled the earlier cases in which it was held that a final disposing of the body must be shown. See R. v. Farnham, 1 Cox, 349, Patteson, J. Where, however, the prisoner had placed the body of her child in an open box in her bedroom, Byles, J., although he left the case to the jury, intimated to them his opinion, that there was no secret disposition of the dead body, and the prisoner was acquitted. R. v. Sleep, 9 Cox, 559. So also where the prisoner put the dead body of her child into a box, and put this box into a larger box (neither of the boxes being locked or fastened, although they were closed), and then placed the boxes in a room much resorted to by the people in the house, and in such a position as to attract attention, Bovill, C.J., directed the jury that there was no secret disposition of the dead body. R. v. George, 11 Cox, 41. There may, however, be circumstances attending the deposit by the prisoner of the body of a child in an unlocked box, which may warrant the conclusion that such deposit was a secret disposition of the body. R. v. Cook, 11 Cox, 542, Lush, J. Where the prisoner took the body out of the house and placed it in a pinfold or pound, which was open to the sky, although locked, and surrounded by a wall five feet high, along which there was a public footway, Martin, B., held that there was no secret disposition of the body. R. v. Nixon, 4 F. & F. 1040, note (a). See also R. v. Clarke, Id. 1040. And to take the dead body of a child and leave it exposed in a public street does not constitute a concealment within the statute, but is indictable as a nuisance. R. v. Clark, 15 Cox, 171, Denman, J. The most open exposure may, however, be a secret disposition, as, for instance, in the middle of Dartmoor, or on the top of a mountain in Scotland in winter. R. v. Brown, L. R., 1 C. C. R. 244; 39 L. J. (M. C.) 94; 11 Cox, 517, Bovill, C.J. In that case the following facts were held to be evidence to go to the jury of a secret disposition of the dead body of the child. The prisoner put the dead body of her child over a wall which was four and a half feet high and divided a yard from a field. The yard was at the back of a public-house, and entered from the street by a narrow passage. The prisoner did not live at the public-house, and must have carried the body from the street up the passage to the yard. The field was grazed by the cattle of a butcher, and the only entrance to it was through a gate leading from the butcher's own yard. There was no path through the field, and a person in the field could only see the body in case he went up to the wall, close against which the body lay. There was nothing on or over the body to conceal it. In R. v. Waterage, 1 Cox, 338, taking the body of a child to the house of a sister of the mother for burial in a churchyard was held not concealment. In R. v. Hughes, 4 Cox, 447, a woman placed a living child in a place of concealment. On her return she found the child dead and left it where it lay, replacing the materials by which the concealment was effected. This was held a concealment within 9 G. 4, c. 31, s. 14 (rep.). In R. v. Opie, 8 Cox, 332, the discovery of the dead body of a child three days after birth in a tub covered over, behind the door of the privy of the house in which the mother lived, was held not conclusive evidence of concealment. But in that case Martin, B., expressed his dissent from the decision of the C. C. R. in R. v. Perry (ante, p. 825). Cf. R. v. Goode, 6 Cox, 318.

Identification.]—In order to convict a woman of attempting to conceal the birth of her child, a dead body must be found and identified as that of the child of which she is alleged to have been delivered. R. v. Williams, 11 Cox, 684; and see R. v. Bell, Ir. Rep., 8 C. L. 542 (C. C. R.). A woman apparently pregnant, while staying at S., received by post, on the 28th August, 1870, an R. newspaper, with the R. postmark upon it. On the same day her appearance and the state of her room indicated that she had been delivered of a child. She left for D. next morning, carrying a parcel. That afternoon a parcel was found in a waiting-room at S. station. It was the dead body of a newly-born child, wrapped in an R. newspaper of 27th August, 1870, bearing the R. postmark. There is a railway from S. to D., but no proof was given of the woman having been at S. station. It was held that this evidence was insufficient to identify the body found as the child of which the woman was said to have been delivered, and would not therefore justify her conviction for endeavouring to conceal the birth of her child. Id., Montague Smith, J. Where the only evidence against a prisoner for endeavouring to conceal the birth of her child was that she had been delivered of a child, the body of which was taken away by two other persons, but the prisoner did not know where it was put; this was held not sufficient to warrant a conviction. R. v. Bate, 11 Cox, 686, Montague Smith, J.

As to cases when a mother indicted for the murder of her newly-born child can be convicted of manslaughter, see R. v. Knights, 2 F. & F. 46: R. v. Handley, 13 Cox, 79 (ante, p. 785).

(24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 58, supra.)

Surrey, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present, that J. S., on the first day of June, in the year of our Lord ——, feloniously and unlawfully did administer to and cause to be taken by one A. N. ("administer to her or cause to be taken by her") two ounces of a certain noxious thing called savin ("poison or other noxious thing"), with intent thereby then to procure the miscarriage of the said A. N.; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. If there be any doubt as to the thing administered, it will be prudent to state it in different ways, in several counts, and add a count stating it to be "a certain noxious thing to the jurors aforesaid unknown."

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 58; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 71 (ante, p. 778).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

To support this indictment it must be proved:—

1. That the defendant administered to or caused to be taken by A. N., the poison, etc., mentioned in the indictment: or, perhaps, any other substance or thing ejusdem generis. R. v. Phillips, 3 Camp. 73. R. v. Coe, 6 C. & P. 403. In R. v. Cadman, as reported in 1 Mood. C. C. 114, where the defendant gave the prosecutrix a cake containing poison, which she merely put into her mouth and spit out again, and did not swallow any part of it, it was held that the mere delivery to the woman did not constitute an administering within the meaning of the statute; although the judges seemed to think that swallowing it was not essential. But in R. v. Walford (Essex Assizes, Feb. 1899), 34 L. J. Newsp. 116, Wills, J., said that that case must be inaccurately reported, and held it unnecessary for proving administration to show that the poison was taken into the stomach (see ante, p. 816): and it is not necessary that there should be an actual delivery by the hand of the defendant. R. v. Harley, 4 C. & P. 309. Where the prisoner gave the prosecutrix the drug for the purpose of procuring abortion, and the prosecutrix took it for that purpose in the prisoner's absence, this was held to be a causing of it to be taken within 9 G. 4, c. 31, s. 14 (rep.), of which 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 58, is a re-enactment. R. v. Wilson, Dears. & B. 127; L. J. (M. C.) 18; 7 Cox, 190: R. v. Farrow, Dears. & B. 164. It is not sufficient that the defendant merely imagined that the thing administered would have the effect intended; but it must also appear that the substance administered was either a "poison" or a "noxious thing." See R. v. Isaacs, L. & C. 220; 32 L. J. (M. C.) 52; 9 Cox, 228 (C. C. R.): R. v. Hollis, 12 Cox, 463 (C. C. R.). Where the substance administered is a recognized "poison," then it may be that, although the quantity administered by the defendant is so small as to be incapable of doing harm, that is sufficient to bring him within the statute. R. v. Cramp, 5 Q. B. D. 307; 49 L. J. (M. C.) 44; 14 Cox, 401 (C. C. R.). Where the substance is not a "poison," then although if when administered in small quantities it may be innoxious and even useful, yet if the quantity administered by the defendant is noxious, the quantity of the substance so administered by him is a "noxious thing" within the statute. Id. On the other hand, if the substance, when administered in large quantities, is noxious, yet if in the quantity administered by the defendant it is innoxious, he is not guilty of the administration of a "noxious thing" within the statute. R. v. Hennah, 13 Cox, 547, Cockburn, C.J., and Hawkins, J.

As to proof of statement in the absence of the accused by the woman to whom the substance was administered, see R. v. Smith, 18 Cox, 470 (ante, p. 323). As to corroboration of her evidence, see R. v. Cramp, 14 Cox, 390, Denman, J. (ante, p. 391).

2. It must be proved that the substance in question was administered with intent to procure the miscarriage of A. N. Whether it were, in fact, a substance likely or calculated to produce that effect, seems to be immaterial, provided the intent be proved, and the substance were a "poison" or "other noxious thing." As to mode of proving intent, see ante, pp. 303, 308, 340.

3. The statutes 43 G. 3, c. 58, and 9 G. 4, c. 31, s. 14, contained provisions applicable to women quick and not quick with child, and therefore clearly showed that, to constitute an offence within those Acts, the woman must have been pregnant at the time. See R. v. Scudder, 1 Mood. C. C. 216; 3 C. & P. 605: R. v. Phillips, 3 Camp. 73: R. v. Wycherley, 8 C. & P. 262. But in the present enactment these provisions are omitted, and the offence is to procure the miscarriage of "any woman, whether she be or be not with child." See R. v. Goodall, or Goodchild, 1 Den. 187; 2 C. & K. 293; 2 Cox, 41. The present Act also applies equally (the repealed statutes did not) to acts done by the woman herself for the purpose of procuring her miscarriage, as to acts done by any other person.

Although under s. 58, if a woman with intent to procure her own miscarriage does any of the acts mentioned in that section, she only commits a crime under that section if she is with child, yet she may be convicted of conspiring with other persons to procure her own miscarriage, although she may not in fact be with child. R. v. Whitchurch, 24 Q. B. D. 420; 59 L. J. (M. C.) 77; 16 Cox, 743 (C. C. R.).

If the woman die in consequence of the felonious act, the person who committed it is indictable for murder: see ante, p. 798, et seq.

Indictment for using Instruments to procure Miscarriage. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 58, ante, p. 826.)

Commencement as in last precedent]—feloniously and unlawfully did use a certain instrument ("any instrument or other means whatsoever") called a ——, by then [state the mode of using the instrument], with intent, etc. [as in the last precedent].

Felony: 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 85. See the last precedent.

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

The evidence will be the same as in the last case, with this exception, that instead of proving the administration of the poison, etc., it must be proved that the defendant used the instrument mentioned, in the manner described in the indictment. Where the instrument alleged to have been used was a quill, which might possibly have been used for an innocent purpose, evidence was allowed to be given in order to prove the intent, that the prisoner had at other times caused miscarriages by similar means. R. v. Dale, 16 Cox, 703, Charles, J. As to the principle upon which this kind of evidence is admissible, see ante, p. 308.

As to inciting a person to attempt to commit an offence against this section, see R. v. Brown, 63 J. P. 790, post, Book II. Part III. s. 8.

Indictment for procuring Poison for the purpose of its being used to cause Miscarriage. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 59, ante, p. 827.)

Commencement as ante, p. 827]—unlawfully did procure ("supply or procure") two ounces of a certain noxious thing called savin, he the said J. S. then knowing that the same was then intended to be unlawfully used and employed with intent to procure the miscarriage of one A. N.; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

Misdemeanor: penal servitude for not less than three years and not exceeding five years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years—24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 59; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to fining the offender and requiring him to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, and being of good behaviour, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 71 (ante, p. 778).

Evidence.

In order to constitute the offence of supplying a noxious thing knowing that the same was intended to be used with intent to procure a miscarriage, the substance supplied must be of a noxious character (in the quantity in which it was supplied). R. v. Cramp, and R. v. Hennah (ante, p. 828); and it is not sufficient that, being harmless in itself, it might, if taken under a belief that it would procure miscarriage, produce that result by its mere action on the imagination. R. v. Isaacs (ante, p. 828). If, however, the drug administered produces miscarriage, although there be no other evidence of its nature, this is sufficient evidence of its being a noxious thing. R. v. Hollis, 12 Cox, 463 (C. C. R.). If the drug supplied by the defendant be noxious, and be supplied with intent to procure miscarriage, the offence is complete, although the woman herself may not have intended to use the drug, and although no other person than the defendant may have intended that it should be used for the purpose of causing a miscarriage: R. v. Hillman, L. & C. 343; 33 L. J. (M. C.) 60; 9 Cox, 386: and although the woman was not, and never had been, pregnant. R. v. Titley, 14 Cox, 502, Stephen, J. (a).

Sect. 4.

ASSAULT, BATTERY, WOUNDING, ETC.

Statutes.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100 (Offences against the Person Act, 1861), s. 43—Aggravated assaults.]—When any person shall be charged before two justices of the peace with an assault and battery upon a male child whose age shall not, in the opinion of such justices, exceed fourteen years, or on any female, either upon the complaint of the party aggrieved or otherwise, if the assault or battery is of such an aggravated nature that it cannot, in their opinion, be sufficiently punished under the provisions hereinbefore contained (s. 42) as to common assaults and batteries, may proceed to hear and determine the same in a summary way; and if the same be proved, may convict the person accused; and every such offender shall be liable to be imprisoned in the common gaol or house of correction, with or without hard labour, for any period not exceeding six months, or to pay a fine not exceeding (together with costs) the sum of 20*l.*, and in default of payment to be imprisoned in the common gaol or house of correction for any period not exceeding six months, unless such fine and costs be sooner paid, and if the justices shall so think fit in any of the said cases, shall be bound to keep the peace and be of good behaviour for any period not exceeding six months from the expiration of such sentence. [See Godsen v. Dartford Justices, 62 J. P. 104. A person charged under this section cannot elect to be tried on indictment (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49, s. 17, ante, p. 6), but may be sent for trial under s. 46, infra. As to the procedure and evidence under this section, where the person assaulted is under sixteen, see 4 Edw. 7, c. 15, ss. 12–18, post, pp. 882–887.]

Sect. 44—Certificate of dismissal of charge of assault made to a court of summary jurisdiction.]—Ante, p. 175.

(a) The ratio decidendi of both these cases has been severely criticized in a colonial case upon an enactment in exactly the same terms as 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 59. R. v. Hyland [1898] 24 Victoria L. R. 101. There the police set a trap to catch a supposed abortionist, and wrote him a letter stating that a woman was pregnant and asking for something to cure her. In the mistaken belief that the woman existed, the prisoner sent pills containing a small quantity of a certain drug, and at the trial the question arose, and was reserved, whether the prisoner could be convicted, as the drug had not been supplied for an existing woman. The court of six judges was equally divided in opinion, three accepting R. v. Hillman as decisive and as correctly defining the word "knowing" so as to include "believing," the other three holding that the word "knowing" could not be so extended, and that the words "intended to be used" applied to the person supplied, and not to the supplier.

In R. v. Sculley [1903] 23 N. Z. L. R. 880, the court followed R. v. Hillman, but were of opinion that on a charge of "procuring" there must be evidence that the instrument, etc., was obtained for the forbidden purpose, and not merely that it was possessed and used for such purpose.

Sect. 45—Certificate of conviction, effect, etc.]—Ante, p. 175.

Sect. 46.]—Provided that in case the justices shall find the assault or battery complained of (under ss. 42, 43) to have been accompanied by any attempt to commit felony, or shall be of opinion that the same is, from any other circumstances, a fit subject for a prosecution by indictment, they shall abstain from any adjudication thereon, and shall deal with the case in all respects as if they had no authority finally to hear and determine the same:

Provided also that nothing herein contained shall authorize any justices to hear and determine any case of assault and battery in which any questions shall arise as to the title to any lands, tenements, or hereditaments or any interest therein or accruing therefrom, or as to any bankruptcy or insolvency or any execution under the process of any court of justice. [See Anon., 1 B. & Ad. 382: R. v. French, 20 Cox, 200. The justices can commit for trial even where the person assaulted does not prosecute. R. v. Gaunt, 18 Cox, 210; 60 J. P. 90 (C. C. R.).]

Sect. 47—Aggravated and common assaults.]—Whosoever shall be convicted upon an indictment of any assault occasioning actual bodily harm shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude. . . .

And whosoever shall be convicted upon an indictment for a common assault shall be liable to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding one year, with or without hard labour. [The first part of this section re-enacts 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 29. The italicized part was new in 1861. For indictment, see post, p. 832. Cf. s. 20, post, p. 839.]

58 & 59 Vict. c. 39 (Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895), s. 4—Power to make a separation order in favour of a married woman on conviction of her husband of assaulting her.]—Any married woman whose husband shall have been convicted summarily of an aggravated assault upon her within the meaning of s. 43 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (ante, p. 830), or whose husband shall have been convicted upon indictment of an assault upon her, and sentenced to pay a fine of more than 5*l.*, or to a term of imprisonment exceeding two months, or whose husband shall have deserted her, or whose husband shall have been guilty of persistent cruelty to her, or wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance for her or her infant children whom he is legally liable to maintain, and shall by such cruelty or neglect have caused her to leave and live separately and apart from him, may apply to any court of summary jurisdiction acting within the city, borough, petty sessional, or other division or district in which any such conviction has taken place, or in which the cause of complaint shall have wholly or partially arisen, for an order or orders under this Act:

Provided that where a married woman is entitled to apply for an order or orders under this section on the ground of the conviction of her husband upon indictment she may apply to the court before whom her husband has been convicted, and that court shall, for the purpose of this section, become a court of summary jurisdiction, and shall have the power without a jury to hear an application, and make the order or orders applied for. [Where a husband was convicted at assizes upon an indictment for throwing corrosive fluid on his wife with intent to burn, and was sentenced to imprisonment with hard labour for eighteen months, an order was made by Darling, J., on the application of the wife (under this and the following sections), that she be no longer bound to cohabit with her husband. R. v. Knowles, 65 J. P. 27.]

Sect. 5—Provisions which may be included in a separation order.]—The court of summary jurisdiction to which any application under this Act is made may make an order or orders containing all or any of the provisions following, viz.:—

(a) A provision that the applicant be no longer bound to cohabit with her husband (which provision while in force shall have the effect in all respects of a decree of judicial separation on the ground of cruelty):

(b) A provision that the legal custody of any children of the marriage between the applicant and her husband while under the age of sixteen years be committed to the applicant:

(c) A provision that the husband shall pay to the applicant personally, or for her use, to any officer of the court, or third person on her behalf, such weekly sum not exceeding two pounds as the court shall, having regard to the means of both the husband and wife, consider reasonable:

(d) A provision for payment by the applicant or the husband, or both of them, of the costs of the court and such reasonable costs of either of the parties as the court may think fit. [See note to s. 4, supra.]

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 74—Payment of prosecutor's costs by defendant.]—Where any person shall be convicted on any indictment of any assault, whether with or without battery and wounding, or either of them, such person may, if the court think fit, in addition to any sentence which the court may deem proper for the offence, be adjudged to pay to the prosecutor his actual and necessary costs and expenses of the prosecution, and such moderate allowance for the loss of time as the court shall by affidavit or other inquiry and examination ascertain to be reasonable; and unless the sum so awarded shall be sooner paid, the offender shall be imprisoned for any term the court shall award, not exceeding three months, in addition to the term of imprisonment (if any) to which the offender may be sentenced for the offence. [See ante, p. 260. This section and s. 75 were framed on 10 G. 4, c. 34, ss. 33, 34 (Ir.), but express the established English practice. See Beeley v. Wingfield, 11 East, 46; 10 R. R. 431: Keir v. Leeman, 6 Q. B. 308; 9 Q. B. 371.]

Sect. 75—Such costs may be levied by distress.]—The court may by warrant under hand and seal, order such sum as shall be so awarded to be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the offender, and paid to the prosecutor, and that the surplus, if any, arising from such sale, shall be paid to the owner; and in case such sum shall be so levied, the imprisonment awarded until such payment of such sum shall thereupon cease. [See note to s. 74.]

Sect. 77—Costs of prosecutions.]—The court before which any misdemeanor indictable under the provisions of this Act shall be prosecuted or tried, may allow the costs of the prosecution in the same manner as in cases of felony; and every order for the payment of such costs shall be made out and the sum of money mentioned therein paid and repaid, upon the same terms and in the same manner in all respects as in cases of felony. [This was new law in 1861. As to costs generally, see ante, p. 246.]

Indictment for an Assault occasioning actual Bodily Harm. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 47, ante, p. 831.)

of our Lord ——, at the parish of, or in the county of ——, and within the jurisdiction of the said court, in and upon one J. N., unlawfully did make an assault, and him the said J. N. did then beat, wound, and ill-treat [thereby then occasioning to the said J. N. actual bodily harm], [and other wrongs to the said J. N. then did] to the great damage of the said J. N.; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. The words "and other wrongs to the said J. N. then did" appear to be surplusage. Att. Gen. for N. S. W. v. Macpherson, L. R. 3 P. C. 268; 39 L. J. (P. C.) 59; 11 Cox, 604. The defendant may be convicted of a common assault on this indictment. R. v. Oliver, Bell. 287; 30 L. J. (M. C.) 12; 8 Cox, 384: R. v. Yeadon, L. & C. 81; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 70; 9 Cox, 91. A conviction on a count charging that the defendant assaulted the prosecutor, and thereby unlawfully and maliciously inflicted upon him grievous bodily harm, was held to be warranted by a finding of the jury in the following terms (there being evidence of grievous bodily harm): "Guilty of an aggravated assault, without premeditation; it was done under the influence of passion." R. v. Sparrow, Bell, 298; 30 L. J. (M. C.) 43; 8 Cox, 393.

Misdemeanor: penal servitude for not less than three and not exceeding five years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 47; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to fining the offender and requiring him to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour, Id. s. 71 (ante, p. 778).

As to adjudging payment by the defendant of the costs of the prosecution in case of conviction, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, ss. 74, 75 (ante, p. 832).

The court will not pass judgment for an assault during the pendency of an action for the same assault. R. v. Mahon, 4 A. & E. 575.

The court may, with the assent of the prosecutor, if the circumstances appear to be such as to warrant that course, allow the defendant to plead guilty to a charge of assault, and inflict upon him a mere nominal fine, on the understanding that he shall make a compensation to the prosecutor. R. v. Roxburgh, 12 Cox, 8, Cockburn, C.J. But see post, tit. "Compounding Offences."

Indictment for Common Assault (Common law).

If the indictment be for a common assault only, omit the words between the * * and conclude "against the peace," etc., instead of "against the form," etc.

Misdemeanor: imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding one year; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 47; or by fine, etc., or order to pay costs, ut supra.

The indictment may be preferred by any person: and the right to prosecute is not restricted to the person aggrieved, even where the indictment is preferred after summary proceedings, in consequence of the decision of the justices, under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 46, supra. See R. v. Gaunt, 18 Cox, 210; 60 J. P. 90 (C. C. R.).

Evidence for the Prosecution.

Did make an assault.]—An assault is an attempt to commit a forcible crime against the person of another: such as an attempt to commit a battery, murder, robbery, rape, etc. The present is an indictment for an attempt to commit a battery, and also for a battery actually committed; and if the prosecutor prove either, the defendant must be convicted. Striking at another with a cane, stick or fist, although the party striking misses his aim; 2 Roll. Abr. p. 554, pl. 45; drawing a sword or bayonet, or throwing a bottle or glass with intent to wound or strike; presenting a loaded gun at a man who is within the distance to which the gun will carry (see R. v. St. George, 9 C. & P. 483: R. v. Baker, 1 C. & K. 254: Osborn v. Veitch, 1 F. & F. 317: Read v. Coker, 13 C. B. 850): pointing a pitchfork at him, when within reach of it; or any other like act indicating an intention to use violence against the person of another, is an assault. 1 Hawk, c. 62, s. 1. And if a person presents a firearm which he knows to be unloaded at another who does not know that it is unloaded, and so near that it might produce injury if it was loaded and went off, this is an assault. R. v. St. George, 9 C. & P. 483, per Parke, B.; but see R. v. James, 1 C. & K. 530, contra. In Hunter v. Johnson, 13 Q. B. D. 225, detention of a child after school hours by the master without lawful authority was held to be an assault. And see R. v. Linsborg, (post, p. 892).

Consent.]—As a general rule, if consent is freely given by a rational and sober person, knowing the nature of the act, it is an answer to the indictment, unless the consent is to bodily injury amounting to mayhem, or to an injury constituting a breach of the public peace. See Steph. Dig. Cr. L. (6th ed.) 164–166: R. v. Coney, 8 Q. B. D. 534; 51 L. J. (M. C.) 66; 15 Cox, 46 (C. C. R.). A magistrate has no right to order an examination of the person of a prisoner, and therefore an examination by medical men, in pursuance of such an order, of the person of a female, in custody upon the charge of concealing the birth of her illegitimate child, and against her consent, is an assault. Agnew v. Jobson, 13 Cox, 625, Lopes, J. For the American authorities on the physical examination of prisoners, see State of Iowa v. Height [1902] 94 Amer. State Reports, 323, and notes. If a master take indecent liberties with a female scholar, without her consent, though she does not resist, he may be convicted of a common assault. R. v. Nichol, R. & R. 130: see R. v. Day, 9 C. & P. 722, in which case Coleridge, J., drew a distinction between consent and submission. If a medical man unnecessarily strip a female patient naked, under the pretence that he cannot otherwise judge of her illness, it is an assault if he himself take off her clothes. R. v. Rosinski, 1 Mood. C. C. 19. So, where a medical man had connection with a girl fourteen years of age, under the pretence that he was thereby treating her medically for the complaint for which he was attending her, she making no resistance solely from the bonâ fide belief that such was the case, this was held to be certainly an assault, and probably a rape. R. v. Case, 1 Den. 580; 19 L. J. (M. C.) 174; 4 Cox, 220. Prior to 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 3, sub-s. 2 (post, p. 920), there seems to have been no doubt that the prisoner under such circumstances as those in R. v. Case, ubi supra, might be indicted for rape. R. v. Flattery, 2 Q. B. D. 410; 46 L. J. (M. C.) 130. In R. v. O'Shay, 19 Cox, 76, Ridley, J., held that the effect of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (s. 3, sub-s. 2), is to make R. v. Flattery no longer law, and that consent, however obtained, is an answer to an indictment for rape except in the cases within the last para. of s. 4 of that Act. But the learned judge appears to have directed the jury that if satisfied that the accused had obtained his purpose by fraud, they might convict of indecent assault. Cf. Steph. Dig. Cr. Law (6th ed.), p. 207. It was laid down by Willes, J., in R. v. Bennett, 4 F. & F. 1105, that assault is within the rule that fraud vitiates consent. Where, therefore, the prisoner, who had venereal disease, induced a girl of thirteen years of age, who was ignorant of his condition, to have connection with him, and he infected her, it was held that he was guilty of an indecent assault. R. v. Bennett, ubi supra. The prisoner might also, under a similar state of facts, be indicted for an assault occasioning actual bodily harm. R. v. Sinclair, 13 Cox, 28, Shee, J.: and see Hegarty v. Shine, 4 L. R. Ir. 288; 14 Cox, 145. The cases of R. v. Bennett and R. v. Sinclair, and the maxim that fraud vitiates consent, at all events in any wide application of that maxim, were the subjects of unfavourable comment by some among the majority of judges who decided R. v. Clarence, 22 Q. B. D. 23; 58 L. J. (M. C.) 10; 16 Cox, 511. The circumstances of that case were, however, very peculiar (see post, p. 845), nor were R. v. Bennett and R. v. Sinclair expressly overruled by it. Pollock, B., indeed, who was one of the majority, stated that although he saw great difficulty in adopting those cases in their integrity, he was not prepared to say that they should be overruled, as in cases of a similar kind, which might well arise, they were undoubtedly important and useful in the administration of the criminal law. But where there is full consent to the intercourse, it is difficult, since R. v. Clarence, to contend that concealment of the physical condition of the accused is such a fraud as to create criminal liability. See per Wills, J., 22 Q. B. D., 32–36.

If parish officers cut off the hair of a pauper in the poorhouse by force and against her will, it is an assault. Forde v. Skinner, 4 C. & P. 239.

In the case of an indecent assault on children of either sex, under the age of thirteen, consent is no defence. 43 & 44 Vict. c. 45, s. 2 (post, p. 918). Although, as a general proposition, it is true that there can be no assault unless the act charged as such be done without the consent of the person alleged to have been assaulted, this rule does not extend to cases where the alleged assault is of such a nature or is inflicted under such circumstances, that its infliction is injurious to the public as well as to the person injured, and involves an actual breach of the peace. R. v. Coney, 8 Q. B. D. 534; 51 L. J. (M. C.) 66; 15 Cox, 46. Therefore, in the case of a prize-fight, each of the fighters, and all persons aiding and abetting therein, are guilty of an assault. Id. An unlawful imprisonment is also an assault. Where the defendants took a new-born child from the mother, under pretence of taking it to an institution to be nursed, and put it into a bag, and hung the bag with the child in it on some palings by the wayside, this was held to be an assault. R. v. March, 1 C. & K. 496. But in R. v. Renshaw, 2 Cox, 285; 11 Jur. 615, abandoning a child in a dry ditch, where it suffered no harm from exposure, and was soon found, was held by Parke, B., not to be an assault.

Mere words, however, can never amount to an assault. 1 Hawk. c. 62, s. 1. So, if a man strike at another, but at such a distance that he cannot by possibility touch him, it is no assault. Com. Dig. Battery (C.). But if A. advance in a threatening attitude towards B. to strike him, and be stopped just before he is near enough for his blow to take effect, it is an assault. Stephens v. Myers, 4 C. & P. 349. The causing a deleterious drug to be taken by another was held to be an assault in R. v. Button, 8 C. & P. 660; but that decision is now overruled: see R. v. Dilworth, 2 M. & Rob. 531: R. v. Hanson, 2 C. & K. 912: R. v. Walkden, 1 Cox, 282. After an acquittal upon an indictment for rape, the prisoner may be convicted of a common assault. R. v. Dungey, 4 F. & F. 99, and ante, p. 170.

As to ill-treatment of lunatics, children, apprentices, and servants, see post, pp. 870, 877, et seq.

Did beat, wound, and ill-treat.]—A battery, in the legal acceptation of the word, includes beating and wounding. To beat, also in the legal acceptation of the term, means not merely to strike forcibly with the hand, or a stick, or the like, but includes every touching or laying hold

(however trifling) of another's person or clothes, in an angry, revengeful, rude, insolent, or hostile manner; 1 Hawk. c. 62, s. 2; see Rawlings v. Till, 3 M. & W. 28: Coward v. Baddeley, 4 H. & N. 478; 28 L. J. (Ex.) 260; as, for instance, thrusting or pushing him in anger: Cole v. Turner, 6 Mod. 142, Holt, C.J.; holding him by the arm; spitting in his face; R. v. Cotesworth, 6 Mod. 172; jostling him out of the way; Cole v. Turner, ubi supra; pushing another man against him; Bull. (N. P.) 16; throwing a squib at him; Scott v. Shepherd, 2 W. Bl. 892; striking a horse upon which he is riding, whereby he is thrown; Dodwell v. Burford, 1 Mod. 24; Anon., W. Jones, 444; or the like. If a man strike at another with a cane or fist, or throw a bottle at him, or the like, if he miss him it is an assault; if he hit him it is a battery. A wounding is where the violence is so great as to draw blood, by striking or stabbing with a sword, knife, or other instrument, or by shooting, or by striking with a cudgel or fist, or the like. (See post, p. 841.)

Thereby then occasioning actual bodily harm to the said J. N.]—The "actual bodily harm" here mentioned would include any hurt or injury calculated to interfere with the health or comfort of the prosecutor: it need not be an injury of a permanent character; nor need it amount to what would be considered to be "grievous bodily harm." (See post, p. 842.)

And other wrongs.]—Under the alia enormia, you may give in evidence any circumstance of aggravation attending the assault and battery, not of itself amounting to a distinct trespass. 2 Phil. Ev. 189. But these words are mere surplusage. Att. Gen. for N. S. W. v. Macpherson, L. R. 3 P. C. 268; 39 L. J. (P. C.) 59; 11 Cox, 604.

The defendant must prove either that he is not guilty at all, or that the facts of the case do not amount to an assault or battery, or that he was justified or excused in law in what he did; see R. v. Meredith, 8 C. & P. 589; or that the complaint has been already disposed of upon summary application before two justices. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, ss. 44, 45 (see ante, p. 175). The first two defences are always given in evidence under the general issue both in civil and criminal cases; matter of justification or excuse is specially pleaded in civil actions, but is always given in evidence under the general issue in criminal cases, except in defamatory libel. The defence at previous acquittal or conviction by justices should be specially pleaded. (See ante, pp. 169, 174.)

1. Misadventure.]—It is a good defence to prove that the alleged battery happened by misadventure. If a horse run away with his rider, and run against a man, it is no battery. Gibbon v. Pepper, 2 Salk. 637; 1 Ld. Raym. 38; Stanley v. Powell [1891] 1 Q. B. 86, 90, Denman, J. If a soldier, in his ranks, discharge his gun, and a man unexpectedly pass before him at the time, and be hurt by it, it is no battery. Weaver v. Ward, Hob. 134; and see R. v. Gill, 1 Str. 190. There are many cases of accidents which cannot be set up as a defence in an action for trespass to the person, that would certainly be a good defence upon an indictment. In civil cases, the accident must have been unintentional, and not due to negligence or any want of caution, if the defendant is to be excused. See Stanley v. Powell, ubi supra, and cases there collected, and 2 Rolle Abr. 548 (G.): Wakeman v. Robinson, 1 Bing. 213; 25 R. R. 618. But in criminal cases, it may be deemed a general rule, that the same facts which would make a killing homicide by misadventure (see ante, p. 782, et seq.) will be good defence upon an indictment for a battery.

2. Consent.]—It is as a general rule a good defence that the person complaining of assault or battery consented to the acts complained of. (See ante, p. 834.)

3. Lawful sport.]—It is a good defence to prove that the alleged battery was merely an amicable contest; as, that he wrestled with the prosecutor for a wager. Com. Dig. Pleader, 3 M. 18. So, that it happened by accident whilst the defendant was engaged in some sport or game which was neither unlawful nor dangerous (see ante, pp. 790, 791) is a good defence.

4. Lawful correction.]—It is a good defence to prove that the alleged battery was merely the correcting of a child by its parent, the correcting of an apprentice or scholar by his master, or the punishment of the criminal by a proper officer; Com. Dig. Pleader, 3 M. 19; 1 Hawk. c. 60, s. 23; c. 62, s. 2; and see Watson v. Christie, 2 B. & P. 224; provided the correction be moderate in the manner, the instrument, and the quantity of it (see ante, p. 795), or that the criminal be punished in the manner appointed by the law. It has been held that the defendant may justify even a mayhem, if done by him as a military officer, for disobedience of orders. Lane v. Hegberg, Bull. (N. P.) 19 cit. As to the lawful modes of inflicting corporal punishment on criminals, see ante, p. 239.

5. Self-defence.]—It is a good defence, in justification even of a wounding or mayhem, to prove that the prosecutor assaulted or beat the defendant first; and that the defendant committed the alleged battery merely in his own defence. Cockcroft v. Smith, 2 Salk. 642; 1 Ld. Raym. 177; and see 1 Sid. 246; 1 Rolle Rep. 19; 3 Salk. 46: R. v. Knock, 14 Cox, 1 (ante, p. 791). If he prove an assault merely, as, for instance, that the prosecutor lifted up his staff and offered to strike him, it is sufficient to justify the defendant's striking him: for he need not, in such a case, stay till the other has actually struck him. Bull. (N. P.) 18; 2 Rolle Abr. 547, l. 37. So a husband may justify a battery in defence of his wife, a wife in defence of her husband, a parent in defence of his child, a child in defence of his parent, a master in defence of his servant, and a servant in defence of his master. 2 Rolle Abr. 546 (D.); 1 Hawk. c. 60, ss. 23, 24. But in all these cases the battery must be such only as was necessary to the defence of the party or his relation; for if it were excessive, if it were greater than was necessary for mere defence, or if it were after all danger from the assailment was passed, and by way of revenge, the prior assault will be no justification. Bull. (N. P.) 18: R. v. Driscoll, C. & Mar. 214: Anon., 2 Lewin, 48, Parke, B. Also it will be a sufficient answer to this defence, to prove that the first assault was justifiable. Com. Dig. Pleader, 3 M. 15; 1 Salk. 407; Carth. 280 (see ante, p. 791, et seq., 796).

6. Defence of property.]—The defendant may justify a battery by proving that he committed it in defence of his possession; as, for instance, to remove the prosecutor out of the defendant's close or house; or to prevent him from entering it; 2 Rolle Abr. 548, l. 25; to restrain him from taking or destroying his goods, etc.; 2 Rolle Abr. 549, l. 7; from taking or rescuing cattle, etc., in his custody upon a distress; Id. l. 16; 2 Bro. Ent. 253; or the like. In the case of a trespass in law merely, without actual force, the owner of the close, etc., must first request the trespasser to depart, before he can justify laying his hand on him for the purpose of removing him; and, even if he refuse, he can only justify so much force as is necessary to remove him. Weaver v. Bush, 8 T. R. 78. But if the trespasser use force, then the owner may oppose force to force; Goddard v. Green, 2 Salk. 641: Weaver v. Bush, ubi supra: Tully v. Reed, 1 C. & P. 6; and in such case, if he be assaulted or beaten, he may justify even a wounding or mayhem in self-defence, as above mentioned. In answer, however, to a justification in defence of his possession, the other party may prove that the battery was excessive; King v. Tebbart, Skin. 387; or justify the alleged trespass on the defendant's possession, by proving that he had a right of way over the close, or the like (and see ante, p. 796).

7. Execution of process.]—It is a good defence to prove that the defendant, as an officer of justice, arrested the prosecutor by virtue of a certain writ of process, which is the alleged battery complained of. 2 Rolle Abr. 547 (A.). A sheriff's officer, however, can only justify laying his hand upon a man, in order to arrest him upon a writ of process; Harrison v. Hodgson, 10 B. & C. 445; 5 Man. & Ry. 392; unless he resist, or an attempt be made to rescue him, or to prevent or hinder the arrest; Williams v. Jones, Cas. (K. B.) temp. Hardw. 298; 2 Str. 1049: Truscott v. Carpenter, 1 Ld. Raym. 229, 232: Levy v. Edwards, 1 C. & P. 40; and even then he can justify no greater degree of force than was necessary in order to secure the prisoner. And the same as to officers of justice, and persons acting in their aid, arresting on suspicion of felony, without warrant; and as to private persons arresting men committing felonies in their presence, see ante, pp. 805, et seq. So a man may justify laying his hand upon another to prevent him from fighting, or committing a breach of the peace; Com. Dig. Pleader, 3 M. 16; or to prevent him from rescuing goods taken in execution; Bridgwater v. Bythway, 3 Lev. 113; or the like. See Glover v. Hynde, 1 Mod. 168; 2 Rolle Abr. 546, l. 40. Yet, even in these cases, he must not use more force than is requisite to restrain the other party, otherwise he cannot avail himself of the threatened breach of the peace, etc., as a justification. A coroner has a discretion to decide on the degree of publicity to be allowed in an inquest before him, and may justify the forcible exclusion of any person from his court. Garnett v. Ferrand, 6 B. & C. 611; 30 R. R. 466. In Cox v. Coleridge, 1 B. & C. 37; 25 R. R. 298, it was held that a magistrate, on a preliminary inquiry into a case of felony, may justify a forcible exclusion of a party from the justice-room, even though he be the attorney of the party accused. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 19, says that such an inquiry is not to be deemed to be held in open court, and that the justices may exclude any person except the counsel or solicitor of the accused. See s. 17 (a). But if the inquiry be final and of a judicial nature, it must be public. Daubney v. Cooper, 10 B. & C. 237; see also Willis v. Maclachlan, 1 Ex. D. 376; 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 12; 42 & 43 Vict. c. 49, s. 20 (1).

8. Previous summary trial.]—It is a good defence to show that the complaint has been disposed of by two justices, either by conviction or dismissal of the case, provided, in the former case, the defendant has paid the penalty, and suffered the imprisonment awarded: and in the latter, the magistrates have dismissed the case, because it was justified, or so trifling as not to merit punishment, or not proved, and this be forthwith certified under their hands. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, ss. 44, 45, (ante, p. 175). As to the mode of pleading this defence and its effect, see ante, pp. 169, 174. It is to be observed, that these provisions do not prevent the prosecutor from preferring his indictment in the first instance, if he think fit.

Statutes.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100 (Offences against the Person Act, 1861), s. 18.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously by any means whatsoever wound or cause any grievous bodily harm to any person, or shoot at any person, or, by drawing a trigger, or in any other manner attempt to discharge any kind of loaded arms at any person, with intent, in any of the cases aforesaid, to maim, disfigure, or disable any person, or to do some other grievous bodily harm to any person, or with intent to resist or prevent the lawful apprehension or detainer of any person, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for life. . . . [This section re-enacts 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 85, s. 4, with the modifications in italics, and the omission of the words "cut" and "stab." The section extends to three species of the assaults: namely, 1. To "wound or cause any grievous bodily harm to any person;" 2. To "shoot at" any person; 3. To attempt, "by drawing a trigger, or in any other manner," to discharge any kind of loaded arms at any person. And each of these may be done with any one of the following intents: namely, 1. To maim; 2. To disfigure; 3. To disable; 4. To do some other grievous bodily harm; 5. *To resist or prevent the lawful apprehension or detainer of any person. Indictment for Wounding, with intent to Maim, etc.
(24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 18.)

Central Criminal Court, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present, that J. S., on the first day of June, in the year of our Lord ——, in the parish of ——, and within the jurisdiction of the said court, one J. N. feloniously, unlawfully and maliciously did wound ("wound or cause any grievous bodily harm"), with intent in so doing him the said J. N. thereby then to maim; against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace of our lord the King, his crown and dignity. (2nd Count.)—And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present, that the said J. S. afterwards, to wit, on the day and year aforesaid [etc., as in the last count], with intent in so doing him the said J. N. thereby then to disfigure; against the form of the statute, etc. (3rd Count.)—Same as the last; with intent in so doing him the said J. N. thereby then to disable; against the form, etc. (4th Count.)—Same as the last; with intent in so doing to him the said J. N. thereby then to do some grievous bodily harm; against the form, etc. (5th Count.)—Same as the last; with intent in so doing thereby then to prevent ("resist or prevent") the lawful apprehension ("apprehension or detainer") of the said J. S. ("any person"); against the form, etc. An indictment charging the act to have been done "feloniously, wilfully, and maliciously" was held to be bad, the words of the statute being "unlawfully and maliciously." R. v. Ryan, 2 Mood. C. C. 15. It is no objection to an indictment framed under this section (18) that it alleges that the defendant did "inflict" grievous bodily harm, not using the statutable word "cause." R. v. Bray, 15 Cox, 197 (C. C. R.). The word "inflict" is used in s. 20, supra.

In practice, the first count of the indictment is generally for wounding with intent to murder, and the second for wounding with intent to do grievous bodily harm; if there be a doubt as to whether a wound was caused, add counts for "causing grievous bodily harm with intent," etc. For indictment for shooting with intent, see post, p. 843. These counts were allowed to be joined in the same indictment, even when the punishments of the several offences specified in them were different. R. v. Strange, 8 C. & P. 172; and see Campbell v. R., 11 Q. B. 799, 812. On an indictment for "wounding" with intent, etc., the jury may convict of unlawful wounding. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 19, s. 5 (ante, p. 815); and see R. v. Miller, 14 Cox, 356 (ante, p. 819): R. v. Waudby [1895] 2 Q. B. 482; 64 L. J. (M. C.) 257; 18 Cox, 194.

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 18; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 71 (ante, p. 778).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously.]—By 9 G. 4, c. 31, s. 12 (rep.), it was necessary that the offence should have been committed under such circumstances that, if death had ensued therefrom, it would have amounted to murder. This proviso was omitted in 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 85, s. 4 (rep.), and is not contained in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 18, which would seem therefore to include every wounding, etc., done without lawful excuse with any of the intents mentioned in the statute, for from the act itself malice will be inferred. The word "maliciously" in the statute does not mean with malice aforethought; for if it did, the offence would be included under s. 14 (ante, p. 817). The offence is therefore equally within this section, although if death had ensued it would have been manslaughter only. R. v. Griffiths, 8 C. & P. 248: R. v. Nicholls, 9 C. & P. 267: Anon., 2 Mood. C. C. 40.

The instrument or means by which the injury was inflicted need not be stated in the indictment, and if stated, need not be proved as laid. R. v. Briggs, 1 Mood. C. C. 318; 1 Lewin, 61.

Did wound.]—Under 43 G. 3, c. 58 (rep.), which used the words "stab, cut, or wound," if the indictment was for cutting, evidence of a stabbing would not support it, the words being in the alternative. R. v. M'Dermot, R. & R. 356. Under the words "stab" or "cut," an incised wound must have been proved; a mere contused or lacerated wound was not within those words. The word "wound" in s. 18 includes incised wounds, punctured wounds, lacerated wounds, contused wounds, and gun-shot wounds. See Shea v. R., 3 Cox, 141 (Ir.). But to constitute a wound within the statute, the continuity of the skin must be broken: R. v. Wood, 1 Mood. C. C. 278; or, in other words, the outer covering of the body (that is, the whole skin, not the mere cuticle or upper skin) (R. v. M'Loughlin, 8 C. & P. 635), must be divided. R. v. Beckett, 1 M. & Rob. 526. But a division of the internal skin—e.g., within the cheek or lip—is sufficient to constitute a wound within the statute. R. v. Smith, 8 C. & P. 173: R. v. Warman, 1 Den. 183; 2 C. & K. 195. If the skin be broken, the nature of the instrument with which the injury is inflicted is immaterial. Thus, a wound from a kick with a shoe is within the statute. R. v. Briggs, 1 Mood. C. C. 318. And where a hammer was thrown at a person, which struck him on the nose, and broke the skin, it was held to be a wound within the meaning of 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 85, s. 4 (rep.). R. v. Withers, 1 Mood. C. C. 294. See R. v. Payne, 4 C. & P. 558. Where the defendant struck the prosecutor on the outside of his hat violently with an air-gun, and the hat wounded the prosecutor, but the air-gun never came in contact with the prosecutor, it was held to be a wounding. R. v. Sheard, 2 Mood. C. C. 13; 7 C. & P. 846.

It was held under 9 G. 4, c. 86, ss. 11, 12 (rep.), that the "wound" must be made by an instrument, and not by the hands or teeth, because the word "wound" is there used concurrently with "stab" and "cut." But the present statute extends to wounding, etc., "by any means whatsoever." The wound must be given by the act of the defendant; for if in self-defence the prosecutor force a part of his body against an instrument in the defendant's hands, and so cut or wound himself, it is not within the statute. R. v. Beckett, 1 M. & Rob. 526.

With intent, etc.]—In order to convict of the felony, the intent must be proved as laid; hence the necessity of several counts charging the offence to have been committed with different intents. The intent as a general rule can be proved by circumstantial evidence only (vide ante, pp. 303, 308, 340). If an indictment allege that the defendant cut the prosecutor with intent to murder, to disable, and to do some grievous bodily harm, it will not be supported by proof of an intention to prevent a lawful apprehension; R. v. Duffin, R. & R. 365: R. v. Boyce, 1 Mood. C. C. 29; unless, for the purpose of effecting his escape, the defendant also harboured one of the intents stated in the indictment; R. v. Gillow, 1 Mood. C. C. 85; for, where both intents exist, it is immaterial which is the principal and which the subordinate. Therefore, where, in order to commit a rape, the defendant cut the private parts of an infant, and thereby did her grievous bodily harm, it was held that he was guilty of cutting with intent to do grievous bodily harm, notwithstanding his principal object was to commit the rape. R. v. Cox, R. & R. 362. So, also, if a person wound another in order to rob him, and thereby inflict grievous bodily harm, he may be convicted on a count charging him with an intent to do grievous bodily harm. R. v. Bowen, C. & Mar. 149. Where the defendant struck at A., but B., interposing, received the blow, and was wounded, it was held that the defendant could not be convicted of wounding B. with intent to do him grievous bodily harm, under

7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 85, s. 4 (rep.). R. v. Hewlett, 1 F. & F. 91; and cf. R. v. Holt, 7 C. & P. 518: R. v. Ryan, 2 M. & Rob. 213 (ante, p. 816). But R. v. Hewlett was doubted by Brett, J., in R. v. Stopford, 11 Cox, 643, on the ground that it was inconsistent with R. v. Hunt, 1 Mood. C. C. 93 (ante, p. 798), which was accepted as good law in R. v. Latimer, 17 Q. B. D. 359 (post, p. 845); and under the present statute it is sufficient if it be proved that the defendant wounded, etc., shot at, etc., any person, with intent to maim, etc., any person; therefore, in the case just cited, the defendant might now be convicted of wounding B. with intent to do grievous bodily harm to A. And an indictment charging the prisoner with wounding A. with intent to do him grievous bodily harm, is supported by evidence that the prisoner intended to do grievous bodily harm to the man he wounded, and who in fact was A., although the prisoner did not think that he was A., but somebody else. R. v. Stopford, ubi supra, Brett, J. See also R. v. Smith, Dears. 559; 25 L. J. (M. C.) 29 (ante, p. 820). A person who fires a loaded pistol into a group of persons, not aiming at any one in particular, but intending generally to do grievous bodily harm, and who hits one of them, may be convicted on an indictment charging him with shooting at the person he has hit with intent to do grievous bodily harm to that person. R. v. Fretwell, L. & C. 443; 33 L. J. (M. C.) 118; 9 Cox, 471. If it be doubtful whether the act was done by accident or design, other circumstances may be given in evidence to prove the intent (ante, pp. 303, 308, 340). In the case of R. v. Woodburn and Coke, 16 St. Tr. 53, 69, the defendants had the effrontery to set up as a defence, that the assault was committed by them with intent, not to maim or disfigure, but to murder; the court, however, held, that if a man attack another with intent to murder him, with an instrument which cannot but endanger the disfiguring of him, and in such attack happen not to kill, but only to disfigure him, it was within Sir John Coventry's Act, 22 & 23 C. 2, c. 1, s. 7 (rep.), which made it felony to commit any of the offences there mentioned, with intent to maim or disfigure. The defendants were accordingly convicted and executed. 4 Bl. Com. 207, n. (k).

With respect to the intents mentioned in the statute: to maim, is to injure any part of a man's body which may render him, in fighting, less able to defend himself, or annoy his enemy. 1 Hawk. c. 55, s. 1; see R. v. Sullivan, C. & Mar. 209. To disfigure, is to do some external injury which may detract from his personal appearance; and to disable, is to do something which creates a permanent disability, and not merely a temporary injury. See R. v. Boyce, 1 Mood. C. C. 29. It is not necessary that grievous bodily harm should be either permanent or dangerous; R. v. Ashman, 1 F. & F. 88; if it be such as seriously to interfere with health or comfort, that is sufficient; and therefore where the defendant cut the private parts of an infant, and the wound was not dangerous, and was small, but bled a good deal, and the jury found that it was a grievous bodily harm, it was held that the conviction was right. R. v. Cox, R. & R. 362. Where the intent laid is to prevent a lawful apprehension, it must be shown that the arrest would have been lawful (see ante, p. 805, et seq.); and where the circumstances are not such that the party must know why he is about to be apprehended (R. v. Howarth, 1 Mood. C. C. 207; Car. Sup. 231, ante, p. 811), it must be proved that he was apprised of the intention to apprehend him. R. v. Ricketts, 3 Camp. 68; 13 R. R. 753: but see R. v. Bentley, 4 Cox, 406.

Power to convict of unlawful wounding.]—If the prosecutor fail in proving the intent, the defendant, under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 19, s. 5 (ante, p. 815), may, on an indictment for felonious wounding (see R. v. Miller, 14 Cox, 356), be convicted of the misdemeanor of unlawfully wounding, and receive sentence of penal servitude for not less than three years and not exceeding five years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 20 (ante, p. 839); 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). (See post, p. 844.)

Indictment for Shooting with intent to Maim. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 18, ante, p. 839.)

Commencement as ante, p. 839]—a certain gun then loaded with gunpowder and divers leaden shot, at one J. N. feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously did shoot with intent in so doing the said J. N. thereby then to maim; against the form [as ante, p. 839. Add counts stating the various intents mentioned in the statute, as in the last precedent. In practice the first count is for shooting with intent to murder, as ante, p. 819].

Felony: 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 18. See the last precedent.

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove the shooting as directed, ante, p. 819. Prove the intent as laid in some one of the counts (see ante, p. 841).

Indictment for attempting to Shoot with intent to Maim, etc. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 18, ante, p. 839.)

Commencement as ante, p. 839]—by drawing the trigger ("drawing a trigger or in other manner") of certain loaded arms, to wit, of a certain pistol ("any kind of loaded arms"), then loaded with gunpowder and one leaden bullet, feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously did attempt to discharge the said pistol, so loaded as aforesaid, at one J. N., with intent [etc., as in the last precedent but one].

Felony: 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 18. See the last precedent but one.

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove the attempt to shoot as directed, ante, p. 819; and the intent as under the last two precedents. If a person intending to shoot another, put his finger on the trigger of a loaded firearm, but is prevented from pulling the trigger, this is an attempt to discharge loaded arms within the statute. R. v. Duckworth [1892] 2 Q. B. 83; 17 Cox, 495 (C. C. R.), which on this point overrules R. v. St. George, 9 C. & P. 483, which had previously been doubted in R. v. Brown, 10 Q. B. D. 381; 52 L. J. (M. C.) 49 (ante, p. 821). In R. v. Jackson, 17 Cox, 104, a revolver loaded with cartridges in some chambers only, was held by Charles, J., to be "loaded" within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 14 (ante, p. 817). The ruling seems to apply equally to s. 18. The presenting of a loaded pistol at another is an assault. R. v. St. George, supra: R. v. Baker, 1 C. & K. 254. And semble, though the pistol be not in fact loaded, if it be presented so near the person of another as that it would have endangered him had it been loaded and gone off, and he be ignorant that it is not loaded, that is an assault. Id.: but see R. v. James, 1 C. & K. 530, contra.

Any gun, pistol or other arms, loaded in the barrel with gunpowder or other explosive substance, and ball, shot, slug, or other destructive material, are loaded arms within the meaning of the statute, although the attempt to discharge them may fail from want of proper priming or from any other causes. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 19 (ante, p. 818).

Indictment for unlawfully Wounding. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 20, ante, p. 839.)

Commencement as ante, p. 839]—one J. N. unlawfully and maliciously did wound ("wound or inflict any grievous bodily harm upon"); against the form [as ante, p. 839]. Add a count charging that the defendant "did inflict grievous bodily harm upon J. N." (see ante, p. 840). The defendant may be convicted of a common assault upon this indictment. R. v. Taylor, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 104; 38 L. J. (M. C.) 106 (ante, p. 217).

Misdemeanor: penal servitude for not less than three years, and not exceeding five years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 20 (ante, p. 839); 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to fining the offender and requiring him to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 71 (ante, p. 778).

The defendant may be convicted of unlawfully wounding, and punished under this section, upon an indictment charging a felonious wounding, where the prosecutor fails in proving the felonious intent: 14 & 15 Vict. c. 19, s. 5 (ante, p. 815). Aiders and abettors in the felony charged may be convicted as aiders and abettors in the misdemeanor. R. v. Waudby [1895] 2 Q. B. 482; 64 L. J. (M. C.) 251; 18 Cox, 194.

Evidence.

The evidence will be the same as on an indictment framed on 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 18, except as to the proof of the intent. It is, however, necessary to show that the wounding was malicious, but it may be malicious although the prisoner had no spite or ill-feeling against the prosecutor, and although the prisoner did not even intend to wound the prosecutor. It seems quite sufficient to prove that the prisoner intentionally and unlawfully did the act which caused the wound, although he did the act merely for the purpose of frightening the prosecutor, and did not intend to wound him. The prosecutor was using a punt in a creek of a river for the purpose of shooting wild fowl. When slewing the punt round to return home he suddenly heard the report of a gun, and found himself shot and wounded seriously. The prisoner had fired the shot in the direction of the punt with the intention of frightening the prosecutor from again coming into the creek for the purpose of fowling, and not with the intent of doing him bodily harm. It was held that there was evidence on the above facts of a malicious wounding by the prisoner. Id. And if the prisoner did the act which caused the wound or grievous bodily harm as a mere piece of foolish mischief, unlawfully and without excuse, he will be held to have done it maliciously within the meaning of the statute. R. v. Ward, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 356; 48 L. J. (M.C.) 69; 12 Cox, 123. Shortly before the conclusion of a performance at a theatre, the prisoner with the intention and with the result of causing terror in the minds of persons leaving the theatre, put out the gaslights on a staircase which a large number of such persons had to descend in order to leave the theatre, and he also, with the intention and with the result of obstructing the exit, placed an iron bar across a doorway through which they had to pass in leaving. Upon the lights being thus extinguished a panic seized a large portion of the audience, and they rushed in fright down the staircase, forcing those in front against the iron bar. By reason of the pressure and struggling of the crowd thus created on the staircase, several of the audience were severely injured, and amongst them A. and B. It was held that upon these facts the prisoner was rightly convicted of unlawfully and maliciously inflicting grievous bodily harm upon A. and B. R. v. Martin, 8 Q. B. D. 54; 51 L. J. (M. C.) 36; 14 Cox, 633. (See the judgment of Stephen, J.) This decision was approved in R. v. Halliday, 61 L. T. Rep. 701; 38 W. R. 256 (C. C. R.), and it was there held that where a wife to escape from the violence of her husband who had threatened to take her life, got out of a window and in so doing fell and broke her leg, the husband was properly convicted under s. 20. This decision seems inconsistent with R. v. Donovan, 4 Cox, 399 (ante, p. 823). The prisoner aimed a blow at one person, but, missing his aim, struck and wounded another. He was indicted under s. 20 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, for unlawfully and maliciously wounding such other person, and, having been convicted, it was held that such conviction was right. R. v. Latimer, 17 Q. B. D. 359; 55 L. J. (M. C.) 135; 16 Cox, 70. The prisoner, a married man, at a time when he knew, but his wife did not know, that he was suffering from gonorrhœa, had connection with her, and the result was that the disease was communicated to her. Had she been aware of his condition, she would not have submitted to the intercourse. Upon these facts it was held that the prisoner could not be convicted of unlawfully and maliciously inflicting grievous bodily harm upon his wife under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 20, nor of an assault occasioning actual bodily harm under s. 47. R. v. Clarence, 22 Q. B. D. 23; 58 L. J. (M. C.) 10; 16 Cox, 511. (Compare R. v. Rakma, 11 Bombay, 59, decided on ss. 269, 270 of the Indian Penal Code: and see ante, p. 834.)

ATTEMPTING TO CHOKE, SUFFOCATE, OR STRANGLE, ETC., WITH INTENT, ETC.

Statutes.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100 (Offences against the Person Act, 1861), s. 21.]—Whosoever shall, by any means whatsoever, attempt to choke, suffocate, or strangle any other person, or shall by any means calculated to choke, suffocate, or strangle, attempt to render any other person insensible, unconscious, or incapable of resistance, with intent in any of such cases thereby to enable himself or any other person to commit, or with intent in any of such cases thereby to assist any other person in committing any indictable offence, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for life. . . . [This was new law in 1861.]

26 & 27 Vict. c. 44—Power to award punishment of whipping.]—Ante, p. 521.

Indictment.

Commencement as ante, p. 839]—feloniously did attempt to choke, suffocate, and strangle one J. N. ("choke, suffocate, or strangle any person," or "by any means calculated to choke, suffocate, or strangle, attempt to render any person insensible, unconscious or incapable of resistance"), with intent thereby to enable him the said J. S., the monies, goods, and chattels of the said J. N., from the person of the said J. N., feloniously and unlawfully to steal, take, and carry away ("with intent to enable himself or any other person to commit," or "to assist any other person in committing any indictable offence"); against the form [as ante, p. 839]. Add counts varying the statement of the intent, and where the indictment charges an attempt to render insensible, etc., "by means calculated to choke, etc.," set out the means. It is submitted that it is unnecessary to set out the means (as was done in the precedent in former editions of this work) where the indictment is framed under the earlier part of this section for attempting to choke, etc., simply.

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 21; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). The court before which the prisoner is convicted may also, in addition to the punishment of penal servitude or imprisonment, direct that if a male, he be once, twice or thrice privately whipped, subject to the following provisions:— 1. In the case of an offender whose age does not exceed sixteen years, the number of strokes at each whipping shall not exceed twenty-five, and the instrument used shall be a birch rod. 2. In the case of any other male offender the number of strokes shall not exceed fifty at each whipping. 3. In each case the court in its sentence shall specify the number of strokes and the instrument to be used. The whipping is not to take place after the expiration of six months from the passing of the sentence, and in the case of a person sentenced to penal servitude, is to be inflicted before his removal to a convict prison. 26 & 27 Vict. c. 44 (ante, p. 521). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances, and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 71 (ante, p. 778).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove the attempt by the defendant to choke, suffocate, or strangle the prosecutor, by the means stated in the indictment, and the intent as directed, ante, p. 841.

ADMINISTERING, ETC., CHLOROFORM, ETC., TO COMMIT INDICTABLE OFFENCES.

Statutes.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100 (Offences against the Person Act, 1861), s. 22.]— Whosoever shall unlawfully apply or administer to or cause to be taken by, or attempt to apply or administer to, or attempt to cause to be administered to or taken by, any person, any chloroform, laudanum, or other stupefying or overpowering drug, matter, or thing, with intent in any of such cases thereby to enable himself or any other person to commit, or with intent in any of such cases thereby to assist any other person in committing any indictable offence, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for life. . . . [This section re-enacts 14 & 15 Vict. c. 19, s. 3, with the additions italicized.]

48 & 49 Vict. c. 69 (Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885), s. 3 (3)—Administering, etc., drugs to females with a view to unlawful carnal intercourse.]—Post, p. 921.

Indictment.

Commencement as ante, p. 839]—feloniously and unlawfully did apply and administer to one J. N. ("apply or administer to or cause to be taken by, or attempt to apply or administer to, or attempt to cause to be administered to or taken by") a certain stupefying and overpowering drug, to wit, chloroform ("any chloroform, laudanum, or other stupefying or overpowering drug, matter, or thing") with intent thereby then to enable him the said J. S. [or one A. B.] the monies, goods, and chattels of the said J. N., from the person of the said J. N., feloniously and unlawfully to steal, take, and carry away ("with intent thereby to enable himself or any other person to commit, or with intent thereby to assist any other person in committing any indictable offence"); against the form [as ante, p. 839].

If it be not certain that it was chloroform (or laudanum) that was administered, add a count or counts stating it to be "a certain stupefying and overpowering drug and matter, to the jurors aforesaid unknown." Add also counts varying the intent, if necessary.

Felony : penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 22; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances, and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 71 (ante, p. 778).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant administered or assisted in administering chloroform (or laudanum, or other stupefying or overpowering drug, etc.), as stated in the indictment. If the drug, etc., be not named in the indictment, evidence must be given to show that it was of a stupefying or overpowering nature, calculated to aid the offender in the commission of a felony. Then prove the intent, as directed, ante, p. 841. In practice the ordinary evidence of the intent will be that the prosecutor was robbed or otherwise injured while under the influence of the drug, etc.

ADMINISTERING, ETC., POISON, ETC., WITH INTENT TO ENDANGER LIFE, ETC., OR TO INJURE, ETC.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100 (Offences against the Person Act, 1861), s. 23.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously administer to or cause to be administered to or taken by any other person any poison or other destructive or noxious thing, so as thereby to endanger the life of such person, or so as thereby to inflict upon such person any grievous bodily harm, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding ten years . . . [This section re-enacts 23 & 24 Vict. c. 8, s. 1. This and the succeeding section appear to override the decisions in R. v. Hanson, 2 C. & K. 912; 14 Cox, 138: R. v. Walkden, 1 Cox, 282: R. v. Dilworth, 2 M. & Rob. 531.]

Sect. 24.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously administer to or cause to be administered to or taken by any other person any poison or other destructive or noxious thing, with intent to injure, aggrieve, or annoy such person, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude . . . [This section re-enacts 23 & 24 Vict. c. 8, s. 2.]

Sect. 25.]—If, upon the trial of any person for any felony in the last but one preceding section mentioned, the jury shall not be satisfied that such person is guilty thereof, but shall be satisfied that he is guilty of any misdemeanor in the last preceding section mentioned, then and in every such case the jury may acquit the accused of such felony, and find him guilty of such misdemeanor, and thereupon he shall be liable to be punished in the same manner as if convicted upon an indictment for such misdemeanor. [This section re-enacts 23 & 24 Vict. c. 8, s. 3.]

Indictment for administering Poison so as to endanger Life, etc. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 23.)

Commencement as ante, p. 839]—feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously did administer to one J. N. ("administer to or cause to be administered to or taken by any person") certain poison, to wit, two drachms of white arsenic ("any poison or other destructive or noxious thing"), so as thereby then to endanger the life of the said J. N.; against the form [as ante, p. 839]. Add a count stating that the defendant "did cause to be taken by J. N.," etc.; and if the kind of poison, etc., be doubtful, add counts describing it in different ways, and also stating it to be "a certain destructive thing," or "a certain noxious thing," "to the jurors aforesaid unknown." See ante, p. 847. There should be also a set of counts stating that the defendant thereby "inflicted upon J. N. grievous bodily harm."

An indictment on s. 24, for administering, etc., poison, etc., with intent to injure, aggrieve, or annoy the prosecutor, may be framed from the precedent (ante, p. 815), varying the allegation of the intent. Or the defendant may be convicted of and have judgment for the misdemeanor mentioned in s. 24, on an indictment under s. 23, if the prosecutor fail in proving the felony. Id. s. 25. Where the defendant administered cantharides to a woman, and the jury found that it was administered with the intent to excite her sexual passion and desire, in order that the defendant might obtain connection with her, this was held to be an administering with intent to "injure, aggrieve, and annoy" her. R. v. Wilkins, L. & C. 89; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 72; 9 Cox, 20. See R. v. Hennah (post, p. 849). As to charging the intent to "injure, aggrieve, and annoy" in one count, see R. v. Bowen, 1 Den. 22 (ante, p. 82).

Felony: penal servitude for not more than ten and not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 23; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2, (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 71 (ante, p. 778). If the defendant be convicted of the misdemeanor only, the punishment is penal servitude for not less than three years and not exceeding five years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 24; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to fining the offender and requiring him to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, and being of good behaviour, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 71 (ante, p. 778).

Evidence.

Prove the administering, etc., of the poison, etc., as directed, ante, p. 816. Prove also that by means thereof the prosecutor's life was endangered, or grievous bodily harm was done to him (see ante, p. 842). If the poison, etc., is administered merely with intent "to injure, aggrieve, or annoy," which in itself would merely amount to a misdemeanor under s. 24, yet if it does in fact "inflict grievous bodily harm," this amounts to a felony under s. 23. Tulley v. Corrie, 10 Cox, 640. In order to a conviction of the misdemeanor mentioned in s. 24, it must be proved that the defendant intended the administration of the poison, etc., to "injure, aggrieve, or annoy" the prosecutor. See R. v. Wilkins (ante, p. 848). Whether the thing administered is a "noxious thing" or not, may depend upon the quantity administered, some drugs being innoxious in small, and noxious in large, quantities. Thus, where the prisoner was indicted under s. 24, and the evidence was that he had administered cantharides to the prosecutrix, that a large dose of cantharides is poisonous, but that the quantity administered by the prisoner was insufficient to produce any effect upon the human system, it was held that the prisoner could not be convicted under s. 24 of administering a "destructive or noxious thing," notwithstanding the prisoner administered it with intent to injure or annoy. R. v. Hennah, 13 Cox, 547; Cockburn, C.J., and Hawkins, J. On the other hand, where the prisoner was indicted under s. 58 (ante, p. 826), for having caused to be taken a certain noxious thing, to wit, half an ounce of oil of juniper, with intent to procure miscarriage, and the evidence was that oil of juniper in considerably less quantities than half an ounce might be taken without ill effects, but that half an ounce produces ill effects, and is to a pregnant woman dangerous, it was held that the half ounce of oil of juniper was a "noxious thing" within the statute. R. v. Cramp, 5 Q. B. D. 307; 49 L. J. (M. C.) 44; 14 Cox, 390. And where the drug administered is a recognized "poison," then it may be that although the quantity administered by the defendant is so small as to be incapable of doing harm that is sufficient to bring him within the statute. Id.

INJURING OR ATTEMPTING TO INJURE PERSONS BY EXPLOSIVE OR CORROSIVE SUBSTANCES, ETC.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100 (Offences against the Person Act, 1861), s. 28—Causing bodily injury by explosives.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously, by the explosion of gunpowder or other explosive substance, burn, maim, disfigure, disable, or do any grievous bodily harm to any person, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for life . . . or to be imprisoned . . . and, if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping. [This section is taken from 9 & 10 Vict. c. 25, s. 37.]

Sect. 29—Using explosives or corrosives with intent to do grievous bodily harm.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously cause any gunpowder or other explosive substance to explode, or send or deliver to or cause to be taken or received by any person any explosive substance, or any other dangerous or noxious thing, or put or lay at any place, or cast or throw at or upon or otherwise apply to any person, any corrosive fluid or any destructive or explosive substance, with intent in any of the cases aforesaid to burn, maim, disfigure, or disable any person, or to do some grievous bodily harm to any person, shall, whether any bodily injury be effected or not, be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for life . . . or to be imprisoned . . . and, if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping. [This section is taken from 9 & 10 Vict. c. 25, s. 4, and 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 85, s. 5, with the alterations in italics.]

Sect. 30—Placing explosives near buildings or ships with intent to do grievous bodily harm.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously place or throw in, into, upon, against, or near any building, ship, or vessel any gunpowder or other explosive substance, with intent to do any bodily injury to any person, shall, whether or not any explosion take place, and whether or not any bodily injury be effected, be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding fourteen years . . . or to be imprisoned . . . and, if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping. [This section is taken from 9 & 10 Vict. c. 25, s. 6.]

Commencement as ante, p. 839]—feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously, by the explosion of a certain explosive substance, that is to say, gunpowder, did burn one J. N.; against the form [as ante, p. 840]. Add counts varying the statement of the injury according to the circumstances. An indictment under s. 30 for maliciously placing or throwing gunpowder into, etc., any building, etc., with intent to do bodily injury to any person, may easily be framed from the precedents (ante, p. 668).

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years; and, if a male under sixteen years, with or without whipping. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 28; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 71 (ante, p. 778).

As to the punishment of whipping, see ante, p. 216, and 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 70 (ante, p. 778.)

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant, by means of the explosion of gunpowder, burnt the person of J. N., or maimed, disfigured, or disabled him, or did him some grievous bodily harm. (See ante, p. 807.) Prove that the act was done maliciously. (See ante, pp. 303, 308, 651, 701.)

Indictment for sending an Explosive Substance, with Intent, etc. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 29, ante, p. 849.)

Commencement as ante, p. 839]—feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously did send ("send or deliver to, or cause to be taken or received by any person") to one J. N. a certain explosive substance, to wit, two drachms of fulminating silver, and two pounds weight of gunpowder, with intent in so doing him the said J. N. thereby then to burn ("burn, maim, disfigure, or disable, or do some grievous bodily harm"); against the form [as ante, p. 840]. Add counts varying the injury and intent, and the description of the thing sent: if that be doubtful describe it as "a certain dangerous [or noxious] thing to the jurors aforesaid unknown." See also precedents, ante, pp. 668, 669.

Felony. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 29. See the last precedent.

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove the sending of the explosive substance, and the intent as directed, ante, pp. 300, 308–312. Under 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 85, s. 54 (rep.), it was necessary to prove that the prosecutor was actually burnt, etc. But by the present statute the offence is complete by the malicious sending, etc., with intent to burn, etc., any person, whether or not any bodily injury be effected.

Indictment for throwing Corrosive Fluid with Intent. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 109, s. 29, ante, p. 850.)

Commencement as ante, p. 839]—feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously did cast and throw upon ("cast or throw at or upon or otherwise apply to any person") one J. N. a certain corrosive fluid, to wit, one pint of oil of vitriol ("any corrosive fluid or any destructive or explosive substance"), with intent in so doing him the said J. N. thereby then to burn; against the form [as ante, p. 840]. Add counts varying the injury and intent and description of substance thrown. See the last precedent.

Felony: 24 & 25 Vict. c. 103, s. 29. See the last precedent but one.

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant wilfully threw vitriol on (or at) the prosecutor; and prove the intent as directed (ante, pp. 300, 308–312). 6 G. 1, c. 2, s. 11 (rep.), made it felony to assault any person in the public streets, etc., with intent to cut, etc., and cutting the clothes of such person: upon which it was held in a case where the defendant intending to cut the person of the prosecutrix, struck her with a sharp instrument, and, in doing so, cut her clothes, that the primary intention must be to cut the clothes, and that as the primary intention there was the wounding of the person, the statute did not apply. R. v. Rhenwick Williams, 1 Leach, 529, 533. So here, if it were clearly shown that the intention was only to burn the clothes, it would seem not to be within the statute; but unless the contrary be proved, the intention will be evidenced by the act.

Boiling water was held to be "destructive matter," within the 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 85, s. 5 (rep.). R. v. Crawford, 1 Den. 100; 2 C. & K. 129.

CAUSING EXPLOSIONS LIKELY TO ENDANGER LIFE.

Statute.

SETTING SPRING-GUNS, ETC., WITH INTENT, ETC.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100 (Offences against the Person Act, 1861), s. 31.]—Whosoever shall set or place, or cause to be set or placed, any spring-gun, man-trap, or other engine calculated to destroy human life or inflict grievous bodily harm, with the intent that the same or whereby the same may destroy or inflict grievous bodily harm upon a trespasser or other person coming in contact therewith, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude . . .; and whosoever shall knowingly and wilfully permit any such spring-gun, man-trap, or other engine which may have been set or placed in any place then being in or afterwards coming into his possession or occupation by some other person to continue so set or placed, shall be deemed to have set and placed such gun, trap, or engine with such intent as aforesaid.

Provided that nothing in this section contained shall extend to make it illegal to set or place any gin or trap such as may have been or may be usually set or placed with the intent of destroying vermin:

Provided also, that nothing in this section shall be deemed to make it unlawful to set or place or cause to be set or placed, or to be continued set or placed, from sunset to sunrise, any spring-gun, man-trap, or other engine which shall be set or placed, or caused or continued to be set or placed in a dwelling-house for the protection thereof. [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 18.]

Indictment.

Commencement as ante, p. 839]—unlawfully did set and place and cause to be set and placed, in a certain garden situate at the parish of B., in the county of M., a certain engine calculated to destroy human life (or inflict grievous bodily harm), to wit, a spring-gun ("spring-gun, man-trap, or other engine calculated to destroy human life or inflict grievous bodily harm"), which was then loaded and charged with gunpowder and divers leaden shot, with intent that the said spring-gun, so loaded and charged as aforesaid, should inflict grievous bodily harm upon ("destroy or inflict grievous bodily harm upon") any trespasser ("any trespasser or other person") who might come in contact therewith; against the form [as ante, p. 840].

Misdemeanor: penal servitude for not less than three years and not exceeding five years; or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 31; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to fining the offender and requiring him to enter into recognizances and find sureties keeping the peace, and being of good behaviour, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 71 (ante, p. 778).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant placed, or continued (see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 31, supra) the spring-gun loaded in a place where persons might come in contact with it; and if any injury was in reality occasioned, state it in the indictment and prove it as laid.

The intent can only be inferred from circumstances (see ante, pp. 303, 308, 339), as the position of the gun, the declarations of the defendant, and so forth. Any injury actually done will, of course, be some evidence of the intent.

This statute applies only to instruments set with an intention to do grievous bodily harm thereby to human beings, or whereby grievous bodily harm is actually done to a human being; not, therefore, to dog-spears set by a man in his own land. Jordin v. Crump, 8 M. & W. 782; 11 L. J. (Ex.) 74: cf. Wootton v. Dawkins, 2 C. B. (N. S.) 412. If death was caused by setting a spring-gun, the setter is guilty of manslaughter. R. v. Heaton, 60 J. P. 508, Kennedy, J.; and see ante, p. 804.

The prisoners were indicted under s. 31 for causing to be set or placed in a field a spring-gun or engine calculated, etc. The gun in question was an alarm gun stuck in the ground and was loaded with a cartridge containing shot, but there was no evidence to show that the prisoners knew that the gun contained shot. It was contended that the evidence disclosed no offence because the engine must be calculated, etc., and the gun was merely intended to give an alarm, and the fact of its being loaded did not alter its character or the object with which it was set. These contentions were overruled: R. v. Smith and York [1902] Northamptonshire Assizes, 37 L. J. Newsp. 89, Bruce, J.

ENDANGERING THE SAFETY OF RAILWAY PASSENGERS.

Statutes.

3 & 4 Vict. c. 97, ss. 13, 14—Neglect or misconduct by railway servants.]—See ante, p. 688.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100 (Offences against the Person Act, 1861), s. 32.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously put or throw upon or across any railway, any wood, stone, or other matter or thing, or shall unlawfully and maliciously take up, remove, or displace any rail, sleeper, or other matter or thing belonging to any railway, or shall unlawfully and maliciously turn, move, or divert any points or other machinery belonging to any railway, or shall unlawfully and maliciously make or show, hide or remove, any signal or light upon or near to any railway, or shall unlawfully and maliciously do or cause to be done any other matter or thing, with intent, in any of the cases aforesaid, to endanger the safety of any person travelling or being upon such railway, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for life . . . or to be imprisoned, . . . and, if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping. [This section re-enacts 14 & 15 Vict. c. 19, s. 6, with the substitution of "unlawfully" for "wilfully."]

Sect. 33.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously throw, or cause to fall or strike, at, against, into, or upon any engine, tender, carriage, or truck used upon any railway, any wood, stone, or other matter or thing, with intent to injure or endanger the safety of any person being in or upon such engine, tender, carriage or truck, or in or upon any other engine, tender, carriage, or truck of any train of which such first-mentioned engine, tender, carriage, or truck shall form part, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for life. . . . [This section re-enacts 14 & 15 Vict. c. 19, s. 7, with the substitution of "unlawfully" for "wilfully," and the addition of the other words italicized, to get rid of R. v. Court, 6 Cox, 202: and see R. v. Rooke, 1 F. & F. 107: R. v. Sanderson, Id. 37.]

Sect. 34.]—Whosoever, by any unlawful act, or by any wilful omission or neglect, shall endanger or cause to be endangered the safety of any person conveyed or being in or upon a railway, or shall aid or assist therein, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. [This section re-enacts 3 & 4 Vict. c. 97, s. 15, with the alterations italicised. As to the meaning of "wilful," see R. v. Holroyd, 2 M. & Rob. 339; and R. v. Senior [1899] 1 *Q. Indictment for endangering by Wilful Neglect the Safety of Railway Passengers. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 34.)

Central Criminal Court, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present, that J. S., on the —— day of ——, in the year of our Lord —— [in the parish of ——, and within the jurisdiction of the said Court], unlawfully did, by a certain wilful omission and neglect of him the said J. S., that is to say, by then wilfully omitting and neglecting to turn certain points in and upon a certain railway called the —— railway, in the parish of B., in the county of M., which points it was then the duty of him the said J. S. to turn, endanger the safety of certain persons then conveyed and being in and upon the said railway; against the form [as ante, p. 840]. (It is not necessary to state that the railway is worked under statutory authority: R. v. Bowray, 10 Jur. 211.) Indictments on ss. 32 and 33 (ante, p. 853) may be framed from this precedent, varying the statement of the intent. For another and fuller precedent of an indictment against an engine driver and stoker, see 10 Cox, App. xl.–xlix.

Misdemeanor: imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 34. As to finding the offender and requiring him to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour, Id. s. 71 (ante, p. 778).

Evidence.

Prove that it was the duty of the defendant to turn the points; that he wilfully (see note to s. 34, supra) omitted and neglected to do so; and that by reason of such omission and neglect the safety of the passengers or other persons conveyed or being on the railway (which words will include not only passengers but officers and servants of the railway company) was endangered.

Throwing a stone at engines or carriages appears to be an offence within the section. R. v. Bowray, 10 Jur. 211, Alderson, B. So in playing with a cart on railway premises with the result of letting it run within a dangerous distance of the track. R. v. Monaghan, 11 Cox, 608. Neglect by an engine driver to keep a good look out for signals was held not to be within 3 & 4 Vict. c. 97, s. 15 (rep.): R. v. Pardenton, 6 Cox, 247; but it appears to be within the italicized words of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 34.

An acquittal on an indictment framed under s. 32 is no bar to a subsequent indictment upon the same facts for a misdemeanor under s. 34. R. v. Gilmore, 15 Cox, 85, Huddleston, B. As to cases where death is caused by act or defaults within ss. 33, 34, see ante, p. 802.

INJURIES ARISING FROM THE FURIOUS DRIVING OF CARRIAGES.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100 (Offences against the Person Act, 1861), s. 35.]—Whosoever, having the charge of any carriage or vehicle, shall, by wanton or furious driving or racing, or other wilful misconduct, or by wilful neglect, do or cause to be done any bodily harm to any person whatsoever, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. [This section re-enacts 1 G. 4, c. 4, with the additions italicized. It applies to all carriages and vehicles, public or private; also to bicycles. R. v. Parker, 59 J. P. 793, Hawkins, J. A bicycle is a "carriage" within 5 & 6 W. 4, c. 50 (Highway Act, 1835), s. 78: Taylor v. Goodwin, 4 Q. B. D. 228; cf. Cannan v. Earl of Abingdon [1900] 2 Q. B. 66. A motor bicycle is a "carriage" within 51 & 52 Vict. c. 8 (Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888), s. 4, O'Donoghue v. Moon, 68 J. P. Rep. 349.]

Indictment.

Commencement as ante, p. 854]—then having charge of a certain carriage and vehicle called an omnibus, unlawfully did, by the wanton and furious driving of the said carriage and vehicle by him the said J. S., cause certain bodily harm to be done to one J. N.; against the form [as ante, p. 840].

Misdemeanor: imprisonment with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 35. As to fining the offender and requiring him to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour, Id. s. 71 (ante, p. 778).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant was coachman of the carriage, as stated in the indictment; prove the furious driving, and that by means of it a personal injury was done to J. N. As to homicide by furious driving, see ante, p. 801, et seq.

OBSTRUCTING, ETC., MINISTERS OF RELIGION IN DISCHARGE OF THEIR DUTIES.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100 (Offences against the Person Act, 1861), s. 36.]—Whosoever shall, by threats or force, obstruct or prevent, or endeavour to obstruct or prevent, any clergyman or other minister in or from celebrating divine service or otherwise officiating in any church, chapel, meeting-house, or other place of divine worship, or in or from the performance of his duty in the lawful burial of the dead in any churchyard or other burial place, or shall strike or offer any violence to, or shall, upon any civil process, or under the pretence of executing any civil process, arrest any clergyman or other minister who is engaged in, or to the knowledge of the offender is about to engage in, any of the rites, or duties in this section aforesaid, or who to the knowledge of the offender shall be going to perform the same or returning from the performance thereof, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. [This section is based on 9 G. 4, c. 31, s. 23, but is framed to include ministers, and places of worship and burial not belonging to the Established Church of England.]

Indictment for Obstructing a Clergyman in the Discharge of his Duty.

Commencement as ante, p. 839]—unlawfully did by force ("threats or force") obstruct and prevent one J. N., a clergyman, then being the vicar of the parish of B., in the county of M., from celebrating divine service in the parish church of the said parish [or "in the performance of his duty in the lawful burial of the dead in the churchyard of the parish church of the said parish"]; against the form [as ante, p. 840]. In an indictment at common law for obstructing a parson in his duty by threats, it was held necessary to set out the threats. See R. v. Cheere, 4 B. & C. 902; 7 D. & R. 461. But semble, that this would not be necessary in an indictment under this section. Cf. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 45 (ante, p. 521).

Misdemeanor: imprisonment with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 36. As to fining the offender and requiring him to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour. Id. s. 71 (ante, p. 778).

Evidence.

Prove that J. N. is a clergyman and vicar of the parish of B., as stated in the indictment; that the defendant by force obstructed and prevented him from celebrating divine service in the parish church, etc., or assisted in doing so.

ASSAULTS ON OFFICERS, ETC., SAVING WRECK.

Statutes.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 37.]—Whosoever shall assault and strike or wound any magistrate, officer, or other person whatsoever lawfully authorized, in or on account of the exercise of his duty in or concerning the preservation of any vessel in distress, or of any vessel, goods, or effects wrecked, stranded or cast on shore, or lying under water, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding seven years . . . [This section re-enacts 9 G. 4, c. 31, s. 24, with the addition of the words in italics.]

Indictment for Assaulting a Magistrate, etc., on account of the Exercise of his Duty in preserving Wreck.

Sussex, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present, that before and at the time of the committing of the offence hereinafter mentioned, to wit, on the first day of June, in the year of our Lord ——, one J. N., then being a magistrate ("magistrate, officer, or other person whatsoever lawfully authorized") was engaged in the exercise of his duty as such magistrate, in and concerning the preservation of a certain vessel ("of any vessel in distress, or of any vessel, goods, or effects wrecked, stranded, or cast on shore, or lying under water"), then wrecked, stranded, and cast on shore, the said J. N. being then lawfully authorized thereunto: and that J. S., well knowing the premises, on the day and year aforesaid, in and upon the said J. N. unlawfully did make an assault, and him the said J. N. then unlawfully did strike and wound ("strike or wound"), in and on account of the exercise of the said duty of him the said J. N. in and concerning the preservation of the said vessel so wrecked, stranded, and cast on shore as aforesaid; against the form [as ante, p. 840].

Misdemeanor: penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 37; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub.-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to fining the offender and requiring him to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 71 (ante, p. 778).

Evidence.

Prove that J. N. was a magistrate, etc., as stated in the indictment (see ante, p. 344); that a vessel was wrecked, etc.; that J. N. was engaged endeavouring to preserve the vessel; that J. S. knew he was a magistrate, etc. (see ante, p. 811), and struck [and wounded] him as stated; and that he did so on account of his doing his duty in the preservation of the vessel. This may be proved by the declarations or acts of the defendant, or by circumstances from which his motive may be inferred.

IMPEDING PERSONS ENDEAVOURING TO ESCAPE FROM WRECKS.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100 (Offences against the Person Act, 1861), s. 17.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously prevent or impede any person, being on board of or having quitted any ship or vessel which shall be in distress, or wrecked, stranded, or cast on shore, in his endeavour to save his life, or shall unlawfully and maliciously prevent or impede any person in his endeavour to save the life of any such person as in this section first aforesaid, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for life . . . [This section re-enacts 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 89, s. 7, with the additions italicized.]

Indictment. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 71.)

Sussex, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present, that before and at the time of the committing of the felony hereinafter mentioned, to wit, on the first day of June, in the year of our Lord ——, a certain vessel ("ship or vessel") was stranded and cast on shore ("in distress, or wrecked, stranded, or cast on shore"); and that J. S. on the day and year aforesaid feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously did prevent and impede ("prevent or impede") one J. N. in his endeavour to save his life; the said J. N. then having quitted ("being on board of or having quitted") the said vessel so stranded and cast on shore as aforesaid; against the form [as ante, p. 840].

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 17; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 71 (ante, p. 778).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove that the vessel was stranded and cast on shore, as stated in the indictment; prove that J. N. was endeavouring to save his life after the ship was stranded; it is immaterial whether he was on board or had quitted the vessel. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 17. Prove that the defendant impeded or prevented him from so doing, and that the act was done maliciously, that is, wilfully (see ante, pp. 651, 701).

FORCING SEAMEN ON SHORE, ETC.

Statute.

57 & 58 Vict. c. 60 (Merchant Shipping Act, 1894), s. 187—Forcing on shore seamen or apprentices.]—The master of or any other person belonging to any British ship shall not wrongfully force on shore and leave behind, or otherwise wilfully and wrongfully leave behind, in any place, on shore or at sea, in or out of [his] Majesty's dominions, a seaman or apprentice to the sea service before the completion of the voyage for which such person was engaged, or the return of the ship to the United Kingdom, and if he does so he shall for each such offence be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor.

Sect. 188—Discharging abroad seamen and apprentices.]—(1) The master of a British ship shall not discharge any seaman or apprentice to the sea service abroad, or leave him behind abroad, ashore, or at sea, unless he previously obtains endorsed on the agreement with the crew, or in case of leaving behind the certificate: (a) at any place in a British possession, of a superintendent (see s. 742, post, p. 860) (or in the absence of any such superintendent, of the chief officer of customs at or near the place); and (b) at any place elsewhere of the British consular officer at the place, or in the absence of any such officer, of two merchants resident at or near the place, or if there is only one merchant so resident of that merchant. But nothing in this section shall require such sanction when the discharge is in the British possession where the seaman was shipped. (2) The certificate shall state in writing the fact and the cause of the seaman being left behind, whether the cause be unfitness or inability to proceed to sea, desertion, or disappearance. (3) The person to whom an application is made for a sanction or certificate under this section may, and, if not a merchant, shall, examine into the grounds on which a seaman or apprentice is to be discharged or left abroad, and for that purpose may, if he thinks fit, administer oaths, and may grant or refuse the sanction or certificate as he thinks just. (4) If a master acts in contravention of this section, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and in any legal proceeding for the offence it shall lie on the master to prove that the sanction or certificate was obtained, or could not be obtained.

Sect. 680—Hard labour.]—(1) Subject to the special provisions of this Act and to the provisions hereafter contained with respect to Scotland: (a) An offence under this Act declared to be a misdemeanor shall be punishable by fine or by imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour (see ante, pp. 237, 238); but may, instead of being prosecuted as a misdemeanor, be prosecuted summarily in manner provided by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, and if so prosecuted, shall be punishable by imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months, with or without hard labour, or by a penalty not exceeding one hundred pounds. (b) An offence under this Act made punishable by imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months, with or without hard labour, or by any penalty not exceeding one hundred pounds, shall be prosecuted summarily in manner provided by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts. . . . [As to the right of a person proceeded against under sub-s. 2 to elect to be tried on indictment, see 42 & 43 Vict. c. 49, s. 17 (ante, p. 6).]

Sect. 684—Jurisdiction—Venue.]—For the purpose of giving jurisdiction under this Act, every offence shall be deemed to have been committed, and every cause of complaint to have arisen, either in the place in which the same actually was committed or arose, or in any place in which the offender or person complained against may be. [This section has been explained in a colonial case (R. v. Hinde [1902] 22 N. Z. L. R. 436) as meaning that when an offence against the Act is committed in any part of the King's dominions, it may be tried in any other part of those dominions in which the offender is. In the particular case the colonial court asserted its jurisdiction to try an offence committed in London against s. 180 of the Act.]

Sects. 686, 687—Venue.]—Ante, p. 42.

Sect. 742.]—"Seaman" includes every person (except master, pilots, and apprentices duly indentured and registered) employed or engaged in any capacity, on board any ship.

* * * * * * *

"Superintendent" shall, so far as respects a British possession, include any shipping master or other officer discharging in that possession the duties of a superintendent.

Indictment for forcing on Shore and leaving behind a Seaman.
(57 & 58 Vict. c. 60, s. 187, ante, p. 859.)

Central Criminal Court, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present, that J. S., on the first day of June, in the year of our Lord ——, then being master of a certain British ship called the "Rattler," unlawfully and wrongfully did force on shore and leave behind at a certain place out of his Majesty's dominions, that is to say, at New York, in the United States of America, one J. N., the said J. N. then being a seaman (a seaman or apprentice to the sea service) before the completion of the voyage of the said ship for which he the said J. N. had been engaged; against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace of our lord the King, his crown and dignity. [And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present that the said J. S. now is at the parish of ——, in the county of ——.] Add a count (or a separate indictment) under the second part of the section (if the facts so warrant) charging the defendant for that he did "unlawfully, wilfully and wrongfully leave behind," etc. The allegation that it is a British ship is a material allegation, and must be proved as laid. See R. v. Dunnett, 1 C. & K. 425. The last averment in square brackets seems superfluous. See R. v. Whiley, 1 C. & K. 150. The word "wilfully" is not in the first part of s. 187 and is in the second part.

Misdemeanor: fine or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, or both. 57 & 58 Vict. c. 60, ss. 187, 680. For the examination of witnesses abroad, see 57 & 58 Vict c. 60, ss. 689, 691 (ante, pp. 877, 411). As to costs of prosecution, see ante, p. 258.

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant was or acted as master of the vessel, and that it was, at the time of the commission of the offence, a British ship; see R. v. Dunnett, 1 C. & K. 425: R. v. Bjornsen, L. & C. 545 (ante, p. 40): R. v. Seberg, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 264 (ante, p. 40); prove that J. N. was then "seaman" as defined in s. 742 (supra): it is immaterial whether he was one of the original crew of the ship or not; that the voyage for which he was engaged was not then completed; and that the defendant forced him on shore, and left him behind at the place mentioned in the indictment.

If the defendant be proved to have wilfully left the prosecutor behind, the only defence he can set up is the production of a certificate obtained under s. 187, or the impossibility of obtaining such certificate under the circumstances therein mentioned. R. v. Dunnett, 1 C. & K. 425.

ASSAULTS WITH INTENT TO COMMIT FELONY, OR ON PEACE OFFICERS, POOR LAW OFFICERS, ETC.

Statutes.

7 & 8 Vict. c. 19, s. 7.]—Assaults on bailiffs of inferior civil courts in execution of duty, summary conviction.

13 & 14 Vict. c. 101 (Poor Law Amendment Act, 1850), s. 9—Assaults on poor law officers.]—Where any person shall be charged with and convicted of any assault upon any officer of a workhouse or relieving officer in the due execution of his duty, or upon any person acting in aid of such officer, the court may sentence the offender to the same punishment as is provided by law for an assault upon a peace officer or revenue officer in the due execution of his duty, and shall have the same power, as in the case of such last-mentioned assault, to order payment of the costs and expenses of the prosecution.

14 & 15 Vict. c. 105 (Poor Law Amendment Act, 1851), s. 18—Assaults on poor law officers.]—The provision in the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1850, s. 9 (supra), relative to assaults upon certain poor law officers in the execution of their duties, or upon persons acting in their aid, shall extend to an assault upon any person included under the word "officer" in the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834 (4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76, see s. 109), or upon any other person acting in his aid.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 38—Assaults, with intent to commit felony or on a peace officer.]—Whosoever shall assault any person with intent to commit felony, or shall assault, resist or wilfully obstruct any peace officer in the due execution of his duty, or any person acting in aid of such officer, or shall assault any person with intent to resist or prevent the lawful apprehension or detainer of himself or of any other person for any offence, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. [This section re-enacts 9 G. 4, c. 31, s. 75, with the addition of the words italicized, and the omission of revenue officers, as to whom, see s. 11 of the Inland Revenue Regulation Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 21). For indictment, see post, p. 862].

34 & 35 Vict. c. 112 (Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871), s. 12—Assaults on peace officers.]—Where any person is convicted of an assault on any constable in the execution of his duty, such person shall be guilty of an offence against this Act, and shall, in the discretion of the court, be liable either to pay a penalty not exceeding 20*l.*, and in default of payment to be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, for a term not exceeding six months, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding six months, or in case such person has been convicted of a similar assault within two years, nine months, with or without hard labour. [The prisoner cannot elect to be tried on indictment. See 42 & 43 Vict. c. 49, s. 17 (1) (ante, p. 6). The section is not affected by 45 & 46 Vict. c. 50, s. 188. See 46 & 47 Vict. c. 44.]

48 & 49 Vict. c. 75 (Prevention of Crimes Amendment Act, 1885), s. 1—This Act shall be construed as one with the "Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871." . . .

Sect. 2—Assaulting or obstructing peace officer.]—The provisions of the 12th section of the said recited Act shall apply to all cases of resisting or wilfully obstructing any constable or peace officer when in the execution of his duty. Provided that in cases to which the said Act is extended by this Act the person convicted shall not be liable to a greater penalty than 5*l.*, or in default of payment to be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, for a greater term than two months.

50 & 51 Vict. c. 55 (Sheriffs Act, 1889), s. 8 (2).]—Resistance to execution of writ by sheriff a misdemeanor.

51 & 52 Vict. c. 43 (County Courts Act, 1888), s. 48.]—Assaults on county court officer in execution of his duty, summarily punishable. See Lewis v. Owen [1894] 1 Q. B. 102: Broughton v. Wilkerson, 44 J. P. 781.

Indictment, under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 38 (ante, p. 861).

Commencement as ante, p. 839]—in and upon one J. N. unlawfully did make an assault, and him the said J. N. did beat, wound, and ill-treat, with intent [here state the felony intended, thus: him the said J. N. feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, to kill and murder], and other wrongs to the said J. N. then did, to the great damage of the said J. N.; against the form [as ante, p. 840]. As to adding a count for a common assault, see note to next precedent.

Misdemeanor: imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 38. As to fining the offender and requiring him to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour, Id. s. 71 (ante, p. 778).

Evidence.

Every attempt to commit a felony against the person of an individual without his consent involves an assault. Prove an attempt to commit such a felony, and prove it to have been done under such circumstances that, had the attempt succeeded, the defendant might have been convicted of the felony. If you fail in proving the intent, but prove the assault, the defendant may be convicted of the common assault.

Indictment for Assaulting a Peace Officer in the Execution of his Duty.

Commencement as ante, p. 839]—in and upon one J. N. then being a peace officer, to wit, a constable ("any peace officer in the execution of his duty or any person acting in aid of such officer"), and then being in the due execution of his duty as such constable, unlawfully did make an assault and him the said J. N., so being in the execution of his duty as aforesaid, did then beat, wound, and ill-treat, and other wrongs to the said J. N. then did, to the great damage of the said J. N.; against the form [as ante, p. 840]. Counts may be added for resisting or wilfully obstructing; also counts under

s. 47 (ante, p. 831), and s. 20 (ante, p. 839). It is submitted that on this indictment a conviction for a common assault can be sustained, thus rendering unnecessary the direction contained in editions of this work prior to the 22*nd, to add a count for a common assault. See ante*, p. 215, et seq.

Summary punishment is provided for assaults on special constables, 1 & 2 W. 4, c. 41, s. 11: R. v. Porter, 9 C. & P. 778: on metropolitan constables, 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47, s. 18; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 51, s. 53: on county police, 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93, s. 8: on borough police, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 50, s. 188; 46 & 47 Vict. c. 44, s. 2: and on urban police, 10 & 11 Vict. c. 89, s. 20; 46 & 47 Vict. c. 44, s. 2.

Evidence.

Prove that J. N. was a peace officer, etc., as stated in the indictment, by showing that he had acted as such (see ante, p. 844); or if the indictment be for assaulting J. N., acting in aid of an officer, prove that the officer acted as such, and that J. N. was acting in his aid. Prove that J. N. was in the due execution of his duty (see ante, p. 805), and prove the assault as directed (ante, p. 833, et seq.). The fact that the defendant did not know that the person assaulted was a peace officer, or that he was acting in the execution of his duty, furnishes no defence. R. v. Forbes, 10 Cox, 362, Russell Gurney, Recorder.

Parish constables are not now appointed except under resolution of quarter sessions. As to the mode of appointment and their present duties, see 5 & 6 Vict. c. 109; 35 & 36 Vict. c. 92. They have for most purposes been superseded, in the metropolitan police district by the metropolitan police; 10 G. 4, c. 44; 2 & 3 Vict. cc. 47, 71; and in counties and boroughs, by the county and borough police: 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93; 3 & 4 Vict. c. 88; 19 & 20 Vict c. 69. The metropolitan police have all the powers, authorities, privileges, advantages, duties, and responsibilities which a constable has at common law or by statute, within the counties of London, Middlesex, Surrey, Hertford, Essex, Kent, Berks, Bucks, and on the Thames adjoining all but the last two counties, and adjoining the city, and on creeks, docks, etc. 10 G. 4, c. 44, s. 4; 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47, s. 5. County police have the like duties, etc., in their county, and also the duties, etc., of special constables. 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93, s. 8. So have borough police within, or within seven miles, of their borough. 45 & 46 Vict. c. 50, s. 191. The result of this Act is to bring all these officers within the protection of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 38. A justice's warrant of commitment directed "To the constable of G.," a parish in the county of L., must be read as directed to the parish constable of G., there being such an officer, who must execute it, and its execution by a county policeman is illegal. Therefore a conviction for wounding a county policeman in the execution of such a warrant, with intent to resist the prisoner's lawful apprehension thereunder, was quashed. R. v. Sanders, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 75; 36 L. J. (M. C.) 87; 10 Cox, 445. C. was convicted of an assault on two police constables of the county police of Worcester in the execution of their duty, who were apprehending him in the city of Worcester under a warrant issued by two justices of and for the county of Worcester for his commitment to prison in default in payment of a fine, but which warrant was not backed by any justice of and for the city of Worcester. Worcester is a borough having a separate commission of the peace with exclusive jurisdiction and a separate police force. C. was not pursued from the county, but found in the city. It was held that the constables were not acting in the execution of their duty in so executing the warrant, and therefore that the conviction was wrong. R. v. Cumpton, 5 Q. B. D. 341; 49 L. J. (M. C.) 41. When a warrant has been issued to apprehend a person for an offence less than felony for which there is no statutory authority to arrest without warrant, the police officer who executes it must have the warrant in his possession at the time of attempting the arrest; and if he has it not, and is assaulted by the person whom he is endeavouring to arrest, such person cannot be convicted of an assault upon the police officer in the execution of his duty, nor of a common assault, unless he used more force than was necessary to prevent his apprehension. Codd v. Cabe, 1 Ex. D. 352; 45 L. J. (M. C.) 101; 13 Cox, 202. See also Galliard v. Laxton, 2 B. & S. 363; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 123 (ante, p. 810): R. v. Phelps, C. & Mar. 180 (ante, p. 807): R. v. Chapman, 12 Cox, 4 (ante, p. 810): R. v. Carey, 14 Cox, 214 (ante, p. 810). Although a police constable may not be bound, in the execution of his duty, to assist the occupier of a house in putting out an intruder, yet he may lawfully do so, and if he is assaulted by the intruder while so doing, the latter, though he may not be indictable for assaulting a peace officer in the execution of his duty, will be liable to a conviction for an assault, as he cannot justify resistance to the force lawfully used to eject him. R. v. Roxburgh, 12 Cox, 8. If the police are exceeding their authority, resistance is not an assault within this section. R. v. Marsden, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 131; 37 L. J. (M. C.) 80; 11 Cox, 90: R. v. Mabel, 9 C. & P. 474, though it may be a common assault; and see Broughton v. Wilkerson, 44 J. P. 781, as to justifiable resistance to a county court bailiff.

Refusing to aid and assist a constable in the execution of his duty, in order to preserve the peace, is an indictable misdemeanor at common law. In order to support such indictment, it must be proved that the constable saw a breach of the peace committed; that there was a reasonable necessity for calling upon the defendant for his assistance; and that when duly called on to do so, the defendant, without any physical impossibility or lawful excuse, refused to do so. And it is no defence that the single aid of the defendant could have been of no avail. R. v. Brown, C. & Mar. 314; 4 St. Tr., N. S. 1369. An indictment for refusing to assist a constable in the execution of his duty, and prevent an assault made upon him by persons in his custody on a charge of felony, with intent to resist their lawful apprehension, is sufficient without stating how the apprehension became lawful; and if it state a refusal to assist, without the further allegation that the defendant did not, in fact, assist. R. v. Sherlock, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 20; 35 L. J. (M. C.) 92; 10 Cox, 170.

Indictment for an Assault to prevent Arrest. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 38, ante, p. 861.)

Commencement as ante, p. 839]—in and upon one J. N. did make an assault, and him the said J. N. did then beat, wound, and ill-treat with intent in so doing to resist and prevent ("resist or prevent") the lawful apprehension ("apprehension or detainer") of him the said J. S. ("of himself or of any other person") for a certain offence, that is to say, for [state the offence generally]; against the form [as ante, p. 840]. As to adding a count for a common assault, see ante, p. 863.

Misdemeanor: 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 38. See the precedent, ante, p. 862.

Evidence.

Prove the assault as directed (ante, p. 833, et seq.), and the intent, as directed (ante, pp. 303, 308, 340). It must be stated and proved that the apprehension was lawful. (See ante, p. 805.) If you fail in proving the intent, the defendant may be convicted of the common assault.

ASSAULTS BY POACHERS ON GAMEKEEPERS.

Statutes.

9 G. 4, c. 69 (Night Poaching Act, 1828), s. 2.]—Where any person shall be found upon any land committing any such offence as is hereinbefore mentioned, it shall be lawful for the owner or occupier of such land, or for any person having a right or reputed right of free warren or free chase thereon, or for the lord of the manor or reputed manor wherein such land may be situate, and also for any gamekeeper or servant of any of the persons herein mentioned, or any person assisting such gamekeeper or servant, to seize and apprehend such offender upon such land, or in case of pursuit being made, in any other place to which he may have escaped therefrom, and to deliver him, as soon as may be, into the custody of a peace officer, in order to his being conveyed before two justices of the peace; and in case such offender shall assault or offer any violence with any gun, cross-bow, fire-arms, bludgeon, stick, club, or any other offensive weapon whatsoever, towards any person hereby authorized to seize and apprehend him, he shall, whether it be his first, second, or any other offence, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable at the discretion of the court, to be transported beyond seas for seven years (now penal servitude, see post, p. 886), or to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour in the common gaol or house of correction for any term not exceeding two years; and in Scotland, whenever any person shall so offend, he shall be liable to be punished in like manner. [For the rest of the Act, see post, Chap. VI. Sect. 4, tit. "Poaching."]

7 & 8 Vict. c. 29, s. 1.]—Post, Chap. VI. Sect. 4, tit. "Poaching."

Indictment.

Essex, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present, that, at the time of the committing of the assault hereinafter charged and stated, to wit, on the first day of November, in the year of our Lord ——, in the night-time, to wit, about the hour of ten in the night of the same day, J. S. was unlawfully in certain land ("any land") [in the occupation] of one J. W., situate in the parish of ——, in the county of Essex, armed with a gun for the purpose of then, and by night as aforesaid, unlawfully taking and destroying game; and that he the said J. S. was then, so being in the said land by night as aforesaid, found armed with the said gun for the purpose aforesaid, by one J. N. ("the owner or occupier of such land, or any person having a right or reputed right of free warren or free chase thereon, or the lord of the manor or reputed manor wherein such land may be situate, or any gamekeeper or servant of the persons herein mentioned, or any person assisting such gamekeeper or servant") the servant of the said J. W., the said J. N. then having lawful authority to seize and apprehend the said J. S. found: and that* he the said J. S., with the gun aforesaid ("any gun, cross-bow, fire-arms, bludgeon, stick, club, or other offensive weapon whatsoever") did then unlawfully assault and beat the said J. N. ("assault or offer violence towards"), the said J. N. then having lawful authority to seize and apprehend the said J. S.; against the form [as ante, p. 840].

* If the defendant escaped from the land and was pursued, here add, "the said J. S. then escaped from the said land into a certain other close there situate, and the said J. N. did thereupon then pursue the said J. S. into the said last-mentioned close, for the purpose of seizing and apprehending him the said J. S. as aforesaid, and that he the said J. S.," etc., etc. The precedents in editions of this work before the 22nd edition contained an averment that "J. N. was then about to seize and apprehend J. S." It is submitted that the words are unnecessary as they do not appear in the section. This count may be joined with one on the 9th section, post, Book II. Chap. VI. Sect. 4, and with one for common assault. R. v. Finacane, 5 C. & P. 551. An indictment which stated only that the defendant "was then and there, in the said land, by night as aforesaid, etc., found," was held bad, as not sufficiently showing that he was found committing the offence charged in the previous part of the indictment. R. v. Curnock, 9 C. & P. 730. If the indictment contains (1), a count in the form above given: and (2), a count charging a common assault, and the prosecution at the trial elect to abandon the count charging the common assault, the defendant cannot after such abandonment be convicted of a common assault upon the first count. R. v. Day, 11 Cox, 505 (C. C. R.).

Misdemeanor: penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years. 9 G. 4, c. 69, s. 2; 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3 (ante, p. 235); 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant entered certain land in the parish described, belonging to or in the occupation of J. W. (See ante, pp. 67, 298. It is not necessary to state the name of the close; but it has been held that if stated, it must be proved. R. v. Owen, 1 Mood. C. C. 118 (ante, p. 299). Formerly, a variance as to the parish or other local description was fatal, but it can now be amended under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 1 (ante, pp. 52, 53). Prove that the defendant entered the land in the night-time, that is, some time between the expiration of the first hour after sunset, and the beginning of the last hour before sunrise. 9 G. 4, c. 69, s. 12, post, tit. "Poaching": see R. v. Tomlinson, 7 C. & P. 183. It is not necessary to state the hour (ante, pp. 67, 297); nor, if stated, need it be proved, provided that the hour proved be within the period above mentioned. Prove that the defendant was armed with a gun, etc., and that he was on the land for the purpose of destroying game there. See R. v. Barham, 1 Mood. C. C. 151; R. v. Davis, 8 C. & P. 759. Prove also that the defendant was found on the land in the commission of the offence. The words of the statute are "found upon any land." Under 57 G. 3, c. 90, s. 3 (rep.), the words of which were "enter into or be found in any forest," etc., where the defendant was not found in the close, but was seen in an adjoining close, and, shortly before he was seen, shots were heard in the close, and the jury found that he had been firing in the close, it being reserved for the judges whether it was necessary to prove that the defendant was seen in the close where the indictment stated him to have been found; they held that, as the jury were satisfied that the defendant had been in the close armed, it was sufficient. R. v. Worker, 1 Mood. C. C. 165. (See post, tit. "Poaching.") Prove that J. N. was servant to J. W., the owner or occupier of the land (or, if the offence was committed on any public road, highway, or path, or the sides thereof, or at any gate, outlet, or opening from any land to such road, etc., the owner or occupier of land adjoining either side of that part of the road, etc., where the offender was, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 29, s. 1) and prove the assault as directed (ante, p. 833, et seq.). Proof of a common intent of several prisoners to poach is not evidence of a common intent to wound. R. v. Doddridge, 8 Cox, 335, Martin, B. If J. N. escaped and was pursued, it must be stated; and if stated, it must be proved. Lastly, it must be proved that the offence was committed within twelve calendar months next before the prosecution. 9 G. 4, c. 69, s. 4, post tit. "Poaching."

A gamekeeper, or other person lawfully authorized, may apprehend poachers without giving notice of his purpose. R. v. Payne, 1 Mood. C. C. 378: R. v. Fielding, 2 C. & K. 621; and without a written authority so to do; R. v. Price, 7 C. & P. 178; provided they are upon the land or manor of his master, or other place mentioned in 7 & 8 Vict. c. 29; but without authority he may not apprehend them upon the lands of others. R. v. Davis, 7 C. & P. 785. A person who has only the right of shooting over the land of another, has no authority to authorize a gamekeeper to apprehend persons trespassing on such land in pursuit of game; consequently, resistance to such apprehension, if not excessive, is lawful. R. v. Wood, 1 F. & F. 470. Although s. 2 is confined to offences mentioned in s. 1, still an offender under s. 9 may be apprehended under the powers given by s. 2; for though a greater punishment is inflicted by s. 9 where several are out armed together, it is still an offence within s. 1. R. v. Ball, 1 Mood. C. C. 330: see R. v. Lines [1902] 1 K. B. 199, 203 (C. C. R.); 20 Cox, 142. And under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 19, s. 11 (ante, p. 622), any person may apprehend persons committing offences against s. 9 of this Act in the night-time. R. v. Sanderson, 1 F. & F. 598. As to homicide by poachers, see ante, p. 809.

SHOOTING AT OFFICERS OF THE CUSTOMS, OR KING'S SHIPS.

Statutes.

39 & 40 Vict. c. 36 (Customs Consolidation Act, 1876), s. 193—Shooting at customs officers, or King's ships.]—If any person shall maliciously shoot at any vessel or boat belonging to [his] Majesty's navy, or in the service of the revenue, or shall maliciously shoot at, maim, or wound any officer of the army, navy, marines, or coastguard, being duly employed in the prevention of smuggling, and on full pay, or any officer of customs or excise, or any person acting in his aid or assistance, or duly employed for the prevention of smuggling, in the execution of his office or duty, every person so offending, and every person aiding, abetting, or assisting therein, shall, upon conviction, be adjudged guilty of felony, and shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to penal servitude for any term not less than five years [now three years, 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, ante, p. 235], or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding three years. (See post, p. 869.)

Sect. 229—Offences on the water.]—Where any offence shall be committed in any place upon the water, not being within any county of the U. K., or where the officers have any doubt whether such place is within the boundaries or limits of any such county, such offence shall, for the purposes of the Customs Acts, be deemed, and taken to be, an offence committed on the high seas, and for the purpose of giving jurisdiction under such Acts every such offence shall be deemed to have been committed, and every cause of complaint to have arisen, either in the place in which the same was actually committed or arose, or in any place on land where the offender or person complained against may be or be brought (see ante, pp. 39–43, 46).

Sect. 255—In whose name indictments to be preferred.]—All indictments or suits for any offences or the recovery of any penalties or forfeitures under the Customs Acts shall, except in the cases where summary jurisdiction is given to justices, be preferred or commenced in the name of [his] Majesty's Attorney-General for England or Ireland, or of the Lord Advocate of Scotland, or of some officer of customs or inland revenue.

Sect. 257—Limitation of proceedings.]—All suits, indictments, or informations brought or exhibited for any offence against the Customs Acts in any court, or before any justice, shall be brought or exhibited within three years next after the date of the offence committed. (See ante, p. 95.)

Sect. 258—Venue.]—Any indictment, prosecution, or information which may be instituted or brought under the direction of the Commissioners of Customs for offences against the Customs Acts shall and may be inquired of, examined, tried, and determined in any county of England when the offence is committed in England, and in any county of Scotland when the offence is committed in Scotland, and in any county in Ireland when the offence is committed in Ireland, in such manner and form as if the offence had been committed in the said county where the said indictment or information shall be tried. (See ante, p. 47.)

Sect. 260—Averments in smuggling cases.]—The averment that the Commissioners of Customs or Inland Revenue have directed or elected that any information or proceedings under the Customs Acts shall be instituted, or that any ship or boat is foreign or belonging wholly or in part to [his] Majesty's subjects, or that any person detained or found on board any ship or boat liable to seizure is or is not a subject of [his] Majesty, or that any goods thrown overboard, staved, or destroyed were so thrown overboard, staved, or destroyed to prevent seizure, or that any goods thrown overboard, staved, or destroyed during chase by any ship or boat in [his] Majesty's service or in the service of the Revenue were so thrown overboard, staved, or destroyed to prevent seizure, or that any person is an officer of Customs or Excise, or that any person was employed for the prevention of smuggling, or that the offence was committed within the limits of any port, or where the offence is committed in any port of the United Kingdom, the naming of such port in the information or proceedings shall be deemed to be sufficient, unless the defendant in any such case shall prove to the contrary. (See ante, p. 344.)

Sect. 261—Proof of commission, and competency of witnesses.]—If upon any trial a question shall arise whether any person is an officer of the army, navy, marines, or coastguard, duly employed for the prevention of smuggling, or an officer of customs or excise, his own evidence thereof, or other evidence of his having acted as such, shall be deemed sufficient without production of his commission or deputation; and every such officer and any person acting in his aid or assistance shall be deemed a competent witness upon the trial of any suit or information on account of any seizure or penalty as aforesaid, notwithstanding such officer or other person may be entitled to the whole or any part of such seizure or penalty, or to any reward upon the conviction of the party charged in such suit or information. [As to this section, see ante, pp. 344, 390.]

Indictment for Shooting at an Officer of the Customs. (39 & 40 Vict. c. 36, s. 193, ante, p. 867.)

Commencement as ante, p. 839]—with a certain pistol loaded with gunpowder and one leaden bullet, at and against one J. N., the said J. N. then being an officer of the customs ("any officer of the army, navy, marines, or coastguard, being duly employed in the prevention of smuggling, and on full pay, or any officer of customs or excise, or any person acting in his aid or assistance, or duly employed for the prevention of smuggling"), and then being in the due execution of his office and duty as such officer, feloniously and maliciously did shoot; against the form [as ante, p. 840]. As to the venue, see ante, pp. 47, 868.

Felony: penal servitude for any term not less than three years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour. It is submitted that the maximum term of imprisonment, three years, specified in 39 & 40 Vict. c. 36, s. 193, should be treated as reduced to two years by 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove that J. N. was an officer of the customs, etc., in the due exercise of his office. His own evidence thereof, or other evidence of his acting as such, will be sufficient, without producing his commission or appointment (39 & 40 Vict. c. 36, ss. 260, 261, supra, and see ante, p. 344). The statute only applies to such officers of the army, navy, marines, or coastguard, as are on full pay, and employed for the prevention of smuggling. Prove that the defendant wilfully fired at J. N. If he fired wilfully, it will be sufficient evidence of his doing so maliciously, see ante, pp. 651, 701.

Indictment for Maiming or Wounding Officers of the Customs. (39 & 40 Vict. c. 36, s. 193, ante, p. 867.)

Commencement as ante, p. 839]—one J. N., then being an officer of the customs [see the last precedent], and then being in the due execution of his office and duty as such officer, feloniously and maliciously did wound ("maim or wound"); against the form [as ante, p. 840]. As to the venue, see ante, pp. 39–43, 47, 868.

Felony: 39 & 40 Vict. c. 36, s. 193. See the last precedent.

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

This is proved in the same manner as the last case, except that, instead of proving the shooting, it must be proved that the defendant wounded (or maimed) J. N.

Indictment for Shooting at Vessels belonging to the Navy, etc.

Kent, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present, that J. S., on the first day of June, in the year of our Lord ——, on the high seas, feloniously and maliciously did shoot at a certain vessel ("vessel or boat") belonging to his said Majesty's navy ("belonging to his Majesty's navy, or in the service of the revenue"), to wit, at (here describe the vessel); against the form [as ante, p. 840]. And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present, that the parish of F., in the county of Kent, was the place on land into which the said J. S. was next, after the commission of the offence by him the said J. S. as aforesaid, to wit, on the day and year aforesaid, brought. 39 & 40 Vict. c. 36, s. 229 (ante, p. 868).

Felony: 39 & 40 Vict. c. 36, s. 193. See the last precedent, p. 869.

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant wilfully shot at the vessel, etc., mentioned in the indictment; the malice will be presumed, until the contrary be shown upon the part of the defendant (see ante, p. 701). Where a custom-house vessel chased a smuggler and fired into her without hoisting such a pendant as required (56 G. 3, c. 104, s. 8 (rep.)), the returning the fire was considered not to be malicious. R. v. Reynolds, R. & R. 465. Prove, also, that the vessel in question belonged at the time to his Majesty's navy, or was in the service of the revenue, as stated in the indictment; which may be done, it should seem, by parol testimony without any documentary evidence.

The pendants and ensigns to be worn by ships in the preventive service and merchant vessels are regulated by proclamation of January 1, 1801, and February 1, 1817 (Statutory Rules and Orders Revised (ed. 1904), vol. i., tit. "Arms," etc., p. 6), and by s. 73 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60).

NEGLECTING TO PROVIDE FOOD, ETC., FOR, AND ASSAULTING, ETC., APPRENTICES OR SERVANTS.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100 (Offences against the Person Act, 1861), s. 26.]—Whosoever, being legally liable, either as a master or mistress, to provide for any apprentice or servant necessary food, clothing or lodging, shall wilfully and without lawful excuse refuse or neglect to provide the same, or shall unlawfully and maliciously do or cause to be done any bodily harm to any such apprentice or servant, so that the life of such apprentice or servant shall be endangered, or the health of such apprentice or servant shall have been or shall be likely to be permanently injured, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude. . . .

Sect. 73—Prosecutions by guardians of poor—Costs.]—Where any complaint shall be made of any offence against s. 26 of this Act, or of any bodily injury inflicted upon any person under the age of sixteen years, for which the party committing it is liable to be indicted, and the circumstances of which offence amount, in point of law, to a felony, or an attempt to commit a felony, or an assault with intent to commit a felony, and two justices of the peace before whom such complaint is heard shall certify under their hands that it is necessary for the purposes of public justice that the prosecution should be conducted by the guardians of the union or place, or, where there are no guardians, by the overseers of the poor of the place, in which the offence shall be charged to have been committed, such guardians or overseers, as the case may be, upon personal service of such certificate or a duplicate thereof upon the clerk of such guardians or upon any one of such overseers, shall conduct the prosecution, and shall pay the costs reasonably and properly incurred by them therein (so far as the same shall not be allowed to them under any order of any court) out of the common fund of the union, or out of the funds in the hands of the guardians or overseers, as the case may be; and, where there is a board of guardians, the clerk or some other officer of the union or place, and, where there is no board of guardians, one of the overseers of the poor, may, if such justices think it necessary for the purposes of public justice, be bound over to prosecute. [This section re-enacts 14 & 15 Vict. c. 19, ss. 6, 7. See also ante, p. 258, and 4 Edw. 7 c. 15, s. 21 (post, p. 885).]

38 & 39 Vict. c. 86 (Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875), s. 6—Neglect to supply apprentice or servant with food or medical aid.]—Where a master, being legally liable to provide for his servant or apprentice necessary food, clothing, medical aid, or lodging, wilfully and without lawful excuse, refuses or neglects to provide the same, whereby the health of the servant or apprentice is or is likely to be seriously or permanently injured, he shall on summary conviction be liable either to pay a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds, or to be imprisoned for a term not exceeding six months, with or without hard labour. [The defendant can elect to be tried on indictment. 38 & 39 Vict. c. 86, s. 9; 42 & 43 Vict. c. 49, s. 17 (ante, p. 6).]

(24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 26, supra.)

Surrey, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present, that J. S., on the first day of June, in the year of our Lord ——, then being the master of one J. N., his apprentice ("apprentice or servant"), and then being legally liable to provide for the said J. N., as his apprentice as aforesaid, necessary food ("necessary food, clothing or lodging"), unlawfully, wilfully, and without lawful excuse, did refuse and neglect to provide the same [so that the life of the same J. N. was thereby endangered; as to the insertion of these words, vide infra] ("so that the life of such apprentice or servant shall be endangered, or the health of such apprentice or servant shall have been or shall be likely to be permanently injured"); against the form [as ante, p. 840]. Add counts varying the statement of the injury sustained.

Misdemeanor: penal servitude for not less than three years and not exceeding five years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 26; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to fining the offender and requiring him to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 71 (ante, p. 778).

Evidence.

To prove the apprenticeship, if it was by deed, produce, and prove the execution of the deed, or, in case it be in the possession of the defendant, and there be no counterpart, by secondary evidence of its contents, after due notice given to the defendant to produce it (see ante, pp. 315, 316).

Legally liable.]—The legal liability of a master to provide his apprentice with necessary food, clothing or lodging will be inferred, even if it be not expressly stipulated for, from the apprenticeship itself. But in the case of neglect of a servant, an indictment against a master at common law for neglecting to provide sufficient food for his servant (see ante, p. 2) must allege that the servant was of tender years and under the dominion and control of the defendant. R. v. Ridley, 2 Camp. 650. There is a distinction between the cases of children, apprentices of tender years, and lunatics under the care of persons bound to provide for their wants and the case of a mistress and a servant of full age able to take care of herself and to withdraw herself from the service of her mistress; R. v. Jane Charlotte Smith, L. & C. 607, at p. 620; 34 L. J. (M. C.) 153 (C. C. R.), per Montague Smith, J.; and when a person, having free control of her actions and able to take care of herself, remains in a service where she is starved and badly lodged the mistress is not criminally responsible for any consequences that may ensue. Id., per Erle, C.J., L. & C. p. 625.

Prove the wilful refusal or neglect of the defendant to provide the prosecutor with necessary food, etc., as stated in the indictment. Whether it be necessary to prove that by such refusal or neglect the prosecutor's life was endangered, or his health was or was likely to be permanently injured, depends upon the construction which is to be put upon the statute. If the words "so that the life of such person shall be endangered," etc., apply to all the preceding matter, such proof will be necessary; if only to the branch of the section which relates to the actual doing of bodily harm to the apprentice or servant, such proof will be unnecessary. Until there has been some decision on the subject, it will be safer to introduce the allegation between square brackets (supra), and to be prepared with evidence to sustain it. It would seem, indeed, to be the better opinion, that the words "so that the life of such person shall be endangered, etc.," override all the preceding matter, otherwise a mere single wilful refusal to provide a dinner would be within the clause. Upon an indictment for unlawfully and maliciously assaulting an apprentice or servant, it is clear that such allegation and proof are necessary.

Medical aid.]—"By the general law a master was not bound to provide medical advice for his servant; yet the case was different with respect to an apprentice." R. v. Smith, 8 C. & P. 153, Patteson, J.; and see Sellen

v. Norman, 4 C. & P. 80: Wennall v. Adney, 3 B. & P. 247; 6 R. R. 780 (ante, p. 2): Eversley, Dom. Rel. (2nd ed.) 868. Cruelty to apprentices under sixteen can also be dealt with under 4 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 1 (post, p. 877).

ILL-TREATMENT OF LUNATICS IN ASYLUMS, ETC.

Statutes.

23 & 24 Vict. c. 75 (Criminal Lunatic Asylums Act, 1860), s. 13.]—Any superintendent, officer, nurse, attendant, servant, or other person employed in any asylum for criminal lunatics, who strikes, wounds, ill-treats or wilfully neglects any person confined therein, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be subject to indictment for every such offence, and on conviction under the indictment to fine or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, or to both fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court, or to forfeit for every such offence on summary conviction thereof before two justices any sum not exceeding twenty pounds, nor less than two pounds.

53 & 54 Vict. c. 5 (Lunacy Act, 1890), s. 322.]—If any manager, officer, nurse, attendant, servant, or other person employed in an institution for lunatics [which by s. 341 means an asylum, hospital, or licensed house], or any person having charge of a lunatic, whether by reason of any contract, or of any tie of relationship, or marriage, or otherwise, ill-treats or wilfully neglects a patient, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction on indictment, shall be liable to fine or imprisonment, or to both fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court, or be liable on summary conviction for every offence to a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds, nor less than two pounds. [This section was framed on 8 & 9 Vict. c. 100, s. 56; 16 & 17 Vict. c. 96, s. 5; and 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97, s. 123. As to its effect, see Wood Renton on Lunacy, 680.

Sect. 324—Abuse of female lunatic.]—Post, p. 906.

Sect. 325.]—Prosecution only by consent of the attorney-general, or order of the commissioners of lunacy, or visitors of the asylum, etc.

Sect. 341—Definitions.]—In this Act, if not inconsistent with the context:

"Asylum" means an asylum for lunatics, provided by a county or borough, or by a union of counties or boroughs.

"Hospital" means any hospital or part of a hospital, or other house or institution (not being an asylum) wherein lunatics are received and supported wholly or partly by voluntary contributions, or by any charitable bequest or gift, or by applying the excess of payments of some patients for or towards the maintenance, provision, or benefit of other patients.

"Institution for lunatics" means "asylum," "hospital," or "licensed house."

"Lunatic" means an idiot, or person of unsound mind.

Indictment. (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5, s. 322, ante, p. 872.)

An indictment for this offence can be framed on the precedents (ante, p. 871, and post, p. 888).

Evidence.

As to the evidence necessary to support an indictment for misusing a lunatic, see R. v. Pelham, 8 Q. B. 959; 15 L. J. (M. C.) 105. As to what may constitute wilful neglect, see Dent's case [1874], cited Wood Renton on Lunacy, p. 682: R. v. Hill, 50 J. P. 137. In R. v. Rundle, Dears. 482; 24 L. J. (M. C.) 129; 6 Cox, 549, it was held under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 96, s. 9 (rep.), that a husband having the care and charge of his wife, a lunatic, was not "a person having the care or charge" of a lunatic within the meaning of that enactment, which it was held did not apply to persons whose care or charge was purely of a domestic character. This case was distinguished in R. v. Porter, L. & C. 394; 9 Cox, 449 (C. C. R.); and was questioned in Buchanan v. Hardy, 18 Q. B. D. 486; 56 L. J. (M. C.) 42, and seems to be no longer an authority under the wider language of s. 322 of 53 & 54 Vict. c. 5. On a charge under this section, the lunatic is admissible as a witness if the judge considers him competent. R. v. Hill, 2 Den. 254; 20 L. J. (M. C.) 222 (see ante, p. 388; and Wood Renton on Lunacy, 683, n.). Imbecility and loss of mental power, whether arising from natural decay or paralysis, softening of the brain, or other natural cause, although unaccompanied by frenzy or delusion of any kind, was held to constitute unsoundness of mind amounting to lunacy, within 8 & 9 Vict. c. 100 (rep.). R. v. Shaw, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 145; 37 L. J. (M. C.) 112; 11 Cox, 109.

ABANDONING OR EXPOSING CHILDREN UNDER TWO YEARS OF AGE WHEREBY LIFE IS ENDANGERED.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100 (Offences against the Person Act, 1861), s. 27—Abandoning, etc., child under two years.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully abandon or expose any child, being under the age of two years, whereby the life of such child shall be endangered, or the health of such child shall have been or shall be likely to be permanently injured, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude. . . . [This section was new law in 1861. In practice it is superseded by the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904 (4 Edw. 7, c. 15), s. 1, post, p. 877.]

4 Edw. 7, c. 15, ss. 12–18, sched. 1—Procedure and evidence.]—See post, pp. 882–885, 887.

Indictment.

Commencement as ante, p. 871]—unlawfully did abandon and expose ("abandon or expose") a certain child called J. N., then being under the age of two years, whereby the life of the said child was endangered [or "whereby the health of such child was likely to be permanently injured"]; against the form [as ante, p. 840]. Add counts under 4 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 1 (post, p. 877).

If the offence is continuous it is not necessary to specify the date of the acts alleged to constitute the offence. 4 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 18 (4) (post, p. 885). "Abandoning" seems to be a continuous offence. See R. v. White (infra).

Misdemeanor: penal servitude for not less than three years and not exceeding five years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 27; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to fining the offender and requiring him to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 71 (ante, p. 778).

Evidence.

In order to sustain an indictment under this section it is only necessary to prove that the defendant wilfully abandoned or exposed the child mentioned in the indictment; that the child was then under two years of age (as to presumption of age, see 4 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 17, and sched. 1 (post, pp. 884, 887); and that its life was thereby endangered, or its health had been or then was likely to be permanently injured. The following facts were held to warrant a conviction on an indictment framed on this section charging the prisoners with abandoning and exposing a child under the age of two years, whereby its life was endangered. One of the prisoners was the mother of a weakly bastard child. When it was about five weeks old, both the prisoners put the child in a hamper at S., wrapped up in a shawl and packed with shavings and cotton wool, and the mother took the hamper from S. to the booking-office of the railway station at M. (a distance of about four miles) and there left it, having paid the carriage of the hamper to G. The hamper was addressed to the lodgings of the child's father at G., and he had told the mother, previous to the child's birth, that if she sent it to him he would keep it. The mother told the clerk at the station to be very careful of the hamper, and to send it by the next train, which was done in ten minutes from the time of its delivery at the station. Upon the address were the words "With care; to be delivered immediately." The hamper was, as above mentioned, duly sent by train, and was delivered at its address in G. in little less than an hour from the time of its being despatched from M. On its being opened the child was alive and lived for three weeks afterwards, when it died from causes not attributable to the conduct of the prisoners or either of them. R. v. Falkingham, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 222; 39 L. J. (M. C.) 47; 11 Cox, 475.

A woman who was living apart from her husband, and who had the actual custody of their child, under two years of age, brought the child, on the 19th October, and left it outside the father's door, telling him she had done so. He knowingly allowed it to remain lying outside his door from about 7 p.m. till 1 a.m., when it was removed by a constable, being then cold and stiff. Upon this state of facts, it was held, that although the father had not the actual custody and possession of the child, yet, as he was by law bound to provide for it, his allowing it to remain where he did was an abandonment and exposure of the child by him, whereby its life was endangered, within the meaning of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 27. R. v. White, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 311; 40 L. J. (M. C.) 134; 12 Cox, 83.

Statute.

4 Edw. 7, c. 15 (Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904), s. 1—Punishment for cruelty to children.]—(1) If any person over the age of sixteen years, who has the custody, charge, or care of any child under the age of sixteen years, wilfully assaults, ill-treats, neglects, abandons, or exposes such child, or causes or procures such child to be assaulted, ill-treated, neglected, abandoned, or exposed in a manner likely to cause such child unnecessary suffering, or injury to its health (including injury to or loss of sight, or hearing, or limb, or organ of the body, and any mental derangement), that person shall be guilty of a misdemeanor; and

(a) on conviction on indictment, shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to a fine not exceeding one hundred pounds, or alternatively, or in default of payment of such fine, or in addition thereto, to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding two years; and

(b) on summary conviction, shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to a fine not exceeding twenty-five pounds, or alternatively, or in default of payment of such fine, or in addition thereto, to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding six months.

(2) A person may be convicted of an offence under this section either on indictment or by a court of summary jurisdiction notwithstanding the death of the child in respect of whom the offence is committed. [Sub-sects. 1 & 2 re-enact 57 & 58 Vict. c. 41, s. 1 (1) (2), without alteration.]

(3) Upon the trial of any person over the age of sixteen indicted for the manslaughter of a child under the age of sixteen, of which he has had the custody, charge, or care, it shall be lawful for the jury, if they are satisfied that the accused has been guilty of an offence under this section in respect of such child, to find the accused guilty of such offence. [This provision was new in 1904. As to manslaughter, see ante, p. 779, et seq.]

(4) If it is proved that a person indicted under this section was directly or indirectly interested in any sum of money accruable or payable in the event of the death of the child, and had knowledge that such sum of money was accruing or becoming payable, the court, in its discretion, may—

(a) increase the amount of the fine under this section so that the fine does not exceed two hundred pounds; or

(b) in lieu of awarding any other penalty under this section, sentence the person indicted to penal servitude for any term not exceeding five years. [See note to sub-s. 5.]

(5) A person shall be deemed to be directly or indirectly interested in a sum of money under this section if he has any share in or any benefit from the payment of that money, though he is not a person to whom it is legally payable. [Sub-sects. 4 and 5 re-enact 57 & 58 Vict. c. 41, s. 1 (3), with the addition of the words in italics.]

(6) A copy of a policy of insurance, certified by an officer or agent of the insurance company granting the policy, to be a true copy, shall, in any proceedings under this Act, be primâ facie evidence that the child therein stated to be insured has been in fact so insured, and that the person in whose favour the said policy has been granted is the person to whom the money thereby insured is legally payable. [This provision was new in 1904.]

(7) An offence under this section is in this Act referred to as an offence of cruelty.

Sect. 2.]—Restrictions on employment of children.

Sect. 3.]—Licences for employment of children.

Sect. 4—Power to take offenders into custody.]—(1) Any constable may take into custody, without warrant, any person—

(a) who within view of such constable commits an offence under this Act, or any of the offences mentioned in the First Schedule to this Act, where the name and residence of such person are unknown to such constable and cannot be ascertained by such constable; or

(b) who has committed, or who he has reason to believe has committed, any offence of cruelty within the meaning of this Act, or any of the offences mentioned in the First Schedule to this Act, if he has reasonable ground for believing that such person will abscond, or if the name and address of such person are unknown to and cannot be ascertained by the constable.

(2) Where a constable arrests any person without warrant in pursuance of this section, the inspector or constable in charge of the station to which such person is conveyed shall, unless in his belief the release of such person on bail would tend to defeat the ends of justice, or to cause injury or danger to the child against whom the offence is alleged to have been committed, release the person arrested on his entering into such a recognizance, with or without sureties, as may in his judgment be required to secure the attendance of such person upon the hearing of the charge.

Sect. 5—Detention of child in place of safety.]—(1) A constable, or any person authorized by a justice of the peace, may take to a place of safety any child in respect of whom an offence under paragraph (a) of section 2 of this Act has been committed, or in respect of whom an offence of cruelty within the meaning of this Act, or any of the offences mentioned in the First Schedule to this Act, has been, or there is reason to believe has been, committed.

(2) A child so taken to a place of safety, and also any child under the age of sixteen years who seeks refuge in a place of safety, may there be detained until it can be brought before a court of summary jurisdiction, and that court may make such order as is mentioned in the next following sub-section, or may cause the child to be dealt with as circumstances may admit and require, until the charge made against any person in respect of any offence as aforesaid with regard to the child has been determined by the conviction or discharge of such person.

(3) Where it appears to a court of summary jurisdiction or any justice that an offence of cruelty within the meaning of this Act or any of the offences mentioned in the First Schedule to this Act has been committed in the case of any child that is brought before such court or justice, and that it is expedient in the interests of the child that an order should be made under this sub-section, the court or justice may, without prejudice to any other power under this Act, make such order as circumstances require for the care and detention of the child until a reasonable time has elapsed for a charge to be made against some person for having committed the offence, and, if a charge is made against any person within that time, until the charge has been determined by the conviction or discharge of that person, and in case of conviction for such further time not exceeding twenty-one days as the court may direct, and any such order may be carried out notwithstanding that any person claims the custody of the child.

(4) Boards of guardians, and, in Scotland, parish councils shall provide for the reception of children brought to a workhouse in pursuance of this Act, and, where the place of safety to which a constable or any person authorized by a justice of the peace takes a child is a workhouse, the master shall receive the child into the workhouse if there is suitable accommodation therein for the same, and shall detain the child until the case is determined, and any expenses incurred in respect of the child shall be deemed to be expenses incurred in the relief of the poor.

[This section is a re-enactment of 57 & 58 Vict. c. 41, s. 5, with the addition of the words in italics and certain omissions in sub-sections 2 and 3.]

Sect. 6—Disposal of child by order of court.]—(1) Where a person having the custody, charge, or care of a child under the age of sixteen years has been—

(a) convicted of committing in respect of such child an offence of cruelty within the meaning of this Act, or any of the offences mentioned in the First Schedule to this Act; or

(b) committed for trial for any such offence; or

(c) bound over to keep the peace towards such child, by any court, that court, either at the time when the person is so convicted, committed for trial, or bound over, and without requiring any new proceedings to be instituted for the purpose, or at any other time, and also any petty sessional court before which any person may bring the case, may, if satisfied on inquiry that it is expedient so to deal with the child, order that the child be taken out of the custody, charge, or care of the person so convicted, committed for trial, or bound over, and be committed to the custody of a relation of the child, or some other fit person, including any society or body corporate established for the reception of poor children, or the prevention of cruelty to children, named by the court (such relation or other person being willing to undertake such custody), until it attains the age of sixteen years, or for any shorter period, and may of its own motion, or on the application of any person, from time to time by order renew, vary, and revoke any such order; but no order shall be made under this section unless a parent of the child has been convicted of or committed for trial for the offence, or is under committal for trial for having been, or has been proved to the satisfaction of the court making the order to have been, party or privy to the offence, or has been bound over to keep the peace towards such child.

(2) Every order under this section shall be in writing, and any such order may be made by the court in the absence of the child; and the consent of any person to undertake the custody of a child in pursuance of any such order shall be proved in such manner as the court may think sufficient to bind him.

(3) Where an order is made under this section in respect of a person who has been committed for trial, then, if that person is acquitted of the charge, or if the charge is dismissed for want of prosecution, the order shall forthwith be void, except with regard to anything that may have been lawfully done under it.

(4) A Secretary of State in England, and in Scotland the Secretary for Scotland, and in Ireland the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, may at any time in his discretion discharge a child from the custody of any person to whose custody it is committed in pursuance of this section, either absolutely or on such conditions as such Secretary of State, Secretary, or Lord Lieutenant approves, and may, if he thinks fit, make rules in relation to children so committed to the custody of any person, and to the duties of such persons with respect to such children.

(5) A Secretary of State, in any case where it appears to him to be for the benefit of a child who has been committed to the custody of any person in pursuance of this section, may empower such person to procure the emigration of the child, but, except with such authority, no person to whose custody a child is so committed shall procure its emigration.

[This section is a re-enactment of 57 & 58 Vict. c. 41, s. 6, with the addition of the words italicized.]

Sect. 7—Maintenance of child when committed to custody of any person under order of court.]—(1) Any person to whose custody a child is committed under this Act shall, whilst the order is in force, have the like control over the child as if he were its parent, and shall be responsible for its maintenance, and the child shall continue in the custody of such person, notwithstanding that it is claimed by its parent.

(2) Any court having power so to commit a child shall have power to make the like orders on the parent of the child to contribute to its maintenance during such period as aforesaid as if the child were detained under the Industrial Schools Acts; but the limit on the amount of the weekly sum which the parent of a child may be required, under this section, to contribute to its maintenance shall be one pound a week, instead of the limit fixed by the Industrial Schools Acts (defined, post, p. 887).

(3) Any such order may be made on the complaint or application of the person to whose custody the child is for the time being committed, and either at the time when the order for the child's committal to custody is made, or subsequently, and the sums contributed by the parent shall be paid to such person as the court may name, and be applied for the maintenance of the child.

(4) If a person fails to pay any sum payable by him in pursuance of any such order, he may be dealt with in like manner as if the sum were due from him in pursuance of an order under the Bastardy Law Amendment Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 65), or, in Scotland, were a sum decerned for aliment, or, in Ireland, were a sum ordered to be paid by him under the Summary Jurisdiction (Ireland) Acts.

(5) Where an order under this Act to commit a child to the custody of some relation or other person is made in respect of a person who has been committed for trial for an offence, the court shall not have power to order the parent of the child to contribute to its maintenance prior to the trial of that person.

(6) Any court making an order under this section for contribution by a parent may in any case where there is any pension or income payable to such parent and capable of being attached, after giving the person by whom the pension or income is payable an opportunity of being heard, further order that such part as the court may see fit, of the pension or income be attached and be paid to the person named by the court. Such further order shall be an authority to the person, authority, or body by whom such pension or other income is payable, to make the payment herein stated, and the receipt of the payee shall be a good discharge to such person, authority, or body.

(7) An order under this section may be made by any court before which a person is charged with an offence under this Act, and without regard to the place in which the person to whom it is made payable may reside.

[Sub-sects. 1–5 of this section re-enact 57 & 58 Vict. c. 41, s. 7; the sub-sects. in italics (6, 7) are new.]

Sect. 8—Religious persuasion of person to whom child is committed.]—(1) In determining on the person to whose custody the child shall be committed under this Act, the court shall endeavour to ascertain the religious persuasion to which the child belongs, and shall, if possible, select a person of the same religious persuasion, or a person who gives such undertaking as seems to the court sufficient that the child shall be brought up in accordance with its own religious persuasion, and such religious persuasion shall be specified in the order.

(2) In any case where the child has been placed pursuant to any such order with a person who is not of the same religious persuasion as that to which the child belongs, or who has not given such undertaking as aforesaid, the court shall, on the application of any person in that behalf, and on its appearing that a fit person, who is of the same religious persuasion, or who will give such undertaking as aforesaid, is willing to undertake the custody, make an order to secure his being placed with a person who either is of the same religious persuasion or gives such undertaking as aforesaid.

(3) Where a child has been placed with a person who gives such undertaking as aforesaid, and the undertaking is not observed, the child shall be deemed to have been placed with a person not of the same religious persuasion as that to which the child belongs, as if no such undertaking had been given.

[This section re-enacts 57 & 58 Vict. c. 41, s. 8.]

Sect. 9—Interchange of powers under Industrial Schools Acts and this Act.]—(1) Where any child under the age of sixteen years is brought before a petty sessional court under circumstances authorizing the court to deal with the child under the Industrial Schools Acts [defined in s. 29, post, p. 887], the court, if it thinks fit, in lieu of ordering that the child be sent to an industrial school, may make an order for the committal of the child to the custody of a relation or person named by the court, and the provisions of s. 6 of this Act shall, so far as applicable, apply as if the order were an order under that section.

(2) Where a court orders a child to be sent to an industrial school, the order may, at the discretion of the court, be made to take effect either immediately or at any later time specified therein, regard being had to the age or health of the child; and, if the order is not made to take effect immediately, or if at the time specified for the order to take effect the child is deemed unfit to be sent to an industrial school, the court may commit the child to the custody of a relation or person named by the court, as provided by this Act, until the time so specified, or the time when the order actually takes effect.

[This section re-enacts 57 & 58 Vict. c. 41, s. 9, with the additions italicized.]

Sect. 10—Warrant to search for or remove a child.]—(1) If it appears to any stipendiary magistrate or to any two justices of the peace, on information made before him or them on oath by any person who, in the opinion of the magistrate or justices, is bonâ fide acting in the interests of a child under the age of sixteen years, that there is reasonable cause to suspect that such a child has been or is being assaulted, ill-treated, or neglected in any place within the jurisdiction of such magistrate or justices, in a manner likely to cause the child unnecessary suffering, or to be injurious to its health, or that any offence mentioned in the First Schedule to this Act has been or is being committed in respect of such a child, such magistrate or justices may issue a warrant authorizing any person named therein to search for such child, and, if it is found to have been or to be assaulted, ill-treated, or neglected in manner aforesaid, or that any such offence as aforesaid has been or is being committed in respect of the child, to take it to and detain it in a place of safety, until it can be brought before a court of summary jurisdiction, or authorizing any person to remove the child with or without search to a place of safety and detain it there until it can be brought before a court of summary jurisdiction; and the court before whom the child is brought may cause it to be dealt with in the manner provided by s. 5 of this Act:

Provided that—

(a) the powers hereinbefore conferred on any two justices may be exercised by any one justice, if upon the information it appears to him to be a case of urgency; and

(b) in the case of Scotland the jurisdiction hereby conferred on a magistrate or two justices shall be exercised only by a sheriff or sheriff substitute.

(2) Any person issuing a warrant under this section may by the same warrant cause any person accused of any offence in respect of the child to be apprehended and brought before a justice, and proceedings to be taken for punishing such person according to law.

(3) Any person authorized by warrant under this section to search for any child, or to remove any child with or without search, may enter (if need be by force) any house, building, or other place specified in the warrant, and may remove the child therefrom.

(4) Every warrant issued under this section shall be addressed to and executed by some superintendent, inspector, or other superior officer of police, who shall be accompanied by the person making the information, if such person so desire, unless the persons by whom the warrant is issued otherwise direct, and may also, if the persons by whom the warrant is issued so direct, be accompanied by a registered medical practitioner.

(5) It shall not be necessary in any information or warrant under this section to name the child.

Sect. 13—Extension of power to take deposition of child.]—(1) Where a justice is satisfied by the evidence of a registered medical practitioner that the attendance before a court of any child, in respect of whom an offence of cruelty within the meaning of this Act, or any of the offences mentioned in the First Schedule to this Act, is alleged to have been committed, would involve serious danger to its life or health, the justice may take in writing the deposition of such child on oath, and shall thereupon subscribe the same and add thereto a statement of his reason for taking the same, and of the day when and place where the same was taken, and of the names of the persons (if any) present at the taking thereof.

(2) The justice taking any such deposition shall transmit the same with his statement—

(a) if the deposition relates to an offence for which any accused person is already committed for trial, to the proper officer of the court for trial at which the accused person has been committed; and

(b) in any other case, to the clerk of the peace of the county or borough in which the deposition has been taken;

and the clerk of the peace to whom any such deposition is transmitted shall preserve, file, and record the same.

Sect. 14—Admission of deposition of child in evidence.]—Where, on the trial of any person on indictment for any offence of cruelty within the meaning of this Act, or any of the offences mentioned in the First Schedule to this Act, the court is satisfied by the evidence of a registered medical practitioner that the attendance before the court of any child in respect of whom the offence is alleged to have been committed would involve serious danger to its life or health, any deposition of the child taken under the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 42), or the Petty Sessions (Ireland) Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 93), or this Act, shall be admissible in evidence either for or against the accused person without further proof thereof—

(a) if it purports to be signed by the justice by or before whom it purports to be taken; and

(b) if it is proved that reasonable notice of the intention to take the deposition has been served upon the person against whom it is proposed to use the same as evidence, and that that person or his counsel or solicitor had, or might have had if he had chosen to be present, an opportunity of cross-examining the child making the deposition.

Sect. 15—Evidence of child of tender years.]—(1) Where, in any proceeding against any person for an offence under this Act, or for any of the offences mentioned in the First Schedule to this Act, the child in respect of whom the offence is charged to have been committed, or any other child of tender years who is tendered as a witness, does not in the opinion of the court understand the nature of an oath, the evidence of such child may be received, though not given upon oath, if, in the opinion of the court, such child is possessed of sufficient intelligence to justify the reception of the evidence, and understands the duty of speaking the truth; and the evidence of such child, though not given on oath, but otherwise taken and reduced into writing in accordance with the provisions of s. 17 of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 42), or of s. 14 of the Petty Sessions (Ireland) Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 93), or of s. 13 of this Act, shall be deemed to be a deposition within the meaning of those sections respectively:

Provided that—

(a) A person shall not be liable to be convicted of the offence unless the testimony admitted by virtue of this section and given on behalf of the prosecution is corroborated by some other material evidence in support thereof implicating the accused; and

(b) Any child whose evidence is received as aforesaid and who shall wilfully give false evidence shall be liable to be indicted and tried for such offence, and on conviction thereof may be adjudged such punishment as is provided for by s. 11 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), in the case of juvenile offenders, or in Ireland by s. 4 of the Summary Jurisdiction over Children (Ireland) Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 19), in the case of children.

(2) This section shall not apply to Scotland.

Sect. 17—Presumption of age of child.]—Where a person is charged with an offence under this Act, or any of the offences mentioned in the First Schedule to this Act, or any offence under the Employment of Children Act, 1903 (3 Edw. 7, c. 45), in respect of a child who is alleged in the charge or indictment to be under any specified age, and the child appears to the court to be under that age, such child shall for the purposes of this Act, and the Employment of Children Act, 1903, be deemed to be under that age, unless the contrary is proved. [This section re-enacts 57 & 58 Vict. c. 41, s. 17, with the alterations italicized.]

Sect. 18—Mode of charging offences and limitation of time.]—(1) Where a person is charged with committing an offence under this Act, or any of the offences mentioned in the First Schedule to this Act in respect of two or more children, the same information or summons may charge the offence in respect of all or any of them, but the person charged shall not be liable to a separate penalty for each child unless upon separate informations.

(2) The same information or summons may also charge any person as having the custody, charge, or care, alternatively or together, and may charge him with the offences of assault, ill-treatment, neglect, abandonment, or exposure, together or separately, and may charge him with committing all or any of these offences in a manner likely to cause unnecessary suffering or injury to health, alternatively or together, but when those offences are charged together the person charged shall not be liable to a separate penalty for each.

(3) A person shall not be summarily convicted of an offence under this Act, or of an offence mentioned in the First Schedule to this Act, unless the offence was wholly or partly committed within six months before the information was laid; but, subject as aforesaid, evidence may be taken of acts constituting, or contributing to constitute, the offence, and committed at any previous time.

(4) When an offence under this Act, or any offence mentioned in the First Schedule to this Act, charged against any person is a continuous offence, it shall not be necessary to specify in the information, summons, or indictment, the date of the acts constituting the offence.

[This section re-enacts 57 & 58 Vict. c. 41, s. 18, with the alterations italicized in sub-s. 2, and those effected by the additions to schedule 1 (post, p. 887). In R. v. Miller, 65 J. P. 313, where dates were specified, Phillimore, J., refused to admit evidence of acts on other dates.]

Sect. 19.—Appeal for summary conviction to quarter sessions.

Sect. 20—Expenses of prosecution.]—(1) Where a misdemeanor under this Act is tried on indictment, the expenses of the prosecution shall be defrayed in like manner as in the case of a felony.

(2) This section shall not apply to Scotland.

[This section re-enacts 57 & 58 Vict. c. 41, s. 20. As to costs, see ante, p. 246].

Sect. 21—Guardians may pay costs of proceedings.]—A board of guardians, or in Scotland the parish council of any parish or combination, may, out of the funds under their control, pay the reasonable costs and expenses of any proceedings which they have directed to be taken under this Act in regard to the assault, ill-treatment, neglect, abandonment, or exposure of any child, and in the case of a union, shall charge such costs and expenses to the common fund. [This section re-enacts 57 & 58 Vict. c. 41, s. 21. For definition of guardians, see 52 & 35 Vict. c. 63, s. 16 (1): and see ante, p. 258].

Sect. 22.—Bye-laws by local authorities.

Sect. 23—Provision as to parents and as to meaning of "custody, charge, or care."]—(1) The provisions of this Act relating to the parent of a child shall apply to the step-parent of the child and to any person cohabiting with the parent of the child, and the expression "parent," when used in relation to a child, includes guardian and every person who is by law liable to maintain the child. [It was decided in Butler v. Gregory, 18 T. L. R. 370; 87 L. J. Newsp. 131; 46 Sol. J. 310, that the father of a bastard who had not actual custody, charge, or care of a child, and against whom no bastardy proceedings had been taken, was not a parent within 57 & 58 Vict. c. 41.]

(2) This Act shall apply in the case of a parent who, being without means to maintain a child, fails to provide for its maintenance under the Acts relating to the relief of the poor, in like manner as if the parent had otherwise neglected the child. [This clause seems to overrule the decisions in R. v. Chandler, 24 L. J. (M. C.) 109; 6 Cox, 519: R. v. Ryland, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 99: and R. v. Rugg, 12 Cox, 16: and see Cole v. Pendleton, 60 J. P. 359 (post, p. 890): R. v. Mabbett, 5 Cox, 339.]

(3) For the purposes of this Act—

Any person who is the parent of a child shall be presumed to have the custody of the child; and

Any person to whose charge a child is committed by its parent shall be presumed to have charge of the child; and

Any other person having actual possession or control of a child shall be presumed to have the care of the child.

[This section is a re-enactment of 57 & 58 Vict. c. 41, s. 23. As to the liability of a wife living with her husband, see R. v. Forsyth, Chester Summer Assizes, July 25, 1899, Kennedy, J., ante, p. 784.]

Sect. 24—Evidence of wages of defendant.]—In any proceedings under this Act a copy of an entry in the wages book of any employer of labour, or, if no wages book be kept, a written statement signed by such employer, or by his foreman, shall be primâ facie evidence that the wages therein entered, or stated as having been paid to any person, have in fact been so paid: Provided that such copy or statement has been signed by such employer, or his foreman, and that the signature of such employer, or foreman, has been witnessed by the person producing the said copy or statement. [This provision was new in 1904.]

Sect. 25—Vexatious Indictments Act to apply.]—Every misdemeanor under this Act shall in England and Ireland be deemed to be an offence within, and subject to, the provisions of the Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 17), and any Act amending the same. [This provision was new in 1904. See ante, p. 7.]

Sect. 26.—Amends s. 10 of the Poor Law Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 54).

Sect. 27.—Amends s. 5 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, post, p. 913.

Sect. 28—Right of parent, etc., to administer punishment.]—Nothing in this Act shall be construed to take away or affect the right of any parent, teacher, or other person having the lawful control or charge of a child to administer punishment to such child. [This section re-enacts 57 & 58 Vict. c. 41, s. 24. See Cleary v. Booth [1893] 1 Q. B. 465, and ante, p. 795.]

Sect. 29—General definitions.]—In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires—

The expression "local authority" has the same meaning as in the Employment of Children Act, 1903:

[In the Employment of Children Act, 1903 (3 Edw. 7, c. 45), "The expression 'local authority' means in the case of the City of London, the Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons of the City or Common Council assembled, in the case of a municipal borough with a population according to the census of 1901 of over 10,000, the borough council, and in the case of any other urban district with a population according to the census of 1901 of over 20,000, the district council, and elsewhere the county council" (s. 13).]

The expression "chief officer of police" means—in the city of London and the liberties thereof, the commissioner of city police; in the metropolitan police district, the commissioner of police of the metropolis;

elsewhere in England, the chief constable, or head constable or other officer, by whatever named called, having the chief local command of the police in the police district in reference to which such expression occurs:

The expression "street" includes any highway or other public place whether a thoroughfare or not:

The expression "place of safety" includes any place certified by the local authority under this Act for the purposes of this Act, and also includes any workhouse or police station, or any hospital surgery, or place of the like kind:

The expression "Industrial Schools Acts" means as regards England and Scotland the Industrial Schools Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 118), and the Acts amending the same. (See ante, p. 241.)

Sect. 30.—Application of Act to Scotland.

Sect. 31.—Application of Act to Ireland.

Sect. 32.—Expenses of local authority.

Sect. 33—Short title, repeals, and commencement.]—(1) This Act may be cited as the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904.

(2) The enactments mentioned in the Second Schedule to this Act shall be repealed from the date of the commencement of this Act to the extent specified in the third column to that schedule.

[By s. 38 (1) of the Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), "where . . . any Act passed after the commencement of this Act repeals and re-enacts with or without modification any provisions of a former Act, references in any other Act to the provisions so repealed shall unless the contrary intention appears, be construed as reference to the provisions so re-enacted." Quære, as to the effect of this provision upon s. 12 of the present Act. By virtue of s. 38 (2) of the same Act (ante, p. 7), proceedings for offences committed before Oct. 1, 1904, against the repealed enactments may be instituted or continued notwithstanding their repeal. R. v. Parsons [1904] Lewes Autumn Assizes, Bigham, J.: cf. R. v. Webb, 197 Cent. Crim. Ct. Sess. Pap. 627, Walton, J.]

(3) This Act shall come into operation on the first day of October, one thousand nine hundred and four.

FIRST SCHEDULE.

Any offence under sections twenty-seven (ante, p. 874), fifty-five (post, p. 899), or fifty-six (post, p. 903), of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), and any offence against a child under the age of sixteen years, under sections five (ante, p. 776), forty-two, forty-three (ante, p. 830), fifty-two (post, p. 918), or sixty-two (post, p. 925) of that Act, or section eleven (post, p. 925) of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69).

Any offence under the Dangerous Performances Acts, 1879 and 1897 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 34; 60 & 61 Vict. c. 52) (ante, p. 876).

Any other offence involving bodily injury to a child under the age of sixteen years.

[This schedule is a re-enactment of the schedule to 57 & 58 Vict. c. 41, with the additions italicized. The addition to this schedule of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 62, overrides R. v. Beer, 62 J. P. 120. In R. v. Roberts, 18 Cox, 530, Cave, J., refused to admit the evidence of the prisoner's husband on a charge of feloniously causing grievous bodily harm to a child under sixteen (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 18, ante, p. 839) on the ground that the words "other offence involving bodily injury to a child under the age of sixteen years" were limited to cases in which it was an essential part of the definition of the offence that the child should be under sixteen. It is submitted that this ruling was erroneous. In Lord Advocate v. Fraser, 3 Fraser (Justiciary), 67, it was held by the Lord Justice General of Scotland (Lord Kinross) that "culpable homicide" fell within the words.]

Second Schedule.

Enactments Repealed.

The Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 41).

The Employment of Children Act, 1903 (3 Edw. 7, c. 45), s. 4, sub-s. 6, and s. 11.

Indictment for Ill-treating a Child under Sixteen. (4 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 1 (1), ante, p. 877.)

Commencement as ante, p. 839]—that A. B., then being a person over the age of sixteen years, having the custody ("custody, charge, or care") of C. D., a child [or, "a certain child whose name to the jurors is unknown, being the illegitimate child of A. B. and"] under the age of sixteen years, to wit, of the age of —— years, on the —— day of —— and on divers days thereafter between that date and the —— day of —— (4 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 18 (4), ante, p. 877) unlawfully and wilfully did ill-treat ("assault, ill-treat, neglect, abandon, or expose") the said child, and did cause and procure (see ante, p. 304) the said child to be ill-treated ("assaulted, ill-treated, neglected, abandoned, or exposed") in a manner likely to cause such child unnecessary suffering ("unnecessary suffering or injury to its health"); against the form, etc. [as ante, p. 840]. Add other counts charging neglect, abandonment, or exposure, and charging "charge" or "care" of —— or "injury to the health" of the child if the depositions so warrant, as the case requires. The provisions of s. 18 (1), (2), (3), ante, p. 884, permitting the inclusion in one information or summons of charges for more than one offence under s. 1, do not apply to indictments. If assault can be proved, it would seem that a specific date should be given for each assault except such as are parts of the same transaction. When the offence charged is continuous, it is not necessary to specify in the indictment the date of the acts alleged to constitute the offence (s. 18 (4), ante, p. 885).

Misdemeanor: punishable by fine not exceeding 100*l.*, or alternatively or in default of payment of such fine or in addition thereto imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding two years. 4 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 1, sub-s. 1 (a) (ante, p. 877).

The Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 (ante, p. 7), applies to this offence. 4 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 25 (ante, p. 886).

Indictment for Ill-treatment of a Child under Sixteen by a Person interested in Money payable on the Death of a Child. (4 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 1, sub-ss. (1), (4), ante, p. 877.)

Charge the offence as in the last precedent, and add the following further averment: and the jurors aforesaid, on their oath aforesaid, do further present that before and at the time of the commission of the misdemeanor in this count before charged and stated, the said A. B. was interested ("directly or indirectly interested") in a sum of money accruable and payable ("accruable or payable") in the event of the death of the said C. D., to wit, in the sum of £ —— (specify the policy or contract under which the sum is alleged to be accruable or payable), and had knowledge that the said sum was accruable or payable in the event of the death of the said C. D. [Conclude as ante, p. 840.]

In 52 & 53 Vict. c. 44, s. 2 (rep.), it was provided that "such interest as aforesaid in any sum of money accruable or payable in the event of the death of the child shall be charged in the indictment and put to the jury in the same way, as far as may be, as a previous conviction is now charged and put." This provision prevented the interest of the accused in the death of the child being given in evidence before he had been convicted of the offence, although the proof of such interest would be strong evidence on the hearing of the charge to show that the ill-treatment, etc., was "wilful," which is an express element of the offence.

It is submitted that it is necessary in indictments under 57 & 58 Vict. c. 41, s. 1, and the present enactment, in order to justify the increased punishment provided for by 4 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 1 (4), to aver specifically the existence of such interest as is mentioned in that sub-section. If this were not done, the increased punishment might be open to question by writ of error (ante, p. 282), or in a case reserved (ante, p. 275) on the ground that there did not appear in the indictment the averments necessary to warrant the punishment imposed.

Misdemeanor: punishable as under the last precedent: but the court may increase the fine to an amount not exceeding 200*l.*, or in lieu of awarding any other penalty, may sentence the person indicted to penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years. 4 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 1, sub-s. (1), (4) (ante, p. 877); 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1 (ante, p. 235).

Evidence.

Over the age of sixteen.]—Sect. 17 of the Act does not apply to the age of the accused, which should be proved to exceed sixteen where the appearance of the accused is such as to leave no possibility of doubt; and the jury may decide for the appearance of the accused whether he is over sixteen. R. v. Cox, 18 Cox, 672, 674 (C. C. R.).

Having the custody, charge or care.]—The term "custody" applies to the parent, or any person cohabiting with the parent, and to a step-parent, or guardian, and to any person who is by law liable to maintain the child. But a putative father who has not been adjudged so is not a parent within the Act. Butler v. Gregory, ante, p. 885. Where evidence is given that a person is a parent, he is presumed to have custody of the child (s. 23).

Where evidence is given that the child was committed to the charge of the defendant, he is presumed to have charge of the child (s. 23 (3)). And where evidence is given that the defendant had actual possession or control of the child, he is presumed to have "care" of the child. The word "actual" appears to be used to include cases of constructive position and questions of the legality of the possession.

Under the age of sixteen.]—The effect of s. 17 (ante, p. 884) is that where the child appears to the court to be under sixteen, it is for the defence to prove that the child is older. Notwithstanding the section, the prosecutor should be prepared to prove the age of the child in all cases in which it is not absolutely clear on the view that it is under sixteen. A certificate of birth, coupled with evidence of identity, is legal evidence of the age of the child mentioned in the certificate; but the age may be proved by any other lawful evidence, such as that of persons who have seen the child, or that it attended a public elementary school. R. v. Cox [1898] 1 Q. B. 179; 67 L. J. Q. B. 293; 18 Cox, 672 (C. C. R.); and see ante, p. 352.

Wilfully.]—The term "wilfully" "means that the act is done deliberately and intentionally, not by accident or inadvertence, but so that the mind of the person who does the act went with it." R. v. Senior [1899] 1 Q. B. 283, 290; 67 L. J. Q. B. 175; 19 Cox, 219, Russell, L.C.J. And it includes deliberate omission on religious grounds to provide medical attendance for a child. Id.

Did assault.]—As to evidence of assault, see ante, p. 833.

"Ill-treat."]—It seems not to be necessary to prove actual assault or battery (as to which, see ante, p. 835), and that bullying or frightening will suffice, or any course of conduct calculated to cause unnecessary suffering or injury to health.

"Neglect."]—This includes failure by a parent to resort to the poor law authorities for the means of maintaining his child where he cannot do so out of his own means. See s. 23 (2) and note, ante, p. 886. Where a father who earned a sufficient wage did not pay over to his wife enough to clothe and feed the children properly, it was held no answer to a prosecution of the father for neglect to say that by resort to the poor law the mother might have obviated the effect of the father's neglect. Cole v. Pendleton, 60 J. P. 359. Evidence of the possession by the prisoner of such means at a date prior to the neglect as would presumably not be exhausted at the date of the neglect, is some evidence of the possession of means at the date of such neglect. R. v. Jones, 19 Cox, 678, Kennedy, J.

"Expose or abandon."]—As to the evidence necessary to prove this, see ante, p. 875.

In a manner likely to cause unnecessary suffering or injury to health.]—Deliberate omission to supply medical or surgical aid to a child is within these words. R. v. Senior [1899] 1 Q. B. 283 (see ante, p. 803). Direct proof does not seem to be required that the neglect caused, or was likely to cause, unnecessary suffering, and the jury may determine the question on the circumstances proved. R. v. Brenton, 111 Cent. Cr. Ct. Sess. Pap. 309, Day, J. But a registered medical practitioner should be called to prove the condition of the child. The unsworn evidence of any child of tender years may be given. See 4 Edw. 7 c. 15, s. 15 (ante, p. 883), and ante, p. 368. Where a justice is satisfied by the evidence of a registered medical practitioner that the attendance at court of the injured child would involve serious danger to its life or health, the justice may take its deposition (4 Edw. 7 c. 15, s. 13), which is admissible in evidence at the trial if reasonable notice (in writing, see note to s. 14, ante, p. 883) was served on the person against whom it was taken, and that person has had an opportunity of cross-examining the child. The court may dispense with the attendance of the child at the trial if satisfied that such attendance is not essential to the just hearing of the case (s. 16). The defendant is a competent but not a compellable witness; 4 Edw. 7 c. 15, s. 12 (ante, p. 882); and the husband or wife of the defendant may be required to attend to give evidence as an ordinary witness in the case, and is competent but not compellable to give evidence. Id.

It is a defence that the alleged ill-treatment consisted in reasonable correction by parent, teacher, or other person having lawful control of the child (s. 28, ante, p. 886).

As to the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 36), see ante, pp. 392–397; and see also Charnock v. Merchant [1900] 1 K. B. 474, and s. (38 (1) of the Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63, ante, p. 887).

Sect. 5.

False Imprisonment.

Indictment for Assault and False Imprisonment (Common Law).

Central Criminal Court, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present, that J. S., on the first day of June, in the year of our Lord ——, at the parish of A., in the county of L., and within the jurisdiction of the said court, in and upon one J. N. did make an assault, and him the said J. N. did then beat, wound, and ill-treat, and him the said J. N. then unlawfully and injuriously, and against the will of the said J. N., and also against the laws of this realm, and without any legal warrant, authority or reasonable or justifiable cause whatsoever, did imprison and detain so imprisoned for a long space of time, to wit, for the space of ten hours then next following,* and other wrongs to the said J. N. did, to the great damage of the said J. N., and against the peace of our lord the King, his crown and dignity. If any money were extorted from the prosecutor for setting him at liberty, add an averment of it immediately after the above asterisk, as thus: then next following, and until he the said J. N. had paid the said J. S. the sum of five pounds and five shillings of the moneys of the said J. N. for his enlargement; and other wrongs, etc., as above (see 3 Chit. Cr. L. 835). A count for a common assault (see ante, p. 833), may be added, but is unnecessary, as the jury can convict of common assault on the first count. See ante, p. 215, et seq.

False imprisonment is a misdemeanor at common law, punishable by fine or imprisonment without hard labour, or both (ante, pp. 238, 240).

Kidnapping.]—There is a form of false imprisonment known as kidnapping, consisting in the stealing or carrying away any person from his own country into another. 1 East, P. C. 429. It is indictable at common law (see R. v. Lesley, Bell, 220; 29 L. J. (M. C.) 97; 8 Cox, 269: Phillips v. Eyre, L. R. 4 Q. B. 225, 240); and where the person kidnapped is taken abroad, is specially punishable under the Habeas Corpus Act (31 C. 2. c. 2), s. 11. Designy's case, Sir T. Raymond, 474: and see 3 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 269. As to kidnapping Pacific Islanders, see 35 & 36 Vict. c. 19; Steph. Dig. Cr. L. (6th ed.) 85; 2 Steph. Hist. Cr. L. 58; and for instance of a trial under the Act and the mode of proving jurisdiction, see R. v. Vos [1895] 6 Queensland, L. J. 215.

Evidence for the Prosecution.

All the prosecutor has to prove is the imprisonment: it is for the defendant to show that he was justified in what he did, and that the imprisonment was lawful.

Every confinement of the person is an imprisonment, whether it be in a common prison or in a private house, or in the stocks, or even by forcibly detaining one in the public streets. 2 Co. Inst. 482, 589; Cro. Car. 209; Com. Dig. Imprisonment (G.); 2 Selw. (N. P.) 915 (11th ed.). But merely preventing a man from proceeding along a particular way, when he may go where he desires to go without going along it, is not an imprisonment. Bird v. Jones, 7 Q. B. 742. When a person sends for a constable and gives another person in charge for felony and the constable tells the party charged that he must go with him, on which the other, without further compulsion, actually does go to a police-office this is an imprisonment. Pocock v. Moore, Ry. & M. 321. But where the warrant is used merely as a summons, and no arrest is made thereon, and the party voluntarily goes before the magistrate, this, it seems, is not an imprisonment. Arrowsmith v. Le Mesurier, 2 B. & P. (N. R.) 211: Berry v. Adamson, 6 B. & C. 528. Where a man who had an idiot brother bedridden in his house kept him in a dark room without sufficient warmth or clothing, it was held not to be an imprisonment. R. v. Smith, 2 C. & P. 449. Detention of a prisoner after expiry of his sentence is false imprisonment. Migotti v. Colvill, 4 C. P. D. 233; and see Moone v. Rose, L. R. 4 Q. B. 486. So is detention of a prisoner after acquittal. Mee v. Cruikshank, 20 Cox, 210, Wills, J.; and see ante, p. 223. But detention in obedience to a specific order of court is not actionable if the exigency of the order or warrant is obeyed (Greaves v. Keene, 4 Ex. D. 73), and the order is valid on the face of it. Henderson v. Preston, 21 Q. B. D. 362. The offence would seem to be committed by mere detention without violence: see R. v. Linsberg, Cent. Crim. Ct., Feb. 9, 1905, Bosanquet, Common Serjeant, not yet reported: Hunter v. Johnson, 13 Q. B. D. 225.

If the prosecutor fail in proving the imprisonment, he may still prove the assault and battery, as directed ante, p. 833, et seq.

Evidence for the Defendant.

The defendant must either prove that he did not imprison J. N. at all, or justify the imprisonment. The grounds upon which an imprisonment can be justified may be considered under the following heads:—

1. Arrest under civil process.]—Arrest under civil process is now abolished, except (1) under the circumstances and subject to the restrictions set forth in the Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), ss. 4–10, and the Debtors Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 76); (2) for contempt of court of a civil nature. The following rules were established under the former law:—

An imprisonment in a civil case cannot be justified except under a writ or order of a court.

An arrest upon a capias ad satisfaciendum, out of a superior court, if regular and regularly executed, may be justified by the officer who executed it, whether there be a judgment to warrant it or not (1 Lev. 95; 3 Lev. 20; 1 Salk. 409); but if the plaintiff or his attorney would justify under it, he must show such a judgment as would warrant it (per Holt,

C.J., Carth. 443: Barker v. Braham, 3 Wils. 368; 2 W. Bl. 866: Smith v. Sydney, L. R. 5 Q. B. 203); and therefore, where a ca. sa. was sued out on a judgment against an administratrix, without suggesting a devastavit, it was held, that false imprisonment would lie against the plaintiff and his attorney. Barker v. Braham, ubi supra. But it is not necessary that a ca. sa. should be returned in order to justify under it. Rowland v. Veale, 1 Cowp. 18.

Process out of an inferior court to justify imprisonment must show that the court had jurisdiction of the cause of action (10 Co. Rep. 76 a, 68 b; cf. 3 Lev. 141, 243; T. Jones, 165), and that the process was executed within the jurisdiction. 3 Lev. 243. See ante, p. 806, et seq.

But if a writ or warrant be void upon the face of it, as if the officer's name be inserted in the warrant after it is sealed (2 Wils. 47), or if the writ be executed after the day on which it expires (2 Esp. 585), or on a Sunday (29 C. 2, c. 7, s. 6), it will be no justification to the person arresting under it. But neither the officer nor the party is subject to an indictment for false imprisonment for arresting a person privileged from arrest, whether the privilege be permanent (Tarlton v. Fisher, 2 Doug. 671), or temporary. Cameron v. Lightfoot, 2 W. Bl. 1190, 1195, n.

2. Arrest under criminal process: (A) By warrant.]—A warrant from a magistrate having general cognizance of the matter of it will justify the officer in executing it, whether there be any grounds in fact for granting it or not (Shergold v. Holloway, 2 Str. 1002); but on the contrary, if the magistrate had not cognizance of the matter of the warrant; if, for instance, he granted a warrant to take up J. N., to answer in a plea of debt, the constable would not be justified in arresting him. Id.; and see Com. Dig. Imprisonment (H.) 8, 9. A conviction by a magistrate having competent jurisdiction over the subject-matter of it, upon which the party has been arrested, is, until reversed or quashed, conclusive evidence in favour even of the magistrate, in a prosecution against him for false imprisonment. 7 T. R. 633, n. See 11 & 12 Vict. cc. 42, 43, 44. As to gaolers, see Greaves v. Keene, 4 Ex. D. 73: Henderson v. Preston, 21 Q. B. D. 362. As to judges of the superior courts, see Taaffe v. Downes, 3 St. Tr., N. S. 1317. The warrant must be executed within the proper jurisdiction. In the ordinary cases of indictable offences, this is in the county or borough for which the justice granting it acted, or in case of fresh pursuit, within seven miles therefrom. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 10; 45 & 46 Vict. c. 50, s. 223; 52 & 53 Vict. c. 63, s. 24. As to execution of warrants by metropolitan police, see 2 & 3 Vict. c. 71, s. 17. As to execution of English warrants over the Scottish border, see 20 & 21 Vict. c. 72, s. 11. Arrest on Sunday is legal. 29 C. 2, c. 7, s. 6. The death of the issuing magistrate does not affect the warrant. 42 & 43 Vict. c. 49, s. 37. By 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 11 (ante, p. 106), warrants issued in one county, etc., may be executed in another county, etc., if backed by a justice of the latter jurisdiction. In a case of misdemeanor the officer cannot lawfully arrest unless he has the warrant with him. Codd v. Cabe, 1 Ex. D. 352; 45 L. J. (M. C.) 101. As to felony, see Creagh v. Gamble, 24 L. R. Ir. 458.

(B) Without warrant. 1. Common law powers.]—A justice of peace may apprehend, or cause to be apprehended by a verbal order merely, any person committing a felony or breach of the peace in his presence. 2 Hale, 86. And the sheriff or coroner also may apprehend any felon within the county, without warrant. 4 Bl. Com. 289; and see 50 & 51 Vict. c. 55, ss. 8, 29.

By constables.]—A constable may arrest any one for a breach of the peace in his presence, and keep him in his house or the stocks, until he can bring him before a magistrate. 1 Hale, 587. See Cook v. Nethercote, 6 C. & P. 741; 40 R. R. 855. So, a constable may justify arresting a man within his constablewick upon a reasonable charge of felony, although it afterwards appear that the man is innocent, or even that no felony was, in fact, committed. Samuel v. Paine, 1 Doug. 359: Cowles v. Dunbar, 2 C. & P. 565. See R. v. Ford, R. & R. 329: R. v. Thompson, 1 Mood. C. C. 80. (See ante, p. 807.) So, where a felony has been actually committed, a constable may arrest a man upon a reasonable suspicion of his having committed it; 2 Co. Inst. 52; 2 Hale, 90, 91, 92: Ledwith v. Catchpole, Cald. 291. The question of reasonable suspicion is matter of law, and should not be left to the jury. Hill v. Yates, 2 Moore (C. P.) 80; and see Mure v. Kaye, 4 Taunt. 34.

A constable may arrest and detain in custody for examination any person whom he finds in the streets at night, and whom there is reasonable ground to suspect of felony, although there be no proof of a felony actually committed. Lawrence v. Hedger, 3 Taunt. 14; 12 R. R. 571: and see 2 Hale, 98; 2 Co. Inst. 52.

By private persons.]—A private person, and à fortiori a peace officer, if a felony be committed, or a dangerous wound given in his presence, is not only justified in arresting, but is bound by law to arrest, the felon. 2 Hawk. c. 12, s. 1. So, he is justified in arresting or giving in charge persons engaged in an affray while it is continuing, or if there is reasonable ground that they mean to renew it; Price v. Seeley, 10 Cl. & F. 28; 8 Eng. Rep. 651; but he cannot arrest any person concerned in it after the affray is over, for in that case a warrant is necessary. 2 Co. Inst. 52: Timothy v. Simpson, 1 Cr. M. & R. 757; 4 L. J. (Ex.) 81 (approved in the case last cited). Under the Riot Act he is bound to arrest persons not dispersing after proclamation. 1 G. 1, stat. 2, c. 5, s. 3: R. v. Pinney, 3 St. Tr., N. S. 11. So, he may arrest any man about to commit a felony or treason, or any act which would manifestly endanger another's life, and detain him until the intent be presumed to have ceased. 2 Hawk. c. 12, s. 19; Rolle Abr. 559 (E.): Handcock v. Baker, 2 B. & P. 260; 5 R. R. 587. At common law, apart from any statute, a private person is entitled to arrest and give into custody another person for having committed a felony, provided that there has been a felony actually committed, and such private person has reasonable ground to believe that the person whom he has given into custody has committed that felony. The reason for his having such power is that, where a felony has been committed, in many cases the accused person would escape unless a private person, who has reasonable grounds for suspecting him, were authorized to seize and take him into custody. But that power ought not to be exercised except when there is reason to believe that the man would not be forthcoming. Allen v. London and South Western Rail. Co., L. R. 6 Q. B. 66; 40 L. J. (Q. B.) 55, Blackburn, J. See Beckwith v. Philby, 6 B. & C. 635: R. v. Hunt, 1 Mood. C. C. 93: Stonehouse v. Elliott, 6 T. R. 315; 3 R. R. 183.

2. Statutory powers.]—Persons found committing any offence against the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), may be apprehended without warrant by any peace officer, or by the owner of the property, his servant, or person authorized by him (s. 61, ante, p. 649). Offenders against s. 1 of the Night Poaching Act, 1828, may be arrested by the owner of the land, warren or chase, or manor, and their servants. 9 G. 4, c. 69, s. 2 (ante, p. 865). See R. v. Fraser, 1 Mood. C. C. 419. Any person may arrest without warrant a person found committing any offence against the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96) (except angling in the daytime) (see s. 103, ante, p. 429): or any indictable offence against the Coinage Offences Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 99), s. 31 (post, p. 961). And by the Customs Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 36), s. 190, persons making signals to smuggling vessels may be apprehended by any person. By the Vagrancy Act, 1824 (5 G. 4, c. 83), s. 6, persons offending against that Act may be apprehended by any person without warrant.

By 14 & 15 Vict. c. 19, s. 11, any person whatsoever may apprehend any person found committing any indictable offence in the night (i.e., between 9 p.m. and 6 a.m.), and convey or deliver him to a peace officer. (See ante, p. 622.) And under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. s. 104 (ante, p. 430); c. 97, s. 57 (ante, p. 649); c. 100, s. 66 (ante, p. 777), any constable or peace officer may take into custody, without warrant, any person whom he shall find loitering or lying in any highway, yard, or other place, during the night, or whom he shall have good cause to suspect of having committed or being about to commit any felony against those Acts respectively, and shall take him as soon as reasonably may be before a justice of the peace, to be dealt with according to law. Like provisions are contained in other general and local Acts, with respect to particular offences. See Steph. Dig. Cr. Proc. pp. 59–62; Official Index to Statutes (ed. 1904), tit. "Arrest."

3. Arrest for a contempt.]—If a contempt be committed in the face of a court of record (as, by rude and contumelious behaviour; by obstinacy, perverseness, prevarication, or refusal to answer any lawful question; by breach of the peace, or any wilful disturbance whatever), the judge may by parol order the offender to be instantly apprehended and imprisoned, at his (the judge's) discretion, without any further proof or examination. 2 Hale, 86; 2 Hawk. c. 22; 4 Bl. Com. 282, 283: Spilsbury v. Micklethwaite, 1 Taunt. 146. See Cropper v. Horton, 8 D. & R. 166: R. v. Charlesworth, 2 F. & F. 326: Ex parte Fernandez, 10 C. B. (N. S.) 3; 39 L. J. (C. P.) 321.

4. Arrest after an escape.]—In civil cases, where a person who has been taken in custody in execution escapes, if it be a negligent escape, the gaoler or officer may retake him; if a voluntary escape, a retaking would be a false imprisonment. Jones v. Pope, 1 Saund. 34, and notes: Allanson v. Butler, 1 Sid. 330: Buxton v. Home, 1 Show. (K. B.) 174: Atkinson v. Jameson, 5 T. R. 25. Where a person in custody upon mesne process escapes, if the escape be negligent, the gaoler or officer may retake him; if voluntary, he cannot.

In criminal cases, where a prisoner escapes, if the escape be negligent merely, the gaoler or officer may retake him, at any time, without warrant (Dalt. c. 159; if voluntary, he cannot afterwards be retaken by virtue of the same warrant under which he was at first arrested (2 Hawk. c. 19, s. 12); but he may be retaken on a fresh warrant, or without warrant in cases where he might have been arrested without warrant originally. Prison officers have now all the powers, duties, etc., of constables. 61 & 62 Vict. c. 41, s. 10.

5. Arrest under other authority.]—Where a femme covert appeared before a justice of the peace as a material witness in a case of felony, it was held that he was justified in committing her until the sessions, upon her refusing to appear at the sessions to give evidence or to find sureties for her appearance. Bennet v. Watson, 3 M. & Sel. 1. Under s. 20 of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 42), the examining justice can commit a witness to prison until after the trial of the accused, or until the witness enter into a proper recognizance, if after making a deposition he refuses to enter into a recognizance to attend the trial. Under former statutes it was held that a magistrate might commit an accused person for re-examination; but if the committal were for an unreasonable time, the warrant of commitment was virtually void, and the commitment is an imprisonment. Davis v. Capper, 5 Man. & Ryl. 53; 10 B. & C. 28. Remand of the accused in custody on an inquiry as to an indictable offence may not be for over eight days (11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 21); unless for the purpose of dealing summarily with the case. 42 & 43 Vict. c. 49, s. 24.

Courts having bankruptcy jurisdiction have power to issue warrants for the arrest of a bankrupt, and where a prosecution for misdemeanor is ordered, may commit the offender for trial. 46 & 47 Vict. c. 52, s. 165. The courts having jurisdiction in bankruptcy are now the high court of justice and the county courts (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52, s. 92, sub-s. 1), and a county court, for the purposes of its bankruptcy jurisdiction, in addition to the ordinary powers of the court, has all the powers and jurisdiction of the high court. Id. s. 100.

Officers in the army and navy have, in many instances, authority to imprison soldiers and seamen under their command (see Manual of Military Law); and as to the effect of being under military law, see Marks v. Frogley [1898] 1 Q. B. 396, 888. But false imprisonment has been held to lie against a superior officer, where the imprisonment at first was legal, but was afterwards aggravated with many circumstances of cruelty, and continued beyond all necessary bounds. Wall v. Macnamara, 1 T. R. 536, cit.; 1 R. R. 285, cit. So, where a seaman was confined by his captain for three days, for a supposed breach of duty, and was then liberated by him, without being brought to a court-martial, it was held that false imprisonment would lie. Swinton v. Molloy, 1 T. R. 537, cit.; 1 R. R. 286, cit.

An arrest and detention under an impress warrant may be lawful, but the party executing it does so at his peril; for if he take a man not liable to be impressed, as, for instance, a person who has never served at sea, he is guilty of false imprisonment. Flewster v. Royle, 1 Camp. 187.

Where the master of an English merchant ship contracted with the Chilian government to take from Valparaiso to England certain persons whom that government had ordered to be banished to England, this was held to be a false imprisonment as soon as the ship was out of the Chilian territory. R. v. Lesley, Bell, 220; 29 L. J. (M. C.) 97; 8 Cox, 269.

Sect. 6.

ABDUCTION.

Statutes.

13 Edw. 1, c. 34—(a) Abduction of married women.]—And of women carried away with the goods of their husbands the King shall have the suit for the goods so taken away. . . . [See ante, p. 459; 1 Hale, 637].

(b) Abduction of nuns.]—He that carrieth a nun from her house, although she consent shall be punished by three years' imprisonment, and shall make convenient satisfaction to the house from which she was taken, and nevertheless shall make fine at the King's will.

c. 35—Abduction of wards.]—Concerning children, males or females, whose marriage belongeth to another, taken or carried away, if the ravisher have no right in the marriage, though after he restore the child unmarried, or else pay for the marriage, he shall nevertheless be punished for his offence by two years' imprisonment, and if he do not restore or do marry the child after the years of consent, and be not able to satisfy for the marriage, he shall abjure the realm or have perpetual imprisonment. . . .

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100 (Offences against the Person Act, 1861), s. 53—Abduction of a woman on account of her fortune.]—Where any woman of any age shall have any interest, whether legal or equitable, present or future, absolute, conditional, or contingent, in any real or personal estate, or shall be a presumptive heiress or co-heiress, or presumptive next of kin, or one of the presumptive next of kin, to any one having such interest, whosoever shall, from motives of lucre, take away, or detain such woman against her will, with intent to marry or carnally know her, or to cause her to be married or carnally known by any other person, and whosoever shall fraudulently allure, take away, or detain such woman, being under the age of twenty-one years, out of the possession and against the will of her father or mother, or of any other person having the lawful care or charge of her, with intent to marry or carnally know her, or to cause her to be married or carnally known by any other person, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding fourteen years . . .; and whosoever shall be convicted of any offence against this section shall be incapable of taking any estate or interest, legal or equitable, in any real or personal property of such woman, or in which she shall have any such interest, or which shall come to her as such heiress, co-heiress, or next of kin as aforesaid; and if any such marriage as aforesaid shall have taken place, such property shall, upon such conviction, be settled in such manner as the Court of Chancery in England or Ireland shall upon any information at the suit of the attorney-general appoint. [This section re-enacts 9 G. 4, c. 31, s. 19, with the additions italicized.]

Sect. 54—Abduction by force with intent to marry, etc.]—Whosoever shall, by force, take away or detain against her will any woman of any age, with intent to marry or carnally know her, or to cause her to be married or carnally known by any other person, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding fourteen years. . . . [This section re-enacts 10 G. 4, c. 34, s. 22 (1).]

61 & 62 Vict. c. 36 (Criminal Evidence Act, 1898), ss. 1, 4, and sched.—Evidence of accused and husband or wife of accused.]—Ante, pp. 392–398.

Indictment under first part of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 53.

Central Criminal Court, to wit:—The jurors for our Lord the King upon their oath present, that J. S. [in the parish of ——, and within the jurisdiction of the said court], on the first day of June, in the year of our Lord ——, feloniously, and from motives of lucre did take away and detain ("take away or detain") one A. N., against her will, she, the said A. N., then having a certain present and absolute interest ("any interest whether legal or equitable, present or future, absolute, conditional or contingent") in certain real estate ("real or personal estate"), to wit [here describe the estate], with intent her the said A. N. to marry ("to marry or carnally know her, or to cause her to be married or carnally known by any other person"); against the form [as ante, p. 840]. Add a count stating generally the nature of some part of the property, and, if the intent be doubtful, add counts varying the intent. Formerly, if a woman was taken away forcibly in one county, and was married or defiled with her own consent, without any continuing force, in another county, the offence was not complete in either county, and the offender could not be indicted (R. v. Gordon, 1 Russ. Cr. (4th ed.) 707; 3 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 255; but now as actual marriage or defilement is not necessary, this difficulty cannot occur: and see 7 G. 4, c. 64, s. 12 (ante, p. 43).

Felony: penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 53; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2, (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 71, (ante, p. 778).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant took away and detained A. N. against her will. If she be taken away in the first instance with her own consent, but afterwards refuse to continue with the offender, and be forcibly detained by him, the offence is within the statute. See 1 Hawk, c. 41, (forcible marriage), s. 7. Prove also, that A. N. had the interest stated in the indictment, from which the motives of lucre may be presumed. Prove the intent stated in the indictment by the declarations or acts of the defendant, or by circumstances from which the intent may be inferred. See R. v. Barratt, 9 C. & P. 387. Under the old law the woman must have been married or defiled: Fulwood's case, Cro. Car. 488: R. v. Swendsen, 14 St. Tr. 559; 1 Hale, 660, 661; cf. 4 Bl. Com. 209: Brown's case, Ventr. 243; 3 Keb. 193; and see ante, p. 398: but this is no longer necessary, the intent to marry or carnally know being sufficient. R. v. Perry (3 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 666), cited in R. v. Sergeant, Ry. & M. 352, 354, Abbott, C.J.; 1 Hawk. c. 41, s. 13, forcible marriage; 1 East, P. C. 454 (ante, p. 398). By virtue of s. 4 of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 36), ante, p. 896, the husband or wife can be called for the prosecution or for the defence, without the consent of the accused spouse, but appears not to be compellable. See 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 20 (post, p. 906).

The offender is incapable of taking any interest, legal or equitable, in the real estate of the woman, or in which she has any such interest, or which shall come to her as any such heiress, etc. And if a marriage shall have taken place, the property shall, on conviction of the offender, be settled in such manner as the High Court (Chancery Division), at the suit of the attorney-general, shall appoint. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 53. R. v. Burrell, L. & C. 354; 33 L. J. (M. C.) 54; 9 Cox, 368, is a decision on that part of s. 53 which relates to the fraudulent taking away of women under the age of twenty-one. The facts proved in that case, which were complicated, were held not sufficient to sustain a conviction.

OF A GIRL UNDER SIXTEEN YEARS OF AGE.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100 (Offences against the Person Act), s. 55.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully take or cause to be taken any unmarried girl, being under the age of sixteen years, out of the possession and against the will of her father or mother, or of any other person having the lawful care or charge of her, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. [This section re-enacts 9 G. 4, c. 31, s. 20.]

48 & 49 Vict. c. 69 (Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885), s. 20—Evidence of defendant and husband and wife of defendant.]—See post, p. 906.

4 Edw. 7, c. 15 (Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904), ss. 12–18 and sched. 1—Procedure and evidence.]—See ante, pp. 882–885, 887.

Indictment. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 55.)

Commencement as in the last precedent]—unlawfully did take and cause to be taken one A. N. out of the possession and against the will of R. N., her father ("out of the possession and against the will of her father or mother, or of any other person having the lawful care or charge of her"), she the said A. N. then being an unmarried girl under the age of sixteen years, to wit, of the age of fifteen years; against the form [as ante, p. 840]. The allegation "being an unmarried girl," is sufficient. R. v. Moore, 2 Lev. 179: R. v. Boyall, 2 Burr. 832 (ante, p. 84). If the offence is continuous it is not necessary to specify the date of the acts alleged to constitute the offence. 4 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 18 (4), and sched. 1 (ante, pp. 885, 887).

Misdemeanor: imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 55. As to fining the offender and requiring him to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour, Id. s. 71 (ante, p. 778).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant took A. N. out of the charge of her father or mother, or of some person having the lawful care or charge of her. Cf. s. 7 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69), and the cases thereon, post, pp. 902, 903.

Take.]—The taking need not be by force, actual or constructive, and it is immaterial whether the girl consents or not. R. v. Mankletow, Dears.

159; 22 L. J. (M. C.) 115; 6 Cox, 143: see R. v. Kipps, 4 Cox, 167: R. v. Booth, 12 Cox, 231. Where the defendant went in the night to her father's house, and placed a ladder against her window, and held it for her to descend, which she did, and eloped with him, this was held to be a "taking of her out of the possession of her father" within the statute; although she herself proposed the plan to the defendant. R. v. Robins, 1 C. & K. 456. So, where the girl was persuaded by the defendant to leave her father's house and go away with him, without the father's consent, and accordingly left her home alone by a preconcerted arrangement between them, and went to a place appointed, where she was met by the prisoner, and they then went away together, without the intention of returning: this was held to be a taking of the girl out of her father's possession within the statute, since up to the moment of her meeting with the defendant, she had not absolutely renounced her father's protection. R. v. Mankletow (supra). So, where the defendant, by concert with the girl, met her and stayed with her away from her father's house for several nights, sleeping with her; and the jury found that the father did not consent, and that the defendant knew he did not; and that he took the girl away with him in order to gratify his passions, and then let her return home and not with the intention of keeping her away from her home permanently; the conviction was held right. R. v. Timmins, Bell, 276; 30 L. J. (M. C.) 45; 8 Cox, 401. Where a man induces a girl, by promises of what he will do for her, to leave her father's house and live with him, he may be convicted under this statute, although he is not actually present or assisting her at the time she leaves her father's roof. R. v. Robb. 4 F. & F. 59. If the girl leaves her father, without any persuasion, inducement or blandishment held out to her by the defendant, so that she has got fairly away from home, and then goes to him, although it may be his moral duty to return her to her father's custody, yet his not doing so is no infringement of this statute, for the statute does not say he shall restore her, but only that he shall not take her away. R. v. Olifier, 10 Cox, 402, Bramwell, B. If the suggestion to go away with the prisoner comes from the girl only, and he takes merely the passive part of yielding to her suggestion, he is entitled to an acquittal. R. v. Jarvis, 20 Cox, 249, Jelf, J. It is submitted that the ruling to the contrary in R. v. Biswell, 2 Cox, 257, is not law. See discussion of the authorities, R. v. Mackney, 29 Vict. L. R. 22. And where a young woman persuaded a girl under sixteen to go away with her from her father's house to London, telling her that her (the defendant's) mother wanted a little girl as a servant, and would give her 5*l.* wages, and the girl left her father's house voluntarily for that purpose, this was held not to be a taking within 9 G. 4, c. 31, s. 20, of which 24 & 25 Vict c. 100, s. 55 is a re-enactment. R. v. Meadows, 1 C. & K. 399: see R. v. Handley, 1 F. & F. 648: sed quære. If, however, the girl while living with her father, leaves his house for a mere temporary purpose, intending to return to it, she is still in his possession within the meaning of the statute; and if when so out of the house the defendant induces her to run away with him, he is guilty of the misdemeanor created by this statute. R. v. Mycock, 12 Cox, 28, Willes, J.; and see R. v. Baillie, 8 Cox, 238. Where a servant girl, under sixteen years of age, had permission from her master to visit her parents from Sunday to Monday night, and went to see them on Sunday for a few hours only, and then told them (by previous arrangement with the prisoner) that she was going back to her service, instead of which she remained with the prisoner all night, and did not return to her service until some days afterwards, it was held (1) that the girl was not in the possession of her father at the time of the alleged offence, but under the lawful charge of her master, and (2) that the above facts would not warrant a conviction for abduction from the master. R. v. Miller, 13 Cox, 179, Lush, J.

If the defendant, at the time he took the girl away, did not know, and had no reason to know, that she was under the lawful care or charge of her father, mother, or some other person, he is not guilty of this offence. R. v. Hibbert, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 184; 38 L. J. (M. C.) 61; 11 Cox, 246. The defendant met a girl in the street, and induced her to go with him to a neighbouring town, where he seduced her. They returned together, and he left her where he had met her. The girl then went to her home, where she lived with her father. The defendant made no inquiry, and did not know who the girl was, or whether she had a father living or not, but he had no reason to, and did not, believe that she was a girl of the town. Upon these facts it was held that the defendant could not be found guilty of an offence against s. 55 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100. Id. See also R. v. Green, 3 F. & F. 274.

It was held to be an offence against 4 & 5 Ph. & M. c. 8, s. 3 (of which 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 55, is in substance a re-enactment), to take away a natural daughter under sixteen from the custody of her putative father. 1 Hawk. c. 41, s. 14 (seduction): R. v. Cornforth, 2 Str. 1162: R. v. Sweeting, 1 East, P. C. 457. Upon the death of the lawful father, the mother retains her authority, though she marry again, unless the father has disposed of the custody of his child to others; the assent of the second husband is not material. Ratcliff's case, 3 Co. Rep. 38.

Against the will, etc.]—Prove also that she was taken away against the will of the person who had the care or charge of her. If the defendant induce the parents, by false and fraudulent representations, to allow him to take the child away, this is an abduction within the statute. R. v. Hopkins, C. & Mar. 254. It seems to be doubtful whether, if the parent once consent, but afterwards dissent, a subsequent taking away can be said to be against the will of the parent. Calthrop v. Axtel, 1 East, P. C. 457; 3 Mod. 168. It was held not to be clear under 4 & 5 Ph. & M. c. 8 (rep.), whether it would be an offence to take away a girl against the consent of her parent, but by the consent of one who has the temporary care of her. 1 East, P. C. 457. Where the girl's mother had encouraged her in a lax course of life, by permitting her to go out alone at night and dance at public-houses, from one of which she went away with the defendant, Cockburn, C.J., ruled that she could not be said to be taken away against the mother's will within the meaning of 9 G. 4, c. 31, s. 20 (of which the present section is a re-enactment). R. v. Primelt, 1 F. & F. 50.

Under sixteen, etc.—Prove that she was under the age of sixteen years, and unmarried. It is no defence that the defendant did not know her to be under sixteen, or might suppose from her appearance that she was older; R. v. Robins, 1 C. & K. 456: R. v. Olifier, 10 Cox, 402: R. v. Mycock, 12 Cox, 28: R. v. Booth, 12 Cox, 231; or even that the defendant bonâ fide believed and had reasonable ground for believing that she was over sixteen. R. v. Prince, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 154; 44 L. J. (M. C.) 122; 13 Cox, 138. If she was under the age of fourteen years, and taken away by force or fraud, the defendant must be indicted as in the next precedent but one.

The husband or wife of the defendant may be called for the prosecution or defence without the consent of the defendant; 61 & 62 Vict. c. 36, s. 4 (ante, p. 396); but appears not to be a compellable witness. 48 & 49

Vict. c. 69, s. 20, post, p. 906; 4 Edw. 7 c. 15, s. 12, ante, p. 882; and see ante, pp. 392–398.

The act is positively prohibited, and therefore the absence of a corrupt motive is no answer to the charge. See R. v. Booth, 12 Cox, 231. So, it was held to be no legal excuse that the defendant made use of no other means than the common blandishments of a lover, to induce her to elope with and marry him. R. v. Twisleton, 1 Lev. 257; 1 Sid. 387; 2 Keb. 432; 1 Hawk. c. 41, s. 10, tit. "Seduction."

OF GIRL UNDER EIGHTEEN YEARS OF AGE, WITH INTENT THAT SHE SHOULD BE CARNALLY KNOWN.

Statute.

48 & 49 Vict c. 69 (Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885), s. 7—Abduction of a girl under eighteen with intent that she should be carnally known.]—Any person who—with intent that any unmarried girl under the age of eighteen years should be unlawfully and carnally known by any man, whether such carnal knowledge is intended to be with any particular man, or generally—takes or causes to be taken such girl out of the possession and against the will of her father or mother, or any other person having the lawful care or charge of her, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable at the discretion of the court to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. Provided that it shall be a sufficient defence to any charge under this section if it shall be made to appear to the court or jury that the person so charged had reasonable cause to believe that the girl was of or above the age of eighteen years.

Sect. 17—Misdemeanors under this Act to be within Vexatious Indictments Act—Indictment under this Act not triable at quarter sessions.]—Every misdemeanor under this Act shall, in England and Ireland, be deemed to be an offence within, and subject to, the provisions of the Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 17), and any Act amending the same (see ante, p. 7), and no indictment under the provisions of this Act shall in England be tried by any court of quarter sessions. (See ante, p. 126.)

Sect. 18—Costs of Prosecutions.]—The court before which any misdemeanor indictable under this Act, or any case of indecent assault, shall be prosecuted or tried may allow the costs of the prosecution, in the same manner as in cases of felony (see ante, p. 246), and may in like manner, on conviction, order payment of such costs by the person convicted; and every order for the allowance or payment of such costs shall be made out, and the sum of money mentioned therein paid and repaid upon the same terms and in the same manner in all respects as in cases of felony. (See ante, p. 261.)

Sect. 20—Evidence of accused and husband or wife of accused.]—See post, p. 906.

61 & 62 Vict. c. 36 (Criminal Evidence Act, 1898), ss. 1, 4 sched.—Evidence of accused and husband and wife of accused.]—See ante, pp. 392–398.

Indictment under 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 7. (Ante, p. 902.)

An indictment for this offence can be framed from the precedent on p. 899, by altering the age of the girl and adding "with intent that she the said A. B. should be unlawfully and carnally known * by a certain man, to wit, by E. F." * If there is evidence which it may be inferred that the carnal knowledge was intended to be "generally" (sic in statute), substitute "generally" for the words between the asterisks.

Misdemeanor: punishable by imprisonment for not more than two years with or without hard labour. 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 7.

Evidence.

For the evidence necessary to support this indictment, see ante, p. 899, mutatis mutandis.

In order to support an indictment under this section it is necessary to prove that the girl was taken out of the possession of her father or mother or other person having lawful care or charge of her, against the will of such person, and for this purpose the parent or guardian must be called (R. v. Nash, Times, July 2, 1903, Wright, J.), or that she left her father, etc., in consequence of some persuasion, inducement or blandishment held out to her by the defendant. R. v. Henkers, 16 Cox, 257, Common Serjeant, after consulting Wills, J., following R. v. Olifier, 10 Cox, 402 (ante, p. 900). Where the girl has left her home without any inducement from the defendant, he is not guilty of abduction, even though it be proved that before she so left he had taken her about to places of entertainment, and had had connection with her. R. v. Kauffman, 68 J. P. Rep. 189, Bosanquet, Common Serjeant; and cf. R. v. Mackney, 29 Victoria L. R. 22, where the English cases are considered. Whether the girl was in possession of her father is a question for the jury. R. v. Mace, 50 J. P. 776. Upon an indictment under this section for taking a girl out of the possession of her father, the proof was that at the time of the commission of the alleged offence she was employed by another person as barmaid at a distance from her father's home. It was held that she was under the lawful charge of her employer and not in the possession of her father, and that therefore the defendant could not be convicted of the offence with which he was charged. R. v. Henkers, ubi supra.

It is a defence if the prisoner, at the time of taking the girl from lawful custody, had reasonable cause to believe that she was eighteen, though he did not inquire till after the taking. R. v. Packer, 16 Cox, 57, Pollock, B.

STEALING CHILDREN UNDER THE AGE OF FOURTEEN YEARS.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100 (Offences against the Person Act, 1861), s. 56.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully, either by force or fraud, lead or take away, or decoy or entice away, or detain, any child under the age of fourteen years, with intent to deprive any parent, guardian, or other person having the lawful care or charge of such child, of the possession of such child, or with intent to steal any article upon or about the person of such child, to whomsoever such article may belong; and whosoever shall, with any such intent, receive or harbour any such child, knowing the same to have been by force or fraud led, taken, decoyed, enticed away, or detained, as in this section before mentioned, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding seven years, . . . or to be imprisoned, . . . and, if a male under sixteen years of age, with or without whipping: Provided that no person who shall have claimed any right to the possession of such child, or shall be the mother or shall have claimed to be the father of an illegitimate child, shall be liable to be prosecuted by virtue hereof, on account of the getting possession of such child, or taking such child out of the possession of any person having the lawful charge thereof. [This section re-enacts 9 G. 4, c. 31, s. 21, with increase in the age from ten to fourteen and inserting "guardian."]

4 Edw. 7, c. 15 (Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904), ss. 12–18, sched. 1.—Procedure and evidence.]—See ante, pp. 882, 885, 887.

Commencement as ante, p. 839]—feloniously and unlawfully did by force ("force or fraud") lead and take away ("lead or take away, or decoy or entice away, or detain") one A. N., the said A. N. then being a child under the age of fourteen years, to wit, of the age of seven years, with intent thereby then to deprive one J. N., the father ("any parent, guardian, or other person having the lawful care or charge of such child") of such child, of the possession of the said child; against the form [as ante, p. 840]. (2nd Count.)—And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present, that the said J. S. afterwards, to wit, on the day and year aforesaid, feloniously and unlawfully did, by force, lead and take away the said A. N., the said A. N. then being a child under the age of fourteen years, to wit, of the age of seven years, with intent thereby then feloniously to steal, take, and carry away divers articles ("any article upon or about the person of such child, to whomsoever such article may belong"); that is to say, one necklace [etc., stating the articles], then being upon and about the person of the said child; against the form [as ante, p. 840]. Add counts stating that the defendant did "by fraud entice away," or "did by fraud detain," or "did by force detain," etc., if necessary. If the offence is continuous, e.g. in the case of "detaining," the dates of the acts constituting it need not be specified. 4 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 18 (4), and sched. 1 (ante, pp. 885, 887). In such a case the averment should be "on the —— day of ——, and on divers other days thereafter between that day and the —— day of ——."

Felony: penal servitude not exceeding seven years and not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and, if a male under sixteen years of age, with or without whipping. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 56; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the defendant to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 71 (ante, p. 778).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant took and enticed the child away: that the child was under the age of fourteen years; as to presumption of age, see 4 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 17, sched. 1 (ante, p. 884). As to unsworn evidence by child of tender years and mode of taking evidence of children, see 4 Edw. 7, c. 15, ss. 15, 16 (ante, pp. 883, 884); and prove the intent from circumstances from which the jury may infer it. Proof that J. N. was the father of the child will prove the intent stated in the the first count, because the natural consequence of taking the child must be to deprive the father of its possession. The defendant may prove that he claimed to have a right to the possession of the child, for such persons are specially exempted from the operation of this section of the Act. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 56. The prisoner being indicted under this section for that she did feloniously and unlawfully, by fraud, detain a child, under the age of fourteen, with intent to deprive the mother of the possession of her, it was held that she was rightly convicted upon evidence that the child had been in the service of the prisoner, and was missing and could not be discovered; and that she gave different accounts of what had become of the child, but implying that she had given her up to some third person, although there was no evidence that the child was still in her actual custody, nor indeed, any evidence where she was. R. v. Johnson, 15 Cox, 481 (C. C. R.). An indictment under this section is supported by evidence of force or fraud exercised upon the guardian of the child, or upon the child so taken or detained, or any other person. R. v. Bellis, 62 L. J. (M. C.). 155 (C. C. R.), overruling R. v. Barrett, 15 Cox, 658. As to evidence by the defendant, see s. 1 of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (ante, pp. 392, 393). As to evidence by the husband or wife of the defendant, see s. 4 of that Act (ante, p. 396) and 4 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 12 (ante, p. 882).

Sect. 7.—Rape, etc.

Ravishing Women.

Common Law.

Rape is the unlawful carnal knowledge of a woman by force and against her will. 1 East, P. C. 434. It was anciently a felony at common law, and after being made a misdemeanor by 3 Edw. 1, c. 13, it was again made felony by 13 Edw. 1, st. 1, c. 34, and punishable with death without benefit of clergy. 18 Eliz. c. 7; and see 1 Hale, 627, et seq.

Statutes.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100 (Offences against the Person Act, 1861), s. 48.]—Whosoever shall be convicted of the crime of rape shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for life. . . . [This section re-enacts 9 G. 4, c. 31, s. 16.]

Sect. 63—Carnal knowledge defined.]—Whenever, upon the trial for any offence punishable under this Act, it may be necessary to prove carnal knowledge, it shall not be necessary to prove the actual emission of seed in order to constitute a carnal knowledge, but the carnal knowledge shall be deemed complete upon proof of penetration only. [Irrespective of this statute, the law remains the same as it has since 9 G. 4, c. 31, namely, that where carnal knowledge constitutes a crime, that crime is complete without emission, upon proof of penetration. R. v. Marsden [1891] 2 Q. B. 149; 60 L. J. (M. C.) 171. As to earlier law, see 1 East, P. C. 436–440.]

48 & 49 Vict. c. 69 (Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885), s. 4 (last paragraph).]—Whereas doubts have been entertained whether a man who induces a married woman to permit him to have connection with her by personating her husband is or is not guilty of rape, it is hereby enacted and declared that every such offender shall be guilty of rape. [This gets rid of the decision in R. v. Barrow, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 156; 38 L. J. (M. C.) 20, which was rejected in Ireland. R. v. Dee, 14 L. R. Ir. 468; 15 Cox, 579.]

Sect. 5, sub-s. 2—Carnally knowing imbecile women under circumstances not amounting to rape.]—Any person who . . . (2) unlawfully and carnally knows, or attempts to have unlawful carnal knowledge of any female idiot or imbecile woman or girl, under circumstances which do not amount to rape, but which prove that the offender knew at the time of the commission of the offence that the woman or girl was an idiot or imbecile, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable at the discretion of the court to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. . . .

53 & 54 Vict. c. 5 (Lunacy Act, 1890), s. 324—Abuse of female lunatics.]—If any manager, officer, nurse, attendant, or other person employed in any institution for lunatics (including an asylum for criminal lunatics), or workhouse, or any person having the care or charge of any single patient, carnally knows or attempts to have carnal knowledge of any female under care or treatment as a lunatic in the institution or workhouse, or as a single patient, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction or indictment shall be liable to be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding two years, and no consent or alleged consent of such female thereto shall be any defence to any indictment or prosecution for such offence.

Sect. 325, sub-s. (2)—Prosecution only by consent of Attorney-General or order of Commissioners of Lunacy, or visitors.

48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 9—Power, on indictment for rape or for felony under s. 4 of Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, to convict of certain misdemeanors.]—If upon the trial of any indictment for rape, or any offence made felony by section four of this Act [post, p. 912], the jury shall be satisfied that the defendant is guilty of an offence under sections three [post, p. 920], four [post, p. 912], or five [supra, and post, p. 913], of this Act, or of an indecent assault, but are not satisfied that the defendant is guilty of the felony charged in such indictment, or of an attempt to commit the same [see ante, p. 219], then and in every such case the jury may acquit the defendant of such felony, and find him guilty of such offence as aforesaid, or of an indecent assault, and thereupon such defendant shall be liable to be punished in the same manner as if he had been convicted upon an indictment for such offence as aforesaid, or for the misdemeanor of indecent assault.

Sect. 20—Persons charged and husband or wife of person charged to be competent but not compellable witnesses.]—Every person charged with an offence under this Act or under section forty-eight and sections fifty-two to fifty-five, both inclusive, of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861

(24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), and the husband or wife of the person so charged shall be competent but not compellable witnesses on every hearing at every stage of such charge, except an inquiry before a grand jury. [It is submitted that 61 & 62 Vict. c. 36, s. 4 (ante, p. 396), has not the effect of making either the husband or the wife of the accused compellable witnesses.]

61 & 62 Vict. c. 36 (Criminal Evidence Act, 1898), ss. 1, 4, sched.]—See ante, pp. 392–398.

Indictment for Rape. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 48, ante, p. 905.)

Central Criminal Court, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present, that J. S., on the first day of June, in the year of our Lord ——, at the parish of A., in the county of L., and within the jurisdiction of the said court, in and upon one A. N. violently and feloniously did make an assault, and her the said A. N. then violently and against her will feloniously did ravish and carnally know; against the form [as ante, p. 840]. The offence is a felony at common law, but the punishment is statutory. An indictment is good which charges that A. committed a rape, and that B. was present aiding and abetting him in the commission of the felony; for the party aiding may be charged either as, as he was in law, a principal in the first degree, or, as he was in fact, a principal in the second degree. R. v. Crisham, C. & Mar. 187. A general conviction of a defendant charged both as principal in the first degree, and as an aider and abettor of other men in rape, is valid on the count charging him as principal. And on such an indictment, evidence may be given of several rapes on the same woman, at the same time, by the defendant and other men, each assisting the other in turn, without putting the prosecutor to elect on which count to proceed. R. v. Folkes, 1 Mood. C. C. 354: R. v. Gray, 7 C. & P. 164. The words "make an assault" are not essential, as an assault is included in the word rape. R. v. Allen, 2 Mood. C. C. 179.

The omission of the "carnaliter cognovit" makes the indictment bad on demurrer, but it seems, not after verdict. R. v. Warren, 3 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 230. 7 G. 4, c. 64, s. 21 (ante, p. 165).

As to the conviction of the defendant upon this indictment of other offences than that charged against him in the indictment, see 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 9 (ante, p. 906).

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 48; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 71 (ante, p. 778).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

That J. S.]—If it be proved that the defendant is under the age of fourteen years, he must be acquitted, whatever may be the nature of the evidence against him; for a boy under the age of fourteen years is presumed by law incapable of being a principal in the first degree in rape; 1 Hale, 630; and this presumption was not affected by 9 G. 4, c. 31, s. 18 (rep.), of which 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 63, is a re-enactment. R. v. Groombridge, 7 C. & P. 582. Nor is evidence admissible against him, to show that in fact he has attained the full state of puberty, and was capable of committing the crime. R. v. Philips, 8 C. & P. 736: R. v. Jordan, 9 C. & P. 118. But in R. v. Brimilow, 2 Mood. C. C. 122; 9 C. & P. 366, a boy under fourteen indicted for rape was held properly convicted of assault under 1 Vict. c. 85, s. 11 (rep.). Quære, however, whether he might not be convicted on this indictment of an indecent assault, under 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 9 (ante, p. 906). A woman may be convicted as principal in the second degree in rape. R. v. Ram, 17 Cox, 609, 610, n., Bowen, L.J. A husband cannot be guilty of a rape upon his wife. 1 Hale, 629: but see R. v. Clarence, 22 Q. B. D. 23, Hawkins, J. But both a husband and a boy under fourteen may be principals in the second degree, and be punished for being present aiding and abetting. 1 Hale, 630. See R. v. Eldershaw, 3 C. & P. 396: R. v. Waite [1892] 2 Q. B. 600: R. v. Williams [1893] 1 Q. B. 320. Under 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 20 (ante, p. 906), the defendant and his wife, and, in the case of a female accessory, her husband, were competent but not compellable witnesses on the trial of the indictment, but not before the grand jury. This enactment appears to be superseded as to the defendant by 61 & 62 Vict. c. 36, s. 1 (ante, p. 892), and the husband or wife of the defendant appears now to be a competent witness for prosecution or defence without the consent of the defendant, but not to be a compellable witness. 61 & 62 Vict. c. 36, s. 4 (ante, p. 896).

The said A. N. violently and against her will.]—It must be proved that the rape was committed on A. N. by force and without her consent. If, however, she yielded through fear of death or duress, it is rape. 1 Hawk. c. 41, s. 6: R. v. Jones, 4 L. T. (O. S.) 154: cf. R. v. Hallett, 9 C. & P. 748: R. v. Rudland, 4 F. & F. 495. See ante, p. 30. If the connection took place when she was in a state of insensibility from liquor, having been made drunk by the prisoner (though the liquor was given only for the purpose of exciting her), it is a rape. R. v. Camplin, 1 Den. 89; 1 C. & K. 746; 1 Cox, 220. So, also, if a man gets into bed with a woman while she is asleep, and he knows she is asleep, and he has connection with her while in that state, he is guilty of rape. R. v. Mayers, 12 Cox, 311: R. v. Young, 14 Cox, 114, Lush, J. It is no excuse that the woman consented at first, if the offence was afterwards committed by force or against her will; nor is it any excuse that she consented after the fact. 1 Hawk. c. 41, s. 7. Even that the woman was a common strumpet, or the concubine of the ravisher, is no excuse; Id.; 1 Hale, 628, 629; although such circumstances should certainly operate strongly with the jury as to the probability of the fact that connection was had with the woman against her consent. An indictment for rape will lie against one who ravishes a girl of or above the age of thirteen years and under the age of sixteen years, although 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 5, sub-s. 1 (post, p. 913), makes the mere unlawful carnal knowledge of such a girl a misdemeanor. Under 38 & 39 Vict. c. 94, s. 4 (rep.), which enacted that whosoever should unlawfully and carnally know and abuse any girl being above the age of twelve and under the age of thirteen years, whether with or without her consent, should be guilty of a misdemeanor, it was held that an indictment for rape would still lie against one who ravished a girl between the age of twelve and thirteen. R. v. Ratcliffe, 10 Q. B. D. 74; 52 L. J. (M. C.) 40. The words "without her consent," which alone gave rise to the doubt in that case, are not contained in 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 5.

Connection with women of weak intellect.]—If the connection was with a woman of weak intellect, incapable of distinguishing right from wrong, and the jury found that she was incapable of giving consent, or of exercising any judgment upon the matter, and that (though she made no resistance) the defendant had carnal knowledge of her by force, and without her consent, that is a rape. R. v. Fletcher [1859] Bell, 63; 28 L. J. (M. C.) 85; 8 Cox, 131; see R. v. Ryan, 2 Cox, 115. It was, however, afterwards held that the mere fact of connection with an idiot girl who was capable of recognizing and describing the prisoner, and who was a fully developed woman, who, notwithstanding her imbecile condition, might have strong animal instincts, is not sufficient evidence of rape to be left to a jury. R. v. Fletcher [1866] L. R. 1 C. C. R. 39; 35 L. J. (M. C.) 172; 10 Cox, 248. These two cases agree on the principle, and only differ as to the amount of evidence of consent adduced. The prisoner was convicted of attempting to rape a girl of fourteen years of age, who had been blind from six weeks old, and wrong in her mind, hardly capable of understanding anything that was said to her, but could go up and down stairs by herself. She passively obeyed all directions given to her, but was obliged to be dressed and undressed. She was unable to do any work. There were no marks of violence on her person, but the surgeon thought that there had been recent connection, and that she had been in the habit of having connection. She was unable to give evidence in court. The prisoner had known the girl and her family for upwards of two years. It was held that there was sufficient evidence of the girl's incapacity to consent to support the finding of the jury that the prisoner attempted to have connection with her without her consent, and the conviction was affirmed. R. v. Barratt, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 81; 43 L. J. (M. C.) 7; 12 Cox, 498. Where the prosecutrix, an apparent idiot, proved that the prisoner had had connection with her, but it appeared from her examination that although she knew he was doing wrong, she made no resistance, and the prisoner on being apprehended and charged with committing rape upon the prosecutrix "against her will," said "Yes, I did; and I am very sorry for it," it was held that there was evidence to go to the jury of a rape. R. v. Pressy, 10 Cox, 635, C. C. R. And now, by 48 & 49 Vict s. 5, sub-s. 2 ante, p. 906), connection, or an attempt to have connection, with "any female idiot or imbecile woman or girl, under circumstances which do not amount to rape, but which prove that the offender knew at the time of the commission of the offence that this woman or girl was an idiot or imbecile," is a misdemeanor punishable with two years' imprisonment.

Connection by personating husband.]—It is rape for a man to have carnal knowledge of a woman by a fraud which induces her to suppose he is her husband. 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 4 (ante, p. 906). This enactment gets rid of decisions to the contrary in R. v. Barrow, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 156; 38 L. J. (M. C.) 20; 11 Cox, 191: R. v. Clarke, Dears. 397; 24 L. J. (M. C.) 25; 6 Cox, 412, and see 413, n.: R. v. Sweenie, 8 Cox, 223 (Sc.). R. v. Barrow had been disapproved by some English judges in R. v. Flattery, 2 Q. B. D. 410; 46 L. J. (M. C.) 630; and by the Irish judges in R. v. Dee, 15 Cox, 579; 14 L. R. (Ir.) 468. Though not rape before 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 4, the offence seems to have been an assault; R. v. Williams, 8 C. & P. 286: R. v. Saunders, 8 C. & P. 265; and if the woman was asleep the offence was always held rape (ante, p. 908).

Connection by false pretences.]—Where a medical man had connection with a girl of fourteen years of age, under the pretence that he was thereby treating her medically for the complaint for which he was attending her, and she made no resistance, owing solely to the bonâ fide belief that such was the case, this was held to be certainly an assault, and, it was suggested, a rape. R. v. Case, 1 Den. 580; 19 L. J. (M. C.) 174; 4 Cox, 220. Where the prosecutrix, a girl of nineteen, consulted the prisoner, a quack doctor, with respect to illness from which she suffered, and he advised a surgical operation, and under pretence of performing it, had connection with her, she submitting to what was done, not with any intention that he should have connection with her, but under the belief that he was merely performing a surgical operation, that belief being wilfully and fraudulently induced by the prisoner, it was held that the prisoner was guilty of rape. R. v. Flattery, 2 Q. B. D. 410; 46 L. J. (M. C.) 130; 13 Cox, 388. By 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 3 (2), any person who by false pretences or false representations procures any woman or girl, not being a common prostitute or of known immoral character, to have any unlawful carnal connection . . . shall be guilty of a misdemeanor; and it has been held (R. v. O'Shay, 19 Cox, 76, Ridley, J.; cf. Steph. Dig. Cr. L. (6th ed.) p. 207) that the effect of this section is to render R. v. Flattery, ubi supra, no longer law. But in the later case the attention of the judge does not seem to have been called to 48 & 49 Vict. c. 59, s. 16, which enacts that "this Act shall not exempt any person from any proceeding for an offence which is punishable at common law or under any Act of Parliament other than this Act, so that a person be not punished twice for the same offence" (and see ante, p. 170).

The party ravished is a competent witness to prove this and every other part of the case. Corroboration of her testimony is not in law essential; see 3 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 232; but is in practice required. (a) For instance, if the witness be of good fame; if she presently discovered the offence, and made search for the offender; if the party accused fled for it; these and the like are concurring circumstances which give greater probability to her evidence. But, on the other hand, if she be of evil fame, and stand unsupported by the testimony of others; if she concealed the injury for any considerable time after she had opportunity to complain; if the place where the fact was alleged to have been committed were such that it was possible she might have been heard, and she made no outcry; these and the like circumstances carry a strong but not conclusive presumption that her testimony is false or feigned. 4 Bl. Com. 213. And the defendant may give evidence of the woman's notoriously bad character for want of chastity or common decency, or that she is a common prostitute, per Stephen, J., in R. v. Riley, infra; or that she had before been connected with the prisoner himself; R. v. Riley, 18 Q. B. D. 481; 56 L. J. (M. C.) 52; but he cannot give evidence of any other particular facts to impeach her chastity. R. v. Hodgson, R. & R. 211: R. v. Clarke, 2 Stark. (N. P.) 241: R. v. Barker, 3 C. & P. 589: R. v. Martin, 6 C. & P. 562. The prosecutrix may on cross-examination be asked whether she has had connection with men, named to her, other than the prisoner, but she may decline to answer the question. R. v. Cockcroft, 11 Cox, 410, Willes, J. Whether she can so decline, however, seems doubtful. See Cundell v. Pratt, and other cases cited ante, p. 404. If, on cross-examination, she deny having had intercourse with men, named to her, other than the prisoner, those men cannot be called to contradict her, and the cross-examining party is bound by her answer. R. v. Holmes, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 334; 41 L. J. (M. C.) 12: R. v. Cockcroft, 11 Cox, 410: R. v. Hodgson, R. & R. 211. A ruling to the contrary in R. v. Robins, 2 M. & Rob. 512, was noticed and overruled in R. v. Holmes, ubi supra. If the prosecutrix is cross-examined with a view to show that she consented or was of unchaste life, it would seem that under 61 & 62 Vict. c. 36, s. 1 (f) (ante, p. 895), the prisoner, if called, may be cross-examined as to previous convictions. See R. v. Fisher, 34 L. J. Newsp. 100; Jelf on Criminal Evidence, p. 70, and ante, p. 395.

In the case of rape or kindred offences against women or girls, the fact that a complaint was made by the prosecutrix shortly after the alleged offence, and the particulars of such complaint, may be given in evidence so far as they relate to the prisoner, not as evidence of the facts complained of, but as evidence of the consistency of the conduct of the prosecutrix with her evidence, given at the trial. R. v. Lillyman [1896] 2 Q. B. 167 (C. C. R.), where the prior rulings were considered; and it was held that the prevalent practice had been wrong in limiting the questions to whether the prosecutrix made a complaint or mentioned a name. As to the present state of the law on this subject, see ante, p. 319, and R. v. Osborne, 21 T. L. R. 288 (20 Feb., 1905, C. C. R.).

Did ravish and carnally know.]—To constitute the offence of rape, there must be a penetration. R. v. Hill, 1 East, P. C. 439. But any, the slightest, penetration will be sufficient. Where a penetration was proved, but not of such a depth as to injure the hymen, still it was held to be sufficient to constitute the crime of rape. R. v. Russen, 1 East, P. C. 438, 439: see R. v. M'Rue, 8 C. & P. 641: R. v. Allen, 9 C. & P. 31. Proof of the rupture of the hymen is unnecessary. R. v. Hughes, 2 Mood. C. C. 190; 9 C. & P. 752: and see R. v. Lines, 1 C. & K. 393, overruling R. v. Gammon, 5 C. & P. 321.

Until the passing of 9 G. 4, c. 31, s. 18 (re-enacted in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 63, ante, p. 905), it was also necessary to prove emission, which might be proved either positively, by the evidence of the woman that she felt it; or it might be presumed from circumstances, as, for instance, that the defendant, after having connection with the prosecutrix, arose from her voluntarily, without being interrupted in the act. R. v. Harmwood, 1 East, P. C. 440: R. v. Sheridan, Id. 438: R. v. Burrows, R. & R. 519. It is under the statutes cited now unnecessary to prove the actual emission of seed, in order to constitute a carnal knowledge; carnal knowledge is deemed complete upon proof of penetration only. See R. v. Marsden [1891] 2 Q. B. 149; 60 L. J. (M. C.) 171; 17 Cox, 297. And it has been held that even though the jury negative the emission, or the circumstances be proved to have been such that no emission did or could take place, the offence is complete if the penetration be proved. R. v. Jennings, 4 C. & P. 249; 1 Lewin, 93: R. v. Cox, 1 Mood. C. C. 337; 5 C. & P. 297: R. v. Allen, 9 C. & P. 31.

If actual penetration be not proved, the defendant may, nevertheless, on this indictment, be convicted of an attempt to commit a rape. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 9 (ante, p. 219). As to the evidence necessary to prove the attempt, see R. v. Lloyd, 7 C. & P. 318: R. v. Wright, 4 F. & F. 967. And where an indictment charged H. with rape, and W. as an aider and abettor, and the jury found H. guilty of attempting to commit a rape and W. of aiding H. in the attempt, and it was contended that this finding amounted to an acquittal of W., as the case was not within 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 9, the objection was overruled and the conviction of W. for misdemeanor was affirmed. R. v. Haywood L. R. 1 C. C. R. 221: R. v. Wyatt, 39 L. J. (M. C.) 88, S. C. A boy under fourteen cannot be convicted of an assault with intent to commit a rape. R. v. Eldershaw, 3 C. & P. 396: R. v. Waite [1892] 2 Q. B. 600: R. v. Williams [1893] 1 Q. B. 320; 62 L. J. (M. C.) 29. An acquittal upon an indictment for rape, or for assault with intent to commit rape, is no bar to a subsequent indictment on the same facts for a common assault. R. v. Dungey, 4 F. & F. 99. And if upon the trial of an indictment for rape, the jury are satisfied that the defendant is guilty of an offence under ss. 3 (post, p. 920), 4 (infra), or 5 (ante, p. 906, and post, p. 913) of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, or of an indecent assault, but are not satisfied that the defendant is guilty of rape, or of an attempt to commit the same, the jury may acquit the defendant of the rape, and find him guilty of such offence as aforesaid, or of an indecent assault, and thereupon such defendant shall be liable to be punished in the same manner as if he had been convicted upon an indictment for such offence as aforesaid, or for an indecent assault. 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 9 (ante, p. 906). As to whether on acquittal for rape the defendant can be prosecuted for assault with intent to commit rape, see R. v. Gisson, 2 C. & K. 781.

CARNAL KNOWLEDGE OF GIRLS UNDER THIRTEEN, AND GIRLS OF OR OVER THIRTEEN AND UNDER SIXTEEN YEARS OF AGE.

Statute.

48 & 49 Vict. c. 69 (Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885), s. 4—Defilement of girl under thirteen years of age.]—Any person who unlawfully and carnally knows any girl under the age of thirteen years shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for life. . . .

Any person who attempts to have unlawful carnal knowledge of any girl under the age of thirteen years shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable at the discretion of the court to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. [This clause gets rid of the decision in R. v. Cockburn, 3 Cox, 543 (see post, p. 915).]

Whipping.]—Provided that in the case of an offender whose age does not exceed sixteen years, the court may, instead of sentencing him to any term of imprisonment, order him to be whipped, as prescribed by the Whipping Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 18), and the said Act shall apply, so far as circumstances admit, as if the offender had been convicted in manner in that Act mentioned; and if, having regard to his age and all the circumstances of the case, it should appear expedient, the court may, in addition to the sentence of whipping, order him to be sent to a certified reformatory school, and to be there detained for a period of not less than two years and not more than five years.

The court may also order the offender to be detained in custody for a period of not more than seven days before he is sent to such reformatory school. [See ante, p. 242.]

Unsworn evidence.]—Where, upon the hearing of a charge under this section, the girl in respect of whom the offence is charged to have been committed, or any other child of tender years who is tendered as a witness, does not, in the opinion of the court or justices, understand the nature of an oath, the evidence of such girl or other child of tender years may be received, though not given upon oath, if, in the opinion of the court or justices, as the case may be, such girl or other child of tender years is possessed of sufficient intelligence to justify the reception of the evidence, and understands the duty of speaking the truth. [See ante, p. 388.]

Corroboration.]—Provided that no person shall be liable to be convicted of the offence unless the testimony admitted by virtue of this section and given on behalf of the prosecution shall be corroborated by some other material evidence in support thereof implicating the accused: Provided also, that any witness whose evidence has been admitted under this section shall be liable to indictment and punishment for perjury in all respects as if he or she had been sworn. [For rest of section, see ante, p. 906; and cf. 4 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 15, ante, p. 883. Refusal by the prisoner to be medically examined is not corroboration within this section. R. v. Gray, 68 J. P. Rep. 327.]

Sect. 5, sub-s. 1—Defilement of girl between thirteen and sixteen years of age—Defence—Limitation of prosecution.]—Any person who unlawfully and carnally knows or attempts to have unlawful carnal knowledge of any girl being of or above the age of thirteen years and under the age of sixteen years: shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable at the discretion of the court to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. [Sub-s. 2 is printed ante, p. 906].

Provided that it shall be a sufficient defence to any charge under sub-section one of this section if it shall be made to appear to the court or jury before whom the charge shall be brought that the person so charged had reasonable cause to believe that the girl was of or above the age of sixteen years.

Provided also, that no prosecution shall be commenced for an offence under sub-section one of this section more than three (now "six," vide infra) months (altered from "three months" by 4 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 27, infra) after the commission of the offence. [As to limitation and what is commencement of prosecution under sub-s. 1, see R. v. West [1898] 1 Q. B. 174; 18 Cox, 675 (ante, p. 96): R. v. Beighton, 18 Cox, 535. For indictment, see post, p. 917.]

4 Edw. 7, c. 15 (Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904), s. 27—Amendment of second proviso to 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 5, supra.]—The limit of time mentioned in the second proviso of s. 5 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, shall be six months after the commission of the offence. [The question whether the extended time for prosecution given by this section applies to offences committed within three months before October 1, 1904 (when the section came into force), has been reserved for the consideration of the C. C. R. in R. v. Chandra Dharma, 69 J. P. Rep. 39, and in R. v. Court, Kent Assizes, February, 1905, by Channell, J.]

48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 6—Owner, occupier, etc., of premises permitting defilement of girls under thirteen, and between thirteen and sixteen years of age on his premises—Defence.]—Any person who, being the owner or occupier of any premises, or having, or acting or assisting in, the management or control thereof, induces or knowingly suffers any girl of such age as is in this section mentioned to resort to or be in or upon such premises for the purpose of being unlawfully and carnally known by any man, whether such carnal knowledge is intended to be with any particular man or generally, (1) shall, if such girl is under the age of thirteen years, be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for life. . . . [For minimum term of penal servitude and alternative punishment, see 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, ante, p. 235]; and (2) if such girl is of or above the age of thirteen and under the age of sixteen years, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable at the discretion of the court to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.

Provided that it shall be a sufficient defence to any charge under this section if it shall be made to appear to the court or jury before whom the charge shall be brought that the person so charged had reasonable cause to believe that the girl was of or above the age of sixteen years.

[The prisoner was convicted under the above section (6), of knowingly suffering a girl under sixteen to be on premises for the purpose mentioned in that section. The girl was the prisoner's daughter, and the premises were her home where she resided with the prisoner. It was held that the conviction was good. R. v. Webster, 16 Q. B. D. 134; 55 L. J. (M. C.) 63; 15 Cox, 775. But see R. v. Merthyr Tydfil Justices, 10 Rep. 189; 10 *T. L. Indictment for carnally knowing a Girl under Thirteen Years.

Central Criminal Court, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present that J. S., on the first day of June, in the year of our Lord ——, in the parish of —— and within the jurisdiction of the said court, one A. N., a girl under the age of thirteen years, to wit, of the age of eleven years, feloniously did unlawfully and carnally know; against the form [as ante, p. 940]. The insertion of the words "in and upon —— did make an assault, and he the said A. N. then feloniously," etc. (Arch.

Cr. Pl. (21st ed.) p. 825), would not enable the jury to find the defendant guilty of a common assault. R. v. Catherall, 13 Cox, 109. They are therefore omitted from later editions.

By s. 9 of 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69 (ante, p. 906), the defendant may on this indictment be convicted of an indecent assault or of a misdemeanor under ss. 3, 4, or 5 of the Act.

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years. 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 4; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1 (ante, p. 235). As to the sentence in the case of an offender whose age does not exceed sixteen years, see 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 4 (ante, p. 912).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126); 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 17 (ante, p. 902).

Evidence.

The evidence is the same as in rape, with this exception, that it is immaterial whether the act was done with or without the consent of the female. If it was in fact without her consent, an indictment for rape will lie, notwithstanding the age of the child. R. v. Dicken, 14 Cox, 8, Mellor, J. So, where the prisoner was indicted for an attempt to commit the felony, and the evidence was that he had attempted to have carnal knowledge of the girl, but that she had consented to the attempt, it was held that the fact of her consent was immaterial, and that the prisoner was properly convicted. R. v. Beale, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 10; 35 L. J. (M. C.) 60; 10 Cox, 157. In order to prove carnal knowledge under s. 4, it is not necessary to prove emission. R. v. Marsden [1891] 2 Q. B. 149; 60 L. J. (M. C.) 171; 17 Cox, 297. As to the admissibility of statements made by the girl immediately after the commission of the alleged offence, see R. v. Lillyman (ante, p. 319): R. v. Osborne, 21 T. L. R. 288 (C. C. R.) (post, p. 919).

Upon the trial of an indictment charging a felony under s. 4, the prisoner cannot be found guilty of a misdemeanor except by statute; a prisoner, therefore, who is indicted for a felony under s. 4 of 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69 cannot be convicted of a common assault merely, notwithstanding the provisions of s. 9 of that Act (ante, p. 906), whereby it is enacted that if on the trial of an indictment under s. 4 the jury are satisfied that the defendant is guilty of an offence under ss. 3, 4, or 5 of that Act, or of an indecent assault, but are not satisfied that the defendant is guilty of the felony charged in the indictment or of an attempt to commit the same, the jury may acquit the defendant of the felony, and find him guilty of such offence as aforesaid, or of an indecent assault. See R. v. Catherall, 13 Cox, 109, Amphlett, B. (decided before 1885).

Evidence of children of tender years.]—Where upon the hearing of the charge, the girl in respect of whom the offence is charged to have been committed, or any other child of tender years who is tendered as a witness, does not, in the opinion of the court, understand the nature of an oath, the evidence of such girl or other child of tender years may be received, though not given upon oath, if, in the opinion of the court, such girl or other child of tender years is possessed of sufficient intelligence to justify the reception of the evidence, and understands the duty of speaking the truth, subject however to this important proviso, that no person shall be liable to be convicted of the offence unless the testimony admitted by virtue of this section, and given on behalf of the prosecution, shall be corroborated by some other material evidence in support thereof, implicating the accused. 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 4 (ante, pp. 912, 913). It is not clear whether the reference to offences involving bodily injury to a child under sixteen in 4 Edw. 7, c. 15, sched. 1, apply the procedure and evidence sections of that Act to the offence: see ante, p. 888. Where upon the trial of an indictment under 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 4 (ante, p. 912), for unlawfully and carnally knowing a girl under the age of thirteen years, the defendant was acquitted of that charge, but was convicted of an indecent assault under the provision of s. 9 of that statute, it was held that he was rightly convicted, although the girl had been examined under s. 4 without being sworn, although without her evidence the evidence would have been insufficient to justify a conviction for indecent assault, and although the statute contains no provision rendering unsworn evidence admissible on an indictment for indecent assault. R. v. Wealand, 20 Q. B. D. 827; 57 L. J. (M. C.) 44; 16 Cox, 402. Where an indictment contained two counts, the first of which charged the defendant under 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 4, with attempt to have carnal knowledge of a girl under thirteen, and the second charged an indecent assault under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 52, it was held that the unsworn evidence of the girl, although admissible in support of the first count, was inadmissible on the second count. R. v. Paul, 25 Q. B. D. 202; 59 L. J. (M. C.) 138; 17 Cox, 111. This case is overruled by 4 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 15, and sched. 1 (ante, pp. 883, 887), as to offences under s. 52, against a girl under sixteen. Evidence not upon oath given before the committing magistrate under the provisions of 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 4, and reduced into writing, signed and returned by him with the depositions of the other witnesses in the case, cannot be read against the prisoner on his trial, although the witness may be so ill as not to be able to travel, as the provisions of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 17, only apply to depositions taken upon oath or affirmation. R. v. Prunley, 16 Cox, 344, Cave, J. This decision does not apply to cases within 4 Edw. 7, c. 15, ss. 15, 16 (ante, pp. 883, 884).

Proof of age.]—The girl must be proved to have been under thirteen years of age when the offence was committed. The safer way of doing this is to produce a duly certified copy of the certificate of birth, coupled with evidence of identity; but the age may be proved by any other legal means. See R. v. Cox [1898] 1 Q. B. 179; 18 Cox, 672; and the other cases collected (ante, p. 353). Where the offence was committed on the 5th of February, 1842, and the child's father proved that on his return home, after an absence of a few days, on the 9th day of February, 1832, he found the child had been born, and was told by the grandmother that she had been born the day before, and the register of baptism showed that the child had been baptized on the 9th of February, 1832; this evidence was held not sufficient to prove the age of the child, it being under the then state of the law necessary to prove that the child was under the age of ten years at the time of the alleged offence. R. v. Wedge, 5 C. & P. 298. See R. v. Nicholls, 10 Cox, 476, and R. v. Weaver, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 85; 43 L. J. (M. C.) 13 (post, p. 916). As to evidence by the defendant and his wife, see ante, pp. 392–398.

The presumption of law that a male under the age of fourteen cannot be guilty of the felony of carnal knowledge of a female (ante, pp. 22, 344), is not rebutted by 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 4. R. v. Waite [1892] 2 Q. B. 600; 61 L. J. (M. C.) 187; 17 Cox, 554. But although a boy under fourteen, who is tried on an indictment under s. 4 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, charging him with having had carnal knowledge of a girl under thirteen, is entitled to be acquitted of that offence, he may be convicted of an indecent assault under s. 9 of that Act. R. v. Williams [1893] 1 Q. B. 320; 62 L. J. (M. C.) 29.

Indictment for carnally knowing and abusing a Girl of or above Thirteen and under Sixteen Years. (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 5, sub-s. 1, ante, p. 913.)

Commencement as ante, p. 914]—in and upon one A. N., a girl of [or above] the age of thirteen years and under the age of sixteen years, to wit, of the age of fourteen years and two months, unlawfully did make an assault, and her the said A. N. did then unlawfully and carnally know; against the form [as ante, p. 840]. On this indictment the prisoner can be convicted of common assault. R. v. Bostock, 17 Cox, 700, Charles J.: R. v. Guthrie, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 241 (post, p. 918).

Add a count charging an indecent assault, for the form of which see post, p. 919.

No indictment can be preferred for this offence unless one or other of the preliminary steps required by 22 & 23 Vict. c. 17, as extended by 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, s. 1 (ante, p. 7, et seq.), has been taken. 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 17 (ante, p. 902).

A girl of thirteen and under sixteen cannot be indicted for "abetting" or "inciting" to the commission of this offence on herself. R. v. Tyrrell [1894] 1 Q. B. 710; 63 L. J. (M. C.) 58; 17 Cox, 716 (C. C. R.).

Misdemeanor: imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years. 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 5.

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 17 (ante, p. 902).

Evidence.

The evidence is the same as in rape, with this exception, that it will be no defence that the girl consented. If she did not consent, it will be a rape, and the defendant may be indicted accordingly. R. v. Ratcliffe, 10 Q. B. D. 74; 52 L. J. (M. C.) 40 (ante, p. 908). As to the admissibility of statements made by the girl immediately after the commission of the alleged offence, see R. v. Lillyman (ante, p. 819): R. v. Osborne, 21 T. L. R. 288 (C. C. R.) (post, p. 919). In R. v. Neale, 1 Den. 36; 1 C. & K. 591, on an indictment under 7 G. 4, c. 31, s. 17 (rep.), for carnally knowing a girl over ten and under fourteen, it was held that proof that the girl did not consent did not take the case out of the statute, nor afford any defence to the indictment, though such facts would have justified indictment and conviction for rape. See also 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 12 (ante, p. 218). In order to prove carnal knowledge under s. 5, it is not necessary to prove emission. R. v. Marsden [1891] 2 Q. B. 149; 60 L. J. (M. C.) 171; 17 Cox, 297. The child must be proved to be of or above the age of thirteen years, and under the age of sixteen years. Where the mother of the child stated that she was ten years of age last March, although on cross-examination it appeared that the witness knew neither the year nor the month of the child's birth, and she also gave confused and inconsistent answers as to the ages of her children, it was held that there was evidence to go to the jury of the age of the child. R. v. Nicholls, 10 Cox, 476. The age of the child may be proved by the production of a certified copy of the entry of its birth in the register of births kept under 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 86; R. v. Weaver, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 85; 43 L. J. (M. C.) 13; coupled with identification of the child with that named in the certificate. See ante, p. 353, and R. v. Wedge, 5 C. & P. 298 (ante, p. 916). But this mode of proof does not exclude evidence of age by persons who know the child. R. v. Cox [1898] 1 Q. B. 179; 18 Cox, 672 (C. C. R.). It is a sufficient defence to this charge if it shall be made to appear to the court or jury before whom the charge shall be brought, that the defendant had reasonable cause to believe that the girl was of or above sixteen years of age. 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 5, sub-s. 1 (ante, p. 913). No prosecution can be commenced for this offence more than six months after its commission. 4 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 27, (ante, p. 913); as to what is a commencement of the prosecution, see R. v. West [1898] 1 Q. B. 174, and ante, p. 96. As to evidence by the defendant, see ante, p. 392, et seq. The defendant's wife is a competent witness for the prosecution or the defence, even without his consent, but is not compellable. 4 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 12, and sched. 1 (ante, pp. 882, 887).

On an indictment for either of the offences mentioned in these two sections (4, 5) the defendant may, whether the girl consented or not (R. v. Beale, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 10; 35 L. J. (M. C.) 60; R. v. Ryland, 11 Cox, 101), be convicted of an attempt to commit the felony or misdemeanor charged, if the facts proved warrant such a finding; 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 9 (ante, p. 219); and may have sentence of imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, such sentence being authorized where the girl is under thirteen by 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 4, and where the girl is of or above thirteen and under sixteen, by s. 5 of the same statute. It is said that on an indictment for the statutory misdemeanor under s. 5, sub.-s. 1 (ante, p. 913), the defendant cannot, if the girl's age be proved to be under thirteen years, be convicted; for 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 12 (ante, p. 219), has been held to apply only where an indictment for misdemeanor is proved by facts amounting to a felony. R. v. Shott, 8 C. & K. 206 (ante, p. 93). Sed quære; see 2 Taylor Ev. (9th ed.) 1128.

It would seem that evidence of prior offences outside the six months limit may not be given for the prosecution, but may be obtained by cross-examination. R. v. Beighton, 18 Cox, 535, Pollock, B.: see 61 & 62 Vict. c. 36, s. 1 (f) (ante, p. 895).

If upon the trial of an indictment framed as above under s. 5, the offence of carnally knowing be disproved, the defendant may nevertheless be found guilty of a common assault, if the facts proved warrant such a verdict. R. v. Bostock, 17 Cox, 700, Charles, J.: R. v. Guthrie, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 241; 39 L. J. (M. C.) 95. If, however, the girl is over thirteen and consented, the defendant cannot be found guilty of a common assault. See R. v. Meredith, 8 C. & P. 589, and other cases (ante, p. 834).

Commencement as ante, p. 914]—one A. N. unlawfully and indecently did assault, and her the said A. N. did then beat, wound, and ill-treat [and other wrongs to the said A. N. did], to the great damage of the said A. N.; against the form [as ante, p. 840].

Where the assault is on a girl under thirteen, the fact that she is so should be stated in the indictment, because of 43 & 44 Vict. c. 45, s. 2, supra; and of the provisions as to presuming age in 4 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 17, and sched 1. (ante, pp. 884, 887).

No indictment can be preferred for any indecent assault unless one or other of the preliminary steps required by 22 & 23 Vict. c. 17, s. 1 (as extended by 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, s. 1), has been taken. See ante, p. 7, et seq.

Misdemeanor: imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 52. As to fining the offender and requiring him to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour, Id. s. 71 (ante, p. 778).

Evidence.

Prove an assault, accompanied with circumstances of indecency on the part of the defendant. If the person assaulted is under thirteen, his or her consent is no defence. 43 & 44 Vict. c. 45, s. 2, and note (ante, p. 918). In R. v. Osborne, 21 T. L. R. 288 (C. C. R.), it was held that R. v. Lillyman (ante, p. 319) applied to a charge of indecent assault on a girl under thirteen, although consent is not a material element in such an offence, and that a statement by the girl in answer to a question made immediately after the alleged offence was admissible, if the question was neither leading, suggestive, nor of an intimidating character. This decision overrules R. v. Kingham, 66 J. P. 393, and R. v. Merry, 19 Cox, 442. If the child assaulted is under sixteen, the court may take unsworn evidence from her or any other child witness, subject to corroboration. 4 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 15 (ante, p. 883). As to effect of non-resistance by a girl over thirteen to indecent acts by her schoolmaster, see R. v. McGavaran, 6 Cox, 64. As to proof of the age of the child, see ante p. 353, and 57 & 58 Vict. c. 41, s. 17, and sched. 1 (ante, pp. 884, 887). It has been held that, if on an indictment for an indecent assault it appears that the woman consented to the assault, but that her consent was procured by fraud, e.g. under the pretence of a medical operation, such consent constitutes no defence. R. v. Case, 1 Den. 580; 19 L. J. (M. C.) 174: R. v. Bennett, 4 F. & F. 1105; and see ante, p. 834. Where, on the trial of such an indictment, the prosecutrix denies, on cross-examination, having had intercourse with a third person named to her, such person cannot be called to contradict her upon this answer; R. v. Holmes, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 334; 41 L. J. (M. C.) 12; 12 Cox, 137 (ante, p. 910); but if on cross-examination she denies having had previous intercourse with the prisoner, evidence may be given to contradict her. R. v. Riley, 18 Q. B. D. 481; 56 L. J. (M. C.) 52; 16 Cox, 191. As to evidence by the defendant or the husband or wife of the defendant, see ante, pp. 892–898. 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 20 (ante, p. 906), did not apply to a charge of common assault, but where the defendant being tried on an indictment containing two counts, one for an indecent assault, and another for a common assault, gave evidence on oath in his defence, in which he in effect admitted having committed a common assault, and thereupon was acquitted of the charge of indecent assault, but convicted of the common assault, it was held that his evidence being legally admissible, the conviction was right. R. v. Owen, 20 Q. B. D. 829; 57 L. J. (M. C.) 46. The defendant may be convicted of an indecent assault on an indictment for rape, or for the offence made felony by s. 4 of Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 9, ante, p. 906), although being under fourteen he could not be convicted of the felony charged in the indictment. R. v. Williams [1893] 1 Q. B. 320; 62 L. J. (M. C.) 29.

shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.

Corroboration.]—Provided that no person shall be convicted of any offence under this section upon the evidence of one witness, unless such

(2) by false pretences or false representations procures any woman or girl, not being a common prostitute or of known immoral character, to have any unlawful carnal connection, either within or without the [King's] dominions; or

(3) applies, administers to, or causes to be taken by any woman or girl any drug, matter, or thing, with intent to stupefy or overpower so as thereby to enable any person to have unlawful carnal connection with such woman or girl, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.

Corroboration.]—Provided that no person shall be convicted of an offence under this section upon the evidence of one witness only, unless such witness be corroborated in some material particular by evidence implicating the accused.

Sect. 8—Unlawful detention of woman or girl with intent that she should be carnally known or in any brothel.]—Any person who detains any woman or girl against her will—

(1) in or upon any premises with intent that she may be unlawfully and carnally known by any man, whether any particular man, or generally, or

shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable at the discretion of the court to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.

Where a woman or girl is in or upon any premises for the purpose of having any unlawful carnal connection, or is in any brothel, a person shall be deemed to detain such woman or girl in or upon such premises or in such brothel, if, with intent to compel or induce her to remain in or upon such premises or in such brothel, such person withholds from such woman or girl any wearing apparel or other property belonging to her, or, where wearing apparel has been lent or otherwise supplied to such woman or girl by or by the direction of such person, such person threatens such woman or girl with legal proceedings if she takes away with her the wearing apparel so lent or supplied.

No legal proceedings, whether civil or criminal, shall be taken against any such woman or girl for taking away or being found in possession of any such wearing apparel as was necessary to enable her to leave such premises or brothel.

Commencement as ante, p. 914]—by falsely pretending and representing unto a certain woman [or girl], named J. N., that [here set out the false pretences or representations; the words in the statute are "false pretences or false representation"], did procure the said J. N. to have unlawful carnal connection with a certain man named —— [or to the jurors aforesaid unknown], she the said J. N. at the time of such procurement not being a common prostitute, and not being of known immoral character; against the form [as ante, p. 840]. It is immaterial whether the intercourse is procured with the accused or with another. R. v. Williams, 62 J. P. 310; 33 L. J. Newsp. 253: and see R. v. Jones [1898] 1 Q. B. 119. It has been ruled that the false pretences must be set out, R. v. Field, C. C. C. Sess. Paper, 1891–1892, p. 757, Grantham, J., but that if set out they need not be expressly negatived. R. v. Clarke, 59 J. P. 248, Collins, J. For the form of a count for a conspiracy at common law to procure a girl to have illicit connection with a man, see R. v. Lord Grey, 9 St. Tr. 127; 1 East, P. C. 460: R. v. Mears, 2 Den. 79; 20 L. J. (M. C.) 59; 4 Cox, 423: R. v. Howell, 4 F. & F. 160.

Misdemeanor: imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years. 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 3, sub-s. 2. This offence is not triable at quarter sessions (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 17, ante, p. 902), nor can the indictment be preferred unless one or other of the preliminary steps required by 22 & 23 Vict. c. 17, s. 1, as extended by 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, s. 1 (ante, p. 7, et seq.), has been taken. 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 17 (ante, p. 902).

Evidence.

Prove the pretences or representations made by the defendant to J. N., and their falsehood (see ante, p. 609, et seq.). Seduction by a married man of a woman under promise of marriage by false representation has been held to be within the section. R. v. Williams, 62 J. P. 310; 33 L. J. Newsp. 253. Prove, also, that by means of these false pretences or representations the defendant induced J. N. to have carnal connection with the man named in the indictment; and that she was then not a common prostitute, nor a known immoral character. It may be indeed, that looking at the general presumption which the law makes in favour of innocence (ante, p. 342), it would be held that it was not necessary for the prosecution in the first instance to prove that the woman was not a common prostitute nor of known immoral character, but that it would lie upon the defendant to prove that she was a prostitute or of known immoral character. No person can be convicted of an offence under this section upon the evidence of one witness only, unless such witness be corroborated in some material particular by evidence implicating the accused. 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 3. As to evidence by the defendant and the wife or husband of the defendant, see ante, pp. 392–398, 902.

The defendant may be found guilty of this offence on an indictment charging him with rape, provided the facts do not prove a rape, but do prove the commission of this offence. 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 9 (ante, p. 906).

Sect 8.

SODOMY AND BESTIALITY.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100 (Offences against the Person Act, 1861), s. 61—Punishment.]—Whosoever shall be convicted of the abominable crime of buggery, committed either with mankind or with any animal, shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for life. . . . [This section re-enacts 9 G. 4, c. 31, s. 15, except as to punishment. The minimum punishment, which used to be ten years' penal servitude, was reduced by 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1 (ante, pp. 235, 236). As to threats to accuse another of this offence, see ante, p. 521.]

Sect. 63—Carnal knowledge.]—Ante, p. 905.

Indictment for Sodomy.

Commencement as ante, p. 913]—in and upon one J. N. feloniously did make an assault, and then feloniously, wickedly, and against the order of nature, had a venereal affair with the said J. N., and then feloniously carnally knew him the said J. N., and then feloniously, wickedly, and against the order of nature, with the said J. N. did commit and perpetrate that detestable and abominable crime of buggery (not to be named among Christians); against the form [as ante, p. 840]. See 1 East, P. C. 480.

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 61, as modified by 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 71 (ante, p. 778).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

The offence consists in penetration per anum. R. v. Jacobs, R. & R. 331. It was first made punishable in the common law courts by 25 H. 8, c. 6 (rep.). 1 Hawk. c. 4; 1 Hale, 669. The evidence is for the most part the same as in rape (see ante, pp. 911, et seq.), and as in that case, penetration alone is now sufficient to constitute the offence. R. v. Reekspear, 1 Mood. C. C. 342. As to medical evidence of the commission of the offence, see Luff, Forensic Medicine, Vol. II., p. 273. Prior to 9 G. 4, c. 31, s. 18 (now re-enacted as 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 63, ante, p. 905), emission must also be proved. R. v. Russell, 1 M. & Rob. 122: R. v. Jacobs, R. & R. 331: R. v. Reekspear, ubi supra. It is not necessary to prove the offence to have been committed against the consent of the person upon whom it was perpetrated; and both agent and patient (if consenting) are equally guilty. In R. v. Wiseman, Fortesc. (K. B.) 91, where the defendant was indicted for having committed this offence with a woman, a majority of the judges held that this was within the statute, but two or three of them held that it was not: no opinion was publicly given. But it seems to be settled that the offence can be committed with a woman. 3 Co. Inst. 59; 3 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 249. In R. v. Jellyman, 8 C. & P. 604, it was held that a married woman who consents to her husband committing an unnatural offence with her was an accomplice in the felony, and, as such, her evidence required confirmation, although her consent or non-consent was quite immaterial to the offence. If the offence be committed on a boy under fourteen years of age, it is felony in the agent only, on the ground that the boy is under the age of discretion. 1 Hale, 670; 3 Co. Inst. 59; 1 East, P. C. 480 (and the same, it should seem, as to a girl under twelve, the age by which at common law a girl is marriageable). If by a boy under fourteen, it is felony in the patient, if the patient be an adult. R. v. Allen, 1 Den. 364; 2 C. & K. 869; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 72; 3 Cox, 270. It would seem that the presumption applicable to boys under fourteen applies to this offence as well as to rape where the boy is the agent (see ante, p. 22). As to cases where a boy under fourteen is the patient, see 1 Hale, 670. If the evidence fail to make out the entire charge against the defendant, he may nevertheless be convicted of the attempt to commit the felony charged. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 9 (ante, p. 219). Evidence is not admissible to prove that the defendant has a general disposition to commit the offence. R. v. Cole, 3 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 251 (ante, p. 306).

Where the defendant forced open a child's mouth, and put in his private parts, and proceeded to the completion of his lust, the judges were of opinion that this did not constitute the offence of sodomy. R. v. Jacobs, R. & R. 331 (see 3 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 250; and 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 11, post, p. 925).

Indictment for Bestiality.

Commencement as ante, p. 913]—with a certain cow ("any animal") feloniously, wickedly, and against the order of nature, had a venereal affair, and then feloniously, wickedly, and against the order of nature, carnally knew the said cow; and then feloniously, wickedly, and against the order of nature, with the said cow did commit and perpetrate that detestable and abominable crime of buggery (not to be named among Christians); against the form [as ante, p. 840]. The prisoner may be convicted of attempting to commit the statutory felony with a domestic fowl, although its completion may be an impossibility. R. v. Brown, 24 Q. B. D. 357; 59 L. J. (M. C.) 47; 16 Cox, 715 (C. C. R.), which overrules on this point R. v. Mulreaty, 3 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 250, and see ante, p. 2.

The offence may be committed by a woman. 3 Co. Inst. 59; 3 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 249.

Felony: 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 61. For punishment, see notes to the last precedent. The defendant may upon this indictment be convicted of an attempt to commit the felony charged, if the evidence warrant such finding. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 9 (ante, p. 219). An indictment for an attempt to commit this offence may readily be framed from this and the next precedent. It is punishable in the same manner as the attempt to commit sodomy. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 62, infra. See R. v. Mulreaty, ubi supra. There is no statutory time for prosecuting the offence, but delay in prosecution has been made a ground for directing acquittal. R. v. Robins, 1 Cox, 114.

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove the carnal knowledge as in rape or sodomy, ante, pp. 911, 923.

ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO COMMIT SODOMY AND ACTS OF GROSS INDECENCY BETWEEN MALE PERSONS.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100 (Offences against the Person Act, 1861), s. 62.]—Whosoever shall attempt to commit the said abominable crime, or shall be guilty of any assault with intent to commit the same, or of any indecent assault upon any male person, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding ten years. . . . [The italicized parts of this section were new in 1861.]

48 & 49 Vict. c. 69 (Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885), s. 11—Acts of gross indecency by male person with another male person.]—Any male person who, in public or private, commits, or is a party to the commission of, or procures or attempts to procure the commission by any male person of, any act of gross indecency with another male person, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. [This enactment covers such cases as R. v. Jacobs, R. & R. 331, ante, p. 924, post, p. 927. For indictment, see post, p. 927.]

Commencement as ante, p. 913]—in and upon one J. N. did make an assault, and him the said J. N. did then beat, wound, and ill-treat, with intent that detestable and abominable crime (not to be named among Christians) called buggery, with the same J. N., feloniously, wickedly, diabolically, and against the order of nature, to commit and perpetrate; against the form [as ante, p. 840].

Misdemeanor: penal servitude for not more than ten and not less than three years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 62; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to fining the offender and requiring him to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 71 (ante, p. 778).

Evidence.

Prove an attempt to commit sodomy, the offence being incomplete for want of evidence of penetration (ante, p. 923). If the complete offence of sodomy be proved, it seems that the defendant will not be entitled to be acquitted; but the judge may, if he think fit, discharge the jury, and direct the defendant to be indicted for the felony. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 12 (ante, p. 218). Where the defendant was indicted under this section (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 62), for an indecent assault upon a male person, and it appeared that the person alleged to have been assaulted consented to what was done to him by the defendant, it was held that the indictment could not be sustained. R. v. Wollaston, 12 Cox, 180 (C. C. R.). Mere submission, however, is not consent, and therefore, where two boys of eight years of age submitted to indecent acts on the part of a man, in ignorance of the nature of the acts done, the man was held to be rightly convicted of an indecent assault, on the ground that the boys, being thus ignorant, could not be held to have consented in the true meaning of that word. R. v. Lock, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 10; 42 L. J. (M. C.) 5. And consent is now no defence to an indictment for an indecent assault, where the person assaulted is under the age of thirteen years. 43 & 44 Vict. c. 45, s. 2 (ante, p. 918), and it is therefore now unnecessary in such cases to consider the distinction between mere submission and consent drawn in R. v. Wollaston and R. v. Lock, ubi supra.

The unsworn evidence of a boy too young to understand the nature of an oath is rendered admissible on a charge for this offence by 4 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 15, and sched. 1 (ante, pp. 883, 887), which overrule R. v. Beer, 62 J. P. 120. Such evidence must be corroborated.

An indictment against two persons, which charged that they, being persons of wicked and unnatural dispositions, did in a certain open and public place unlawfully meet together, with the intent of committing with each other, openly, lewdly, and indecently, in the said public place, divers nasty, wicked, filthy, lewd, beastly, unnatural, and sodomitical practices, and then and there unlawfully, wickedly, openly, lewdly, and indecently did commit with each other, in the sight and view of divers liege subjects, etc., divers such practices as aforesaid, etc., was held bad in arrest of judgment for want of certainty. R. v. Rowed, 3 Q. B. 180; 2 G. & D. 518; 11 L. J. (M. C.) 74. The practices proved in this case and R. v. Wollaston (supra), and R. v. Jacobs, R. & R. 331 (ante, p. 924), seem to be within 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 11 (ante, p. 925).

As to attempts to commit bestiality, which are within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 62, see ante, p. 925. As to conspiracy or incitement to commit sodomy, etc., see R. v. Boulton, 12 Cox, 87. As to threats to accuse of these offences, see ante, p. 521, et seq.

Indictment for Indecent Assault on a Male. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 62, ante, p. 925.)

The indictment may be in the same form as that on p. 919, with the substitution of the words a "certain male person."

If the indictment be for an indecent assault, one or other of the preliminary steps required by 22 & 23 Vict. c. 17, s. 1, as extended by 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, s. 1, must be taken (see ante, p. 7).

Punishment: see the last precedent.

Indictment for Misdemeanor under 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 11. (Ante, p. 925.)

Commencement as ante, p. 913]—being a male person, unlawfully did commit an act of gross indecency with another male person, to wit, C. D.; against the form of, etc. [as ante, p. 840]. (2nd Count)—Same as first count, but charging C. D. with committing, etc., with A. B. (3rd Count)— . . . that the said A. B. on the day aforesaid, in the year aforesaid, being a male person, unlawfully did procure the commission by a male person, to wit, the said C. D., of an act of gross indecency with another male person, to wit, with him, the said A. B.; against the form of, etc. (as ante, p. 840). Counts for an indecent assault or an attempt to commit sodomy may be joined.

No indictment can be preferred for this offence unless the preliminary steps required by 22 & 23 Vict. c. 17, s. 1, as extended by 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, s. 1 (ante, p. 7, et seq.), have been taken. 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 17 (ante, p. 902).

Misdemeanor: imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 11 (ante, p. 925).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 17 (ante, p. 902).

Evidence.

It is an offence within 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 11, for a male person to procure the commission with himself of an act of gross indecency by another male person. R. v. Jones [1896] 1 Q. B. 4 (C. C. R.); 18 Cox, 207.

The unsworn evidence of a child under sixteen is now admissible on a charge under this section, but must be corroborated. 4 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 15, and sched. 1 (ante, pp. 883, 887).

SECT. 1.

HIGH TREASON.

Statutes.

25 Edw. 3, st. 5, c. 2 (Treason Act, 1351)—Declaration of Treasons (as printed in Revised Statutes, 2nd edition).]—Item, whereas divers opinions have been before this time in what case treason shall be said, and in what not; the king, at the request of the lords and of the commons, hath made a declaration in the manner as hereafter followeth, that is to say; when a man doth compass or imagine the death of our lord the King, or of our lady his Queen, or of their eldest son and heir; or if a man do violate the King's companion, or the King's eldest daughter unmarried, or the wife [of] the King's eldest son and heir; or if a man do levy war against our lord the King in his realm, or be adherent to the King's enemies in his realm, giving to them aid and comfort in the realm, or elsewhere, and thereof be probably ("provablement") attainted of open deed by the people of their condition . . . [as to counterfeiting the king's seals or coin (rep.), 11 G. 4 & 1 W. 4, c. 66; 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 34, s. 1]; and if a man slea (sic) the chancellor, treasurer, or the king's justices of the one bench, or the other (see Steph. Dig. Cr. L. (6th ed.) 45, n.) justices in eyre or justices of assise, and all other justices assigned to hear and determine, being in their places doing their offices: and it is to be understood that in the cases above rehearsed, that ought to be judged treason which extends to our lord the king and his royal majesty: and of such treason the forfeiture of the escheats pertaineth to our sovereign lord as well of the lands and tenements holden of other as of himself. (As to forfeitures, see now 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23, s. 1, post, p. 936; as to petty treason, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 8, ante, p. 776.) And because that many other like cases of treason may happen in time to come, which a man cannot think nor declare at this present time; it is accorded that if any other case, supposed treason, which is not above specified, doth happen before any justices, the justices shall tarry without any going to judgment of the treason, till the cause be showed and declared before the king and his parliament, whether it ought to be judged treason or other felony. And if per-case any man of the realm ride armed overtly (see 2 Steph. Hist. Cr. L. 269) or secretly with men of arms against any other, to slay him, or rob him, or take him, or retain him till he hath made fine or ransom for to have his deliverance, it is not in the mind of the king nor his council that in such case it shall be judged treason, but shall be judged felony or trespass according to the laws of the land of old time used, and according as the case requireth. . . . [Rest rep. 50 & 51 Vict. c. 53, s. 3 (*Stat. (a) In 1775 the law officers (Thurlow, A.-G., and Wedderburn, S.-C.) had been informed—

(1) That in 18 Anne an Act against high treason had been passed in the province of New Hampshire.

(2) That the said Act was disallowed by Order in Council in 1718.

(3) That it was conceived that there was no law of that province at present existing for the trial and punishment of that offence.

They were asked in what manner it was proper to proceed against persons for high treason committed in New Hampshire.

They replied: "We are humbly of opinion that it requires no Act of a provincial legislature to constitute the offence of high treason in any of his Majesty's plantations. The crime may be prosecuted in the Superior Court of New Hampshire (which by 11 W. 3 hath the full criminal jurisdiction within that government which his Majesty's Court of King's Bench exercises here), or in this country under the statutes of 35 H. 8 as the occasion may require." Indictment for compassing the King's Death. (25 Edw. 3, st. 5, c. 2, ante, p. 928.)

———, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King, upon their oath present, that J. S., being a subject of our said lord the King, [not regarding the duty of his allegiance, nor having the fear of God in his heart, but being moved and seduced by the instigation of the devil,] as a false traitor against our said lord the King, and wholly withdrawing the allegiance, fidelity, and obedience which every true and faithful subject of our said lord the King should and of right ought to bear towards our said lord the King, on the first day of June, in the year of our Lord ——, and on divers other days as well before as after, maliciously and traitorously, together with divers other false traitors to the jurors aforesaid unknown, did compass, imagine, devise, and intend to depose our said lord the King from the royal state, title, power, and government of this realm, and from the style, honour, and kingly name of the imperial crown thereof, and to bring and put our said lord the King to death: and the said treasonable compassing, imagination, device, and intention maliciously and traitorously did express, utter, declare, and evince, by divers overt acts and deeds hereinafter mentioned, that is to say: IN ORDER TO FULFIL, PERFECT, AND BRING TO EFFECT his most evil and wicked treason, and treasonable compassing, imagination, device, and intention aforesaid, he the said J. S., as such false traitor as aforesaid, afterwards, to wit, on the said first day of August in the year aforesaid, and on divers other days as well before as after, maliciously and traitorously did conspire, consult, consent, and agree with one A. B., C. D., and divers other false traitors to the jurors aforesaid unknown, to raise, levy, and make insurrection, rebellion, and war within this kingdom, against our said lord the King; AND FURTHER TO FULFIL, PERFECT, AND BRING TO EFFECT his most evil and wicked treason, and treasonable compassing, imagination, device, and intention aforesaid, he, the said J. S., as such false traitor as aforesaid, afterwards, to wit, [etc., etc., so proceeding to state other overt acts in the same manner: and then conclude the count thus]; in contempt of our said lord the King and his laws, to the evil example of all others in like case offending, contrary to the duty of the allegiance of him the said J. S.; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

By "overt act" is meant any act manifesting the criminal intention or tending to accomplish the criminal object in respect whereof the indictment is framed. See R. v. Thistlewood, 33 St. Tr. 685.(a) Any number of overt acts may be laid in the same count, but proof of any one sufficient overt act will maintain the count. Kel. (J.) 8; 1 Hale, 122; Fost. 294. It is not necessary that the overt act be laid to have been committed "traitorously," because that is not the offence; but if the treason consists not in the intention but in the act, as in levying war, then it must be laid to have been done "traitorously." Eden, P. L. 106: R. v. Cranburne, 2 Salk. 633. As to whether the accused should be described as a subject of the King, see 26 St. Tr. 819; and R. v. Jameson [1896] 2 Q. B. 425. A copy of the indictment must be delivered to the accused ten days before his arraignment, except in cases where the overt act of treason is assassination or a direct attempt on the life or person of the King. 6 G. 4, c. 50, s. 21 (ante, p. 935). As to a copy of the caption, see R. v. Burke, 10 Cox, 519.

The punishment of high treason is death by hanging, unless the King by warrant under the sign manual, countersigned by a secretary of state, substitutes death by decapitation. 30 G. 3, c. 48, s. 1 (ante, p. 933); 54 G. 4, c. 146 (ante, p. 934); 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23, s. 31 (ante, p. 937).

High treason, misprision of treason, offences against the King's title, prerogative, person, or government, or against either house of parliament, are not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Venue.]—As to the venue in cases of compassing the King's death out of the realm, see 35 H. 8, c. 2, s. 1 (ante, p. 929). Most of the cases cited infra, p. 946, from the St. Tr. as containing counts for adhering to the King's enemies, contain also counts for compassing the King's death in this country; in the following cases the offence of "compassing, etc.," is charged as having been committed "in parts beyond the seas," viz., R. v. Hesketh, K. B. Roll, 1592: R. v. Assheton, Id.: R. v. Skinner, id.: R. v. Smith, Baga de Secretis, 1713.

Liability of aliens.]—Alien friends may be convicted of high treason (R. v. De la Motte, 21 St. Tr. 687, 814), but alien enemies cannot (Calvin's case, 7 Co. Rep. 1, 6 b; and see 4 St. Tr. 1182; Forsyth, Cas. Const. Law, 200), unless they accept British protection during the war (Fost. 185). A British subject is not exempt from the penalties of treason because he holds a commission in the enemy's forces, Napper Tandy's case, 27 St. Tr. 1191; Macdonald's case, Fost. 59, 183; 18 St. Tr. 857; Townley's case, Fost. 7; 18 St. Tr. 1329; and see post, p. 947.

Overt acts.]—The following acts have been decided or have been deemed by writers upon the subject to be sufficient overt acts of compassing the death of the sovereign within the Treason Act, 1351 (ante, p. 928). The statute is said to be declaratory of the common law (ante, p. 929); but all the law of treason now rests on statute, and the doctrine of constructive treason is discouraged, if not exploded. See 1 Mary, st. 1, c. 1, s. 1 (ante, p. 931); and 3 St. Tr. 368, 1466, 1472; 6 St. Tr. 902, n.; 15 St. Tr. 522; 15 St. Tr. 522, n.; 24 St. Tr. 877; 32 St. Tr. 431.

Everything wilfully or deliberately done or attempted, whereby the King's life may be endangered, is an overt act of compassing his death. Fost. 195. Killing the King is an overt act of compassing his death, and was so laid in the case of the regicides. Kel. (J.) 8. So, going armed for the purpose of killing the King; R. v. Somerville, 1 Anderson, 104; providing arms, ammunition, poison, or the like, for the purpose of killing the King; 1 Hale, 108; 3 Co. Inst. 12; conspirators meeting and consulting on the means of killing the King; Fost. 195: R. v. Sir H. Vane, Kel. (J.) 15; 6 St. Tr. 119: R. v. Tonge, Kel. (J.) 17; 6 St. Tr. 225; and see Kel. (J.) 81; or of deposing him, or of usurping the powers of government; R. v. Hardy, 1 East, P. C. 60; 24 St. Tr. 199; or resolving to do it; R. v. Rookwood, 13 St. Tr. 139: R. v. Charnock, 12 St. Tr. 1377; 2 Salk. 631; acting as counsel against the King, in order to take away his life; R. v. Cook, Kel. (J.) 12; 2 St. Tr. 1077; and see R. v. Harrison, 5 St. Tr. 1008; 2 Steph. Hist. Cr. L. 241: all these, and the like, are sufficient overt acts of compassing the King's death.

So, other species of high treason, which are distinct heads of treason in themselves, may be laid as overt acts of compassing the King's death (see 39 & 40 G. 3, c. 93, supra). Thus, the following have been held to be sufficient overt acts of compassing the King's death: levying war directly against the King: Fost. 197, 210, 211; 1 Hale, 122, 123, 151; Kel. (J.) 21; 3 Co. Inst. 12; 13 St. Tr. 110, 113: R. v. Hensey, 19 St. Tr. 1341 (but not a mere constructive levying of war, such as pulling down all inclosures, or the like, 1 Hale, 123; see post, p. 943); or even a conspiracy to levy war directly against the King, for the purpose of dethroning him, or of obliging him to change his measures, or the like; Fost. 197, 211; 1 Hale, 119, 121: R. v. Freind, 13 St. Tr. 1: R. v. Darrel, 10 Mod. 321: R. v. Layer, 16 St. Tr. 93: R. v. Cammion, Sav. 3: R. v. Lord Russell, 9 St. Tr. 577: R. v. Sidney, 9 St. Tr. 817: R. v. Cook, 13 St. Tr. 311 (but not a conspiracy to effect a rising for the purpose of throwing down all inclosures, or of any other species of constructive levying of war; Fost. 213; per Holt, C.J., Holt, 682; per Cur., 10 Mod. 322); adhering to the King's enemies: Fost. 196, 197: R. v. Hardina, 2 Vent. 315: R. v. Lord Preston, 12 St. Tr. 645: R. v. Stone, 25 St. Tr. 1155; 6 T. R. 527; inciting foreigners to invade the realm: Fost. 196; 1 Hale, 120; 3 Co. Inst. 14: R. v. Dr. Story, 3 Dyer, 298A, 300B; 1 St. Tr. 1087 (where the indictment is incorrectly set out (see K. B. Rolls, 1571): R. v. Parkyns, 13 St. Tr. 63.

Writings which import a compassing of the King's death are sufficient overt acts of this species of treason, if published; 1 Hale, 118; 3 Co. Inst. 14; Fost. 198; 1 Hawk. c. 17, s. 31; as, for instance, writings exciting persons to kill the King; R. v. Twyn, Kel. (J.) 22; 6 St. Tr. 513, n.; or the like. See the cases collected in Pyne's case, Cro. Car. 117. So, words of advice or persuasion are sufficient overt acts of this species of treason, if they advise or persuade to an act which would of itself (if committed) be a sufficient overt act. Fost. 195, 200: R. v. Charnock, 12 St. Tr. 1377; 2 Salk. 631. So, words may be laid in the indictment to explain an act; as, for instance, an act seemingly innocent in itself may be shown to be an overt act of treason, by its connection with words spoken by the party at the time. 1 Hale, 115; and see R. v. Parkyns, 13 St. Tr. 63: R. v. Orohagan, Cro. Car. 332: R. v. Lee, 1 St. Tr. 1403. But loose words which have no reference to any act or design, or which are not words of persuasion or advice, cannot be deemed overt acts of treason. Fost. 200–207: R. v. Theving, 3 Harg. St. Tr. 79–90.

Where words or writings are laid as overt acts, it is sufficient to set forth the substance of them; R. v. Francia, 15 St. Tr. 897: R. v. Lord Preston, 12 St. Tr. 645: R. v. Watson, 2 Stark. (N. P.) 137; 32 St. Tr. 1; for in no case is it necessary that the whole detail of the evidence should be set forth; it is sufficient that the charge be reduced to a reasonable certainty, so that the defendant may be apprised of its nature, and may be prepared to answer it. Fost. 194.

Evidence.

The evidence must be applied to the proof of the overt acts, and not to the proof of the principal treason: for the overt act is the charge to which the prisoner must apply his defence. And whether the overt act proved be a sufficient overt act of the principal treason laid in the indictment, is a matter of law to be determined by the court. No evidence may be admitted of any overt act not laid in the indictment: 7 & 8 W. 3, c. 3, s. 8 (ante, p. 932); that is to say, no overt act amounting to a distinct independent charge, although it be an overt act of the species of treason charged, shall be admitted in evidence, unless it be expressly laid in the indictment; but if an overt act not laid amount to a direct proof of any other overt act which is laid, it may be given in evidence to prove such overt act. R. v. Rookwood, 13 St. Tr. 139, 661: R. v. Deacon, 18 St. Tr. 365, 369; Fost. 9: R. v. Lowicke, 13 St. Tr. 267: R. v. Layer, 16 St. Tr. 98. Words spoken or written and published may constitute an overt act if relating to a treasonable act or design. 5 St. Tr. 983; 10 St. Tr. 277, 295; 22 St. Tr. 480, n.: R. v. Wedderburne, 18 St. Tr. 425; Fost. 22: and see 1 St. Tr. xxvi., xxxviii.

Although unpublished writings cannot be laid as an overt act, yet if they tend to prove an overt act laid, they may be admitted in evidence for that purpose. R. v. Lord Preston, 12 St. Tr. 645: R. v. Layer, 16 St. Tr. 98, 280: Anderton's case, 12 St. Tr. 1245: Twyn's case, 6 St. Tr. 513, n.: and R. v. Hensey, 1 Burr. 642, 644; 19 St. Tr. 1344. In Algernon Sidney's case (Fost. 198; 9 St. Tr. 817), if the papers found in his closet had been plainly referable to the other treasonable practices charged in the indictment, they might indisputably have been read in evidence against him, although not published. And, it is no objection that the writings, or any other articles, were not found until after the apprehension of the defendant. R. v. Watson, 2 Stark. (N. P.) 137; 32 St. Tr. 1.

Where words of incitement have reference to an act, after giving evidence of the words, you may give evidence of the act, in order fully to explain them. R. v. Lord G. Gordon, Doug. 590, 593: 21 St. Tr. 485.

Where a conspiracy is laid as an overt act, the acts of any of the conspirators in furtherance of the common design may be given in evidence against all. R. v. Horne Tooke, 1 East, P. C. 98: R. v. Hardy, 1 East, P. C. 99; 24 St. Tr. 199: R. v. Stone, 25 St. Tr. 1155; 6 T. R. 527; 3 R. R. 253: R. v. M'Cafferty, 10 Cox, 603; Ir. Rep. 1 C. L. 363: and see Kel. (J.) 19, 20 (and see ante, p. 306). In such a case, the first thing to be proved is the conspiracy; secondly, evidence must be given to connect the defendant with it; and lastly, if it be intended to give in evidence against the defendant the acts of any other person, you must show that such person was also a member of the same conspiracy, and that the act done was in furtherance of the common design. See R. v. Sidney, 9 St. Tr. 817, etc.: R. v. Lord Lovat, 18 St. Tr. 529; and ante, p. 306, et seq.

Time.]—The time at which the overt acts are alleged to have been committed need not be proved as laid; it is sufficient if they be proved to have been committed at any time within three years before the finding of the indictment. R. v. Charnock, 1 Salk, 288; 12 St. Tr. 1377: Sir H. Vane's case, 6 St. Tr. 123, Kel (J.). 16: R. v. Lord Balmerino, 18 St. Tr. 441: R. v. Townley, 18 St. Tr. 1329; Fost. 7, 8.

Place.]—7 G. 4, c. 64, ss. 12, 13 (ante, p. 43), do not apply to treason. An overt act must be proved to have been committed in the proper county. See R. v. Lord Preston, 12 St. Tr. 377: R. v. Hensey, 19 St. Tr. 1341, 1345: Sir H. Vane's case, 6 St. Tr. 123, 129, n.: R. v. Hardie, 1 St. Tr., N. S. 609, and ante, p. 44. But if any one overt act be proved against the defendant in the proper county, acts of treason tending to prove such overt act laid, though done in a foreign county, may be given in evidence; and this was done in nearly all the trials of the rebels in the year 1746. R. v. Deacon, Fost. 9, 10; R. v. Wedderburn, Id. 22.

Place in foreign treasons.]—As to laying and proving place in cases of treason where all the overt acts are proved to have taken place out of the realm, see post, p. 945.

Where several overt acts are laid, proof of any one of them will maintain the count, provided the overt act so proved is a sufficient overt act of the species of treason charged in the indictment. 1 Hale, 122; Fost. 194.

The prisoner is not bound to show what was the object or meaning of the acts done by him; it is for the Crown to make out that they amount to the treason charged in the indictment. R. v. Frost, 4 St. Tr., N. S. 85 9 C. & P. 129.

Corroboration.]—There must be two witnesses to prove the treason, both of them to the same overt act, or one of them to one, and the other of them to another overt act of the same treason; unless the defendant shall willingly, without violence, confess the same; 7 & 8 W. 3, c. 3, ss. 2, 4 (ante, pp. 931, 932), and see 5 St. Tr. 977, n. But this rule does not apply in cases of high treason in compassing or imagining the death or destruction, maiming or wounding of the King, and of misprision of such treason, where the overt acts alleged in the indictment shall be any attempt upon his person; in which cases the prisoner is triable in the same manner and upon the like evidence as if charged with murder: 39 & 40 G. 3, c. 93 (ante, p. 934); 57 G. 3, c. 6, s. 4 (ante, p. 935); 5 & 6 Vict. c. 51, s. 1 (ante, p. 936). If the jury do not give credit to both the witnesses, the defendant shall be acquitted. R. v. Palmer, 7 St. Tr. 1067, 1112. But where the overt act is composite, made up of several circumstances and passing through several stages, it is not necessary that there should be two witnesses to each circumstance and at each stage. It is enough if the joint testimony of two or more witnesses establish the act as a whole. R. v. M'Cafferty, Ir. Rep. 1 C. L. 363; 10 Cox, 603. And one witness is sufficient to prove a collateral fact; Fost. 242; as, that the defendant is a natural-born subject; R. v. Vaughan, 13 St. Tr. 485; or a matter of inducement, or the like, 13 St. Tr. 535. As to proof of confessions by the accused, R. v. Deacon, 18 St. Tr. 369: Tonge's case, 6 St. Tr. 227, 228: R. v. Crossfield, 26 St. Tr. 57, and ante, p. 325. As to evidence of accomplices, see ante, p. 390.

List of witnesses.]—On all prosecutions for treason or misprision of treason, except those triable as if the charge were murder, 39 & 40 G. 3, c. 93; 57 G. 3, c. 6, s. 1; 5 & 6 Vict. c. 51, s. 1 (ante, pp. 934–936); a copy of the indictment and a list of the witnesses for the prosecution must be delivered to the accused ten days before the trial. 7 Anne, c. 21, s. 14 (ante, p. 933). It would seem to have formerly been safer to deliver a copy of the caption with that of the indictment; Bacon Abr. Treason (C. c.); but see now R. v. O'Connell, 5 St. Tr., N. S. 28: R. v. Burke, 10 Cox, 519. A bill of indictment for treason was found on the 11th December, on the 12th, copies of the indictment and of the jury panel were delivered to the prisoner; and on the 17th, a copy of the list of witnesses was delivered to him. The prisoner was arraigned on the 31st December, and pleaded: and upon the first witness being called for the Crown, it was objected that the list of witnesses had not been delivered according to the statute. Upon a case reserved, it was held, by nine judges to six, that the delivery of the list was not a good delivery in point of law: but it was also held, by a like majority, that the objection was too late after plea pleaded. And it was agreed by all the judges, that if the objection had been taken in due time, the only effect of it would have been a postponement of the trial, to give time for a proper delivery of the list. R. v. Frost, 4 St. Tr., N. S. 35; 2 Mood. C. C. 140; 9 C. & P. 129. And so the fact that a true copy of the indictment has not been furnished to the prisoner is not matter for a plea, but is only a ground for postponing the trial. R. v. Burke, 10 Cox, 519.

List of jury.]—7 Anne, c. 21, s. 14 (s. 11 in Ruffhead), also contained provisions as to a list of the petty jurors which were repealed as to England by 6 G. 4, c. 50, s. 62, and replaced by s. 21 of that Act, under which the list of the petty jurors, with names, professions, and places of abode, must be delivered in the presence of two credible witnesses ten days before the day of trial, if the trial is in the King's Bench Division, and ten days before the day of arraignment if the trial is in any other court. The obligation does not apply where the particular treason is triable in the same way as murder. See 39 & 40 G. 3, c. 93 (ante, p. 934); 6 G. 4, c. 50, s. 21 (ante, p. 935); 5 & 6 Vict. c. 51, s. 1 (ante, p. 936).

Form of a Count for levying War. (25 Edw. 3, st. 5, c. 2, ante, p. 928.)

And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present, that the said J. S., being a subject of our said lord the King, not regarding the duty of his allegiance, nor having the fear of God in his heart, but being moved and seduced by the instigation of the devil, as a false traitor against our said lord the King, and wholly withdrawing the allegiance, fidelity and obedience which every true and faithful subject of our said lord the King should and of right ought to bear towards our said lord the King, on the said first day of June, in the year aforesaid, together with divers other false traitors to the jurors aforesaid unknown, armed and arrayed in a warlike manner, that is to say, with guns, muskets, blunderbusses, pistols, swords, bayonets, pikes and other weapons, being then unlawfully, maliciously, and traitorously assembled and gathered together against our said lord the King, most wickedly, maliciously and traitorously did levy and make war against our said lord the King within this realm, and did then maliciously and traitorously attempt and endeavour by force and arms to subvert and destroy the constitution and government of this realm, as by law established, and deprive and depose our said lord the King of and from the style, honour and kingly name of the imperial crown of this realm; in contempt of our said lord the King and his laws, to the evil example of all others in the like case offending, contrary to the duty of the allegiance of him the said J. S.; against the form of the statutes in that case made and provided and against the peace, etc.

In this count it is not necessary to set out the particular acts of the defendant; it is sufficient to allege generally, that he assembled with a multitude, armed and arrayed in warlike manner, and levied war. Fost. 220. For punishment, see ante, p. 938.

Evidence.

In order to maintain this count, it is necessary to prove that which in law amounts to a levying of war, directly or constructively, against the King in his realm: and to prove that the defendant was either actually engaged in it, or present aiding and abetting. Levying war in Ireland is treason, by force of Poyning's Act (10 H. 7, c. 22, Ir.). Smith O'Brien v. R., 7 St. Tr., N. S. 1; 2 H. L. C. 465. As to the meaning of "realm," see ante, p. 929.

In order to constitute a levying of war, the number of persons assembled is not material; three or four will constitute it as fully as a thousand. 3 Co. Inst. 9. Nor is it necessary that they should be more guerrino arraiati, armed with military weapons, with colours flying, etc., although it is usually so stated in the indictment. Fost. 208: and see R. v. Dammaree and Purchase, Fost. 208; 15 St. Tr. 521, 606, 645. Nor is actual fighting necessary to constitute a levying of war: Fost. 218; 1 Hale, 144; for, as the court held in Vaughan's case (13 St. Tr. 485; 2 Salk. 634), enlisting and marching are sufficient, without coming to battle. But there must be an insurrection, there must be force accompanying that insurrection, and it must be for an object of a general nature. R. v. Frost, 4 St. Tr., N. S. 85; 9 C. & P. 129. As to levying war by use of dangerous explosives, see R. v. Gallagher, 16 Cox, 291 (Ir.): R. v. Deasy, 15 Cox, 334. After an action has taken place, it is termed bellum percussum; before it, bellum levatum. See 15 St. Tr. 525, n.

War levied against the King is of two kinds—direct and constructive. It is said to be direct, when the war is levied directly against the King or his forces, with intent to do some injury to his person, to imprison him, or the like: 1 Hale, 131, 132; such, for instance, as open rebellion, for the purpose of deposing or imprisoning the King, or of getting him into the power of the rebels, or of forcing him to put away his ministers, or the like; 1 Hale, 152; Fost. 210; and see R. v. The Earls of Essex and Southampton, Moore, 621; 1 St. Tr. 1333; holding or defending any of the King's castles, forts, or ships against the King or his forces, or delivering them up to rebels, through treachery; 2 Co. Inst. 10; Fost. 219; 1 Hale, 525, 526. To constitute levying war it is not necessary that great numbers should assemble or military arms or array should be displayed or actual force be used. R. v. Hardie, 1 St. Tr., N. S. 609: R. v. Gallagher, 16 Cox, 291 (Ir.). Levying war is said to be indirect or constructive when it is levied for the purpose of effecting innovations of a public and general nature by an armed force; Fost. 211; as, for the purpose of attempting by force to obtain the repeal of a statute, to alter the religion established by law, or to obtain the redress of any other public grievance, real or pretended; 1 Hawk. c. 17, s. 26; 1 Hale, 153; Fost. 211; 3 Co. Inst. 9, 10: R. v. Lord G. Gordon, 21 St. Tr. 485; 2 Dougl. 590: and see 13 St. Tr. 61; 15 St. Tr. 527, n., 606, n.; 21 St. Tr. 644: R. v. Thistlewood, 33 St. Tr. 681, 955; or an insurrection for the purpose of throwing down all inclosures, pulling down all bawdy houses, opening all prisons, etc., expelling all strangers, enhancing the price of wages generally, or the like. R. v. Dammaree and Purchase, Fost. 213; 1 Hale, 132: R. v. Bradshaw, Poph. 122: R. v. Messenger, Kel. (J.) 70–79; 6 St. Tr. 879. Therefore, where a mob assembled for the purpose of destroying all the Protestant dissenting meeting-houses, and actually pulled down two, it was held to be treason. R. v. Dammaree, 15 St. Tr. 521, 605: R. v. Purchase, Id. 645. A mere rising or tumult is not treasonable, unless for a purpose of a public or general nature. R. v. Hardie, 1 St. Tr., N. S. 609: R. v. Munroe, Id. 1356. Thus an insurrection for the purpose of throwing down the inclosures of a particular manor, park, common, etc., or upon a mere quarrel between private persons, Fost. 210; 1 Hale, 131, 133, 149, or to deliver one or more particular persons out of prison (they not being imprisoned for treason), 1 Hale, 134, or holding a house by force against a sheriff and posse comitatus, 1 Hale, 146, is not treason. So, if an armed body of men enter a town, their object being not to take it, or to attack the military force there, but merely to make a demonstration of their strength to the magistracy, in order to procure the liberation or mitigate the punishment of prisoners convicted of some political offence, this, though an aggravated misdemeanor, is not high treason. R. v. Frost, 4 St. Tr., N. S. 85; 9 C. & P. 129.

It is said also, in order to maintain this count, proof must be given of a war actually levied, and not merely of a conspiracy to levy it. 1 Hale, 141–148; 1 Hawk. c. 17, s. 27. But, according to Foster, the conspiracy may be dealt with as an overt act in compassing the King's death. Fost. 195.

In the case of war levied directly against the King, all persons assembled and marching with the rebels are guilty of treason, whether they are aware of the purpose of the assembly, or aid and assist in committing acts of violence, or not; R. v. The Earls of Essex and Southampton, 1 St. Tr. 1333; Moore, 621; unless compelled to join and continue with them pro timore mortis; Fost. 216, 217; 3 Co. Inst. 10; 1 Hale, 49, 51, 139; and actual compulsion is an excuse for adhering to rebels, but mere apprehension of loss of property or injury not endangering the person is not an excuse. R. v. M'Growther, 18 St. Tr. 391; Fost. 18, 217; 1 East, P. C. 71: R. v. Gordon, 1 East, P. C. 71; and see ante, p. 30. But in the case of a constructive levying of war, those only of the rabble who actually aid and assist in doing those acts of violence which form the constructive treason, are traitors; the rest are merely rioters. See R. v. Messenger, Kel. (J.) 70–79; 1 Sid. 358; 6 St. Tr. 879.

Form of Indictment for adhering to the King's Enemies abroad when tried in the King's Bench Division. (23 Edw. 3, st. 5, c. 2, ante, p. 928; 35 H. 8, c. 2, s. 1, ante, p. 929.)

County of the county of London and the county of Middlesex, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present that on the —— day of ——, in the —— year of the reign of our said lord the King, and long before and continually from thence until —— an open and public war was [and is yet] prosecuted and carried on by —— against our said lord the King and his subjects, the said —— then being an enemy of our said lord the King, and that J. S., then being a subject of our said lord the King, and well knowing the premises, but not regarding the duty of his allegiance, nor having the fear of God in his heart, but being moved and seduced by the instigation of the devil, as a false traitor against our said lord the King, and wholly withdrawing the allegiance, fidelity and obedience which every true and faithful subject of our said lord the King should and of right ought to bear towards our said lord the King, and contriving and with all his strength intending to aid and assist the said enemy of our said lord the King [in the prosecution of the said war] against our said lord the King and his subjects heretofore, and during the said war, to wit, on the said first day of June, in the year aforesaid, at —— in —— in parts beyond the seas without this realm of England, and on divers other days as well before as after that day, as well at —— as elsewhere in ——, unlawfully, maliciously and traitorously was adhering to, and aiding and comforting the said ——, the said —— then being an enemy of our said lord the King: AND THAT in the prosecution, performance and execution of his treason and traitorous adhering aforesaid, he the said J. S., as such false traitor as aforesaid, during the said war, to wit, on the said first day of June, in the year last aforesaid, and on divers, etc. [here set out the overt acts, introducing each overt act thus: and in further prosecution, performance, and execution of his treason and traitorous adhering aforesaid, he the said J. S., as such false traitor as aforesaid, afterwards, and during the said war, to wit, on, etc., etc.; and concluding the count thus]: in contempt of our said lord the King and his laws, to the evil example of all others in like cases offending, contrary to the duty of the allegiance of him the said J. S.; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. See R. v. Lynch [1903] 1 K. B. 444; 67 J. P. Rep. 41; 20 Cox, 468. The special acts of adherence must be set forth in the indictment as overt acts; but it is not necessary in this or in any other case of treason, that in laying the overt acts the details of the evidence intended to be given at the trial should be stated; it is sufficient if the charge be reduced to a reasonable certainty, so that the defendant may be apprised of the nature of the offence with which he is charged. Fost. 194, 220.

Venue: Where the King's Bench "shall sit and be kept" (35 H. 8, c. 2, s. 1, ante, p. 929). This is now "the county of the county of London and the county of Middlesex." By 51 & 52 Vict. c. 41, s. 89, sub-s. 3, "the county of London and the county of Middlesex shall be deemed to be one county for the purpose of all legal proceedings civil or criminal" . . . in any court except the Court of Quarter Sessions, and power was given for the making of rules of the Supreme Court for the purpose of carrying this section into effect. See the rules, ante, p. 195. This offence may also be tried by special commission. See 35 H. 8, c. 2, s. 1 (ante, p. 929). Punishment, see ante, p. 938.

In the precedent of a count for the offence of adhering to the King's enemies contained in editions of this work published before the passing of 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100 (Criminal Procedure Act, 1851), see s. 23, ante, p. 35), and s. 24 (ante, p. 54), it was alleged by way of prefatory averment that an open and public war was being carried on "in the county of ——"; as in R. v. Stone, 25 St. Tr. 1155, and other cases. This, however, is not now necessary, and never seems to have been so in cases where both the adherence charged and the enemies adhered to were without the realm.

The count is proved in the same manner as the count for compassing the King's death (see ante, p. 939, et seq.), namely, by proving one or more of the overt acts laid. The fact of the persons adhered to being enemies may be proved by the production of the Gazette containing the proclamation, if war were formally proclaimed, or public notoriety is sufficient evidence of it. Y. B. 19 E. 4, f. 5; Fost. 219; 1 Hale, 164. And whether they are enemies or not, is a matter of fact to be determined by the jury. Id.

An actual adherence must be proved. A mere conspiracy or intention to adhere is not treason within this branch of the statute, although probably such a conspiracy might be laid as an overt act of compassing the King's death. But if you can prove such a conspiracy, and connect the defendant with it by evidence, and can prove an act done by any one of the conspirators in furtherance of the common design, you may give it in evidence against the defendant, if it tend to prove any of the overt acts laid in the indictment; for the act of one, in such a case, is the act of all. R. v. Stone, 25 St. Tr. 1155; 6 T. R. 527 (see ante, p. 940).

Overt acts.]—The words in the Treason Act, 1351 (ante, p. 928), are—"or be adherent to the enemies of our lord the King in his realm, giving to them aid or comfort in the realm or elsewhere." The offence defined by these words is "adhering to the King's enemies within the land or without, and declaring the same by some overt act;" 3 Co. Inst. 3, 10, 11; Co. Litt. 261 (b); the offence being complete though both the adherence and the enemies adhered to are without the realm. 1 Hale,

(a case under 28 H. 8, c. 15, for treason on the high seas); 18 G. 2, c. 30 (preamble): R. v. Maclane, 26 St. Tr. 722, 725, Osgoode, C.J. (Quebec): Mulcahy v. R., L. R. 3 H. L. 306, 317, Willes, J.: R. v. Lynch, [1903] 1 K. B. 444; and see the records (preserved in the Record Office) of the following cases, all of which contain indictments under 35 H. 8, c. 2, for adhering to, aiding, and assisting the King's enemies abroad, viz.: R. v. Lord Wentworth (referred to 4 St. Tr. 314): R. v. Grymston: R. v. Chamberlayn (1559: for the surrender of Calais, Baga de Secretis, pouches 38, 39): R. v. Lord Middleton and John Stafford (K. B. Rolls, 1713: for assisting the King of France in fighting against the British in France): R. v. Duke of Wharton (1728: for assisting the King of Spain in the siege of Gibraltar, Baga de S. pouch 67): R. v. Cundell (1812: for assisting "the French Government and the men of France under the said Government" in fighting against the British in the Isle of France, Baga de S. pouch 89). Every assistance given by the King's subjects to his enemies, unless given from a well-grounded apprehension of immediate death in case of a refusal, is high treason within this branch of the statute. 1 Hale, 159. Therefore, if a British subject join the King's enemies in acts of hostility against this country; Fost. 216; 1 Hawk. c. 17, s. 28; or even against the King's allies; Fost. 220: R. v. Vaughan, 2 Salk. 635; 13 St. Tr. 485; or join the enemy's forces, although no acts of hostility be committed by them either against the King or his allies; Fost. 218: R. v. Vaughan, 2 Salk. 634; 13 St. Tr. 485; or raise troops for the enemy; R. v. Harding, 2 Vent. 315 (where, after a special verdict, it was held that the indictment did not sufficiently charge an adherence to the King's enemies, as it did not state who those enemies were; but the prisoner was convicted of compassing the King's death); or deliver up the King's castles, forts, or ships of war to the King's enemies through treachery or in combination with them; Fost. 219; 3 Co. Inst. 10; 1 Hale, 168; or even detain the King's castles, etc., from him, if it be done in confederacy with the enemy; Fost. 219; 1 Hale, 326; or send money, arms, intelligence, or the like, to the King's enemies; Fost. 217; although such money, intelligence, etc., be intercepted and never reach them; R. v. Gregg, 14 St. Tr. 1371, 1376, n; Fost. 217, 218: R. v. Hensey, 19 St. Tr. 1341; 1 Burr. 642; R. v. De la Motte, 21 St. Tr. 808: R. v. Lord Preston, 12 St. Tr. 645: R. v. Tyrie, 21 St. Tr. 815; all these are cases containing counts for adhering to the King's enemies, and the parties were guilty of high treason. See also the following Irish cases: R. v. Jackson, 25 St. Tr. 783: R. v. Sheares, 27 St. Tr. 255: R. v. Cann, Id. 399: R. v. Byrne, Id. 455: R. v. Bond, Id. 523. And where letters, etc., have been thus intercepted, it is much better to charge them to have been sent from the place where the venue was laid, to be delivered in parts beyond the seas, to the enemy, according to the fact, than to state them to have been sent in partes transmarinas, to be delivered to the enemy. Fost. 218. In R. v. Stone, 25 St. Tr. 1155; 6 T. R. 527, it was objected that the intelligence transmitted by the defendant to the enemy was calculated to dissuade them from invading this country, and was sent with that intent; but Lord Kenyon, C.J., said that whether the intelligence were calculated to dissuade or invite the enemy was immaterial; if it were such as was likely to prove useful to them, in enabling them to annoy us, defend themselves, or shape their attacks; sending such intelligence with a view of its reaching the enemy was undoubtedly high treason. If a British subject incite foreigners to invade this country, it is treason, whether the foreigners be enemies or not; if enemies, it is treason within this branch of the statute; if not enemies, still it is an overt act of compassing the King's death. Fost. 196, 197; 1 Hale, 167. But if a British subject be in a foreign country when war breaks out between that country and this, and continue to reside there, or if during a truce he go to a foreign country, and return before the truce expires, this is no treason, unless he actually conspire with the enemy, or aid him in forwarding his measures for hostility. 1 Hale, 165, 166. Serving in war the king de facto is not treason. 11 H. 7, c. 1 (ante, p. 929). This statute appears not to apply in South Africa. R. v. Botha, 1 Searle, Cape Supreme Ct. 149.

Swearing fealty to a hostile power.]—If an Englishman during war between the King of England and France be taken by the French, and there swear fealty to the King of France, if it be done voluntarily, it is an adhering to the King's enemies; but if it be done for fear of his life, and he returns, as soon as he might, to the allegiance of the Crown of England, this is not an adherence to the King's enemies within the Act. 1 Hale, 167. And in R. v. Lynch [1903] 1 K. B. 444; 20 Cox, 468, the prisoner, a British subject, during the war between Great Britain and the South African Republic, subscribed a declaration of willingness to take up arms on behalf of and took an oath of allegiance to the South African Republic. He then obtained letters of naturalization from the South African Republic, and afterwards engaged in various acts of warfare against the British forces. He was indicted in the King's Bench Division of the High Court for high treason, viz., for adhering to the enemies of the late Queen, and the making of the aforesaid declaration and the taking of the aforesaid oath of allegiance were charged as overt acts, as were his various acts of warfare against the British forces in which he subsequently engaged. It was contended for the defence that the prisoner had by reason of the provisions of the Naturalization Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 14) ss. 4, 6, been guilty of no offence; but the court (Lord Alverstone, C.J., Wills and Channell, JJ.) held that the last mentioned statute does not empower a British subject to become naturalized as a subject of a hostile state in time of war, and that the act of becoming naturalized under such circumstances is itself an act of treason.

Enemies.]—As to the King's enemies within the meaning of this statute;—the subjects of all states against which his Majesty may have proclaimed or declared war, are his enemies; so are the subjects of states in actual hostility with us, whether war have been solemnly proclaimed or not. Fost. 219; 1 Hale, 162. But merely issuing letters of marque does not create a state of hostility between two states, although nearly equal to a state of war in its consequences. 1 Hale, 162. Nor is inciting the subjects of a state in amity with us to invade this country, treason within this branch of the statute, although it certainly would be an overt act of compassing the King's death. 1 Hale, 167. But if the subjects of a state in amity with us were to invade the country in a hostile manner, or otherwise commit hostilities against us, they would be enemies within the meaning of this statute, and adhering to them would be treason. Fost. 219; 1 Hale, 164; 3 Co. Inst. 11; 4 Co. Inst. 162: R. v. Vaughan, 2 Salk. 634; 13 St. Tr. 485. British subjects, however, can never be deemed the King's enemies within the meaning of this Act, and therefore to give relief or assistance to a rebel would not be treason within this branch of the statute. 3 Co. Inst. 11; 1 Hale, 159; 1 Hawk. c. 17, s. 28.

It must appear upon the face of the indictment that the persons adhered to were enemies.

Form of a Count on the Treason Act, 1795 (36 G. 3, c. 7), s. 1 (ante, p. 933), for compassing, etc., the Death or Destruction of the King.

And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present that the said J. S., being a subject of our said lord the King, not regarding the duty of his allegiance, [nor having the fear of God in his heart, but being moved and seduced by the instigation of the devil,] as a false traitor against our said lord the King, and wholly withdrawing the allegiance, fidelity and obedience which every true and faithful subject of our said lord the King should and of right ought to bear towards our said lord the King, on the first day of June, in the year last aforesaid, and on divers other days and times as well before as after, maliciously and traitorously, together with divers other false traitors, to the jurors aforesaid unknown, did compass, imagine, invent, devise, and intend the death and destruction of our said sovereign lord the King; and the said compassing, imagination, invention, device, and intention did then express, utter and declare, by divers overt acts and deeds hereinafter mentioned, that is to say: IN ORDER TO FULFIL, PERFECT, AND BRING TO EFFECT his most evil and wicked treason, and treasonable compassing, imagination, invention, device and intention aforesaid [etc., etc., setting out the overt acts and concluding the count as in the form ante, p. 465].

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126). As to punishment, see 54 G. 3, c. 146; 57 G. 3, c. 6, s. 6 (ante, pp. 934, 935).

TREASON FELONY.

Statutes.

11 & 12 Vict. c. 12 (Treason Felony Act, 1848), s. 3.]—If any person whatsoever after the passing of this Act (April 22, 1848) shall, within the United Kingdom or without, compass, imagine, invent, devise, or intend to deprive or depose our most gracious [lord] the [King], his heirs or successors, from the style, honour, or royal name, of the imperial crown of the United Kingdom, or of any other of [his] Majesty's dominions and countries, or to levy war against [his] Majesty, his heirs or successors, within any part of the United Kingdom, in order by force or constraint to compel [him] or them to change [his] or their measures or counsels, or in order to put any force or constraint upon, or in order to intimidate or overawe both houses or either house of parliament, or to move or stir any foreigner or stranger with force to invade the United Kingdom, or any other [his] Majesty's dominions or countries under the obeisance of [his] Majesty, his heirs or successors, and such compassings, imaginations, inventions, devices or intentions, or any of them, shall express, utter, or declare by publishing any printing or writing, or by open and advised speaking, or by any overt act or deed, every person so offending shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be transported beyond the seas for the term of his or her natural life. . . .

Sect. 8—Punishment of accessories.]—In the case of every felony punishable under this Act, every principal in the second degree, and every accessory before the fact, shall be punishable in the same manner as the principal in the first degree is by this Act punishable: and every accessory after the fact to any such felony shall on conviction be liable to be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding two years.

Sect. 10—No costs to prosecutor or witnesses.]—It shall not be lawful for any court before which any person shall be prosecuted or tried for any felony under this Act, to order payment to the prosecutor or the witnesses of any costs which shall be incurred in preferring or prosecuting any such indictment. [See ante, p. 246.]

Indictment. (11 & 12 Vict. c. 12, s. 3, ante, p. 948.)

Central Criminal Court, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present, that J. S., A. B., and C. D., not regarding the duty of their allegiance, but wholly withdrawing the love, obedience, fidelity and allegiance which every true and faithful subject of our said lord the King does and of right ought to bear towards our said lord the King, at the parish of A., in the county of L. and within the jurisdiction of the said court, on the first day of June, in the year of our Lord ——, and on divers other days as well before as after that day, together with divers other evil-disposed persons to the jurors aforesaid unknown, feloniously and wickedly did compass, imagine, invent, devise, and intend to deprive and depose our said lord the King from the style, honour, and royal name of the imperial crown of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; and the said felonious compassing, imagination, invention, device, and intention, then feloniously and wickedly did express, utter, and declare by divers overt acts and deeds hereinafter mentioned, that is to say:—In order to fulfil, perfect, and bring to effect their felonious compassing, imagination, invention, device, and intention aforesaid, they the said J. S., A. B., and C. D. afterwards, to wit, on the said first day of June, in the year aforesaid, and on divers other days and times as well before as after that day, feloniously and wickedly did conspire, consult, confederate, assemble and meet together with divers other evil-disposed persons to the jurors aforesaid unknown, to raise, make and levy insurrection and rebellion against our said lord the King within this realm: and further to fulfil, perfect, and bring to effect [etc., proceeding to state other overt acts in the like manner; and conclude the count thus]: in contempt of our said lord the King and his laws, to the evil example of all others in the like case offending; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. Add counts charging a compassing to levy war, in order to compel the King to change his measures and counsels, or otherwise according to the facts. If the overt acts consisted in the publishing of any printing or writing, state them thus:—"did express, utter and declare, by then feloniously publishing in a certain newspaper, called the ——, certain printed matter, that is to say" [setting it out]. Where the indictment charges the prisoners with "compassing, imagining, inventing, devising and intending to deprive and depose our lord the King," etc., it is sufficient to allege as an overt act that the prisoners conspired to commit that offence. Mulcahy v. R., L. R. 3 H. L. 306; Ir. Rep. 1 C. L. 12. Where there are several overt acts charged in one count, and a judgment is given on a general verdict of guilty on that count, such judgment will be sustained, though some of the matters alleged as overt acts may be improperly so alleged, provided that the count contains allegations of overt acts that are sufficient, and are sufficiently alleged. Id. The allegation, in one count, of several different overt acts of felony, is not objectionable under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 12. Id. Sending or supplying arms to be used in aid of a treasonable confederacy, having for its object the overthrow of the King's government, in any part of the United Kingdom, by force of arms, is a sufficient overt act expressing a compassing to depose or deprive the King. And it is not the less so because the arms are sold, and the motive of the sale is pecuniary profit, provided it is known that they are to be used in aid of insurrection. Secret storing of arms and sending them, under feigned addresses, into districts where the confederacy exists, with various contrivances to conceal their ultimate destination, and with knowledge of the confederacy, is evidence of the offence. And bringing arms to London, with a view to their transmission for such purpose, is a sufficient overt act within the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court. R. v. Davitt, 11 Cox, 676.

Sect. 5—Penalty on leaving [his] Majesty's dominions with intent to serve a foreign state.]—If any person, without the licence of [his] Majesty, being a British subject, quits or goes on board any ship with a view of quitting [his] Majesty's dominions, with intent to accept any commission or engagement in the military or naval service of any foreign state at war with a friendly state, or, whether a British subject or not, within [his] Majesty's dominions, induces any other person to quit or to go on board any ship with a view of quitting [his] Majesty's dominions with the like intent, he shall be guilty of an offence against this Act, and shall be punishable by fine and imprisonment, or either of such punishments, at the discretion of the court before which the offender is convicted; and imprisonment, if awarded, may be either with or without hard labour.

Provided that a person building, causing to be built, or equipping a ship in any of the cases aforesaid, in pursuance of a contract made before the commencement of such war as aforesaid, shall not be liable to any of the penalties imposed by this section in respect of such building or equipping if he satisfies the conditions following; (that is to say):

(1) If forthwith upon a proclamation of neutrality being issued by [his] Majesty he gives notice to the secretary of state that he is so building, causing to be built, or equipping such ship, and furnishes such particulars of the contract and of any matters relating to, or done, or to be done under the contract as may be required by the secretary of state;

(2) All ships, and their equipments, and all arms and munitions of war, used in or forming part of such expedition, shall be forfeited to [his] Majesty.

[It is not necessary to constitute an offence under this section that the expedition should be completely fitted out in this country. Any act of preparation of the expedition in this country is within the section. R. v. Sandoval, 16 Cox, 206; 3 T. L. R. 411, 436, 498. Therefore where the defendant had purchased guns and ammunition in this country, and had shipped them on a general ship here for the purpose of being put on board another ship in a foreign port, with the knowledge that they were to be used in a hostile demonstration against a friendly state, it was held that he was guilty of having prepared a naval expedition within the meaning of this section. Id.

If an expedition is unlawfully prepared within the King's dominions, a British subject who assists therein, even without such dominions, is liable under this section. R. v. Jameson [1896] 2 Q. B. 425; 65 L. J. (M. C.) 218; and see The Salvador, L. R. 3 P. C. 218: Att.-Gen. v. Sillem, 2 H. & C. 431, decided on 59 G. 3, c. 69, s. 7 (rep.).]

Sect. 13—Limitation of term of imprisonment.]—The term of imprisonment to be awarded in respect of any offence against this Act shall not exceed two years.

Sect. 14 relates to the restoration of prize brought into British waters in breach of the neutrality of the realm, or by vessels equipped in breach of the Act.

Sect. 15—Licence by [his] Majesty, how granted.]—For the purposes of this Act, a licence by [his] Majesty shall be under the sign manual of [his] Majesty, or be signified by order in council or by proclamation of [his] Majesty.

Sect. 16—Jurisdiction in respect of offences by persons against Act.]—Any offence against this Act shall, for all purposes of and incidental to the trial and punishment of any person guilty of any such offence, be deemed to have been committed either in the place in which the offence was wholly or partly committed, or in any place within [his] Majesty's dominions in which the person who committed such offence may be.

Sect. 17—Venue in respect of offences by persons.]—Any offence against this Act may be described in any indictment or other document relating to such offence, in cases where the mode of trial requires such a description, as having been committed at the place where it was wholly or partly committed, or it may be averred generally to have been committed within [his] Majesty's dominions, and the venue or local description in the margin may be that of the county, city, or place in which the trial is held. [As to the necessary statements in the indictment, see R. v. Jameson [1896] 2 Q. B. 425; 65 L. J. (M. C.) 218; 18 Cox, 392.]

Sect. 18—Power to remove offenders for trial.]—The following authorities, that is to say, in the United Kingdom any judge of a superior court, in any other place within the jurisdiction of any British court of justice, such court, or, if there are more courts than one, the court having the highest criminal jurisdiction in that place, may, by warrant, or instrument in the nature of a warrant in this section included in the term "warrant," direct that any offender charged with an offence against this Act shall be removed to some other place in [his] Majesty's dominions for trial in cases where it appears to the authority granting the warrant that the removal of such offender would be conducive to the interests of justice, and any prisoner so removed shall be triable at the place to which he is removed, in the same manner as if his offence had been committed at such place. Any warrant for the purposes of this section may be addressed to the master of any ship or to any other person or persons, and the person or persons to whom such warrant is addressed shall have power to convey the prisoner therein named to any place or places named in such warrant, and to deliver him, when arrived at such place or places, into the custody of any authority designated by such warrant. Every prisoner shall, during the time of his removal under any such warrant as aforesaid, be deemed to be in the legal custody of the person or persons empowered to remove him.

Sect. 19—Jurisdiction in respect of forfeiture of ships for offences against Act.]—All proceedings for the condemnation and forfeiture of a ship, or ship and equipment, or arms and munitions of war, in pursuance of this Act shall require the sanction of the secretary of state or such chief executive authority as is in this Act mentioned, and shall be had in the Court of Admiralty, and not in any other court; and the Court of Admiralty shall, in addition to any power given to the court by this Act, have in respect of any ship or other matter brought before it in pursuance of this Act all powers which it has in the case of a ship or matter brought before it in the exercise of its ordinary jurisdiction.

Sect. 20—Regulations as to proceedings against the offender and against the ship.]—Where any offence against this Act has been committed by any person by reason whereof a ship, or ship and equipment, or arms and munitions of war, has or have become liable to forfeiture, proceedings may be instituted contemporaneously or not, as may be thought fit, against the offender in any court having jurisdiction of the offence, and against the ship, or ship and equipment, or arms and munitions of war, for the forfeiture in the Court of Admiralty; but it shall not be necessary to take proceedings against the offender because proceedings are instituted for the forfeiture, or to take proceedings for the forfeiture because proceedings are taken against the offender.

Sects. 21–26 relate to seizure of ships and search of ships and dockyards; s. 27, to appeals from decisions of Admiralty Court; ss. 28, 29, to protection of officers and secretary of state. The secretary of state for foreign affairs at present (1905) exercises the power of issuing warrants given by s. 23.

General Provisions.

Statute.

Until 1832 (2 & 3 W. 4, c. 34), counterfeiting the King's gold or silver money was high treason under 25 Edw. 3, st. 5, c. 2 (ante, p. 928). 1 Hale, 211; 1 East, P. C. 159; 1 Hawk. c. 17, s. 57; 2 Chit. Cr. L. 103, n. The only relics of the old law are the unrepealed provisions of 6 G. 3, c. 53, s. 3, and 6 G. 4, c. 50, s. 21, that the procedure on the trial of high treason is not to apply to treason by counterfeiting coin.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 99 (Coinage Offences Act, 1861), s. 1—Interpretation of terms.]—In the interpretation of and for the purposes of this Act,

Current gold and silver coin]—the expression "the [King's] current gold or silver coin" shall include any gold or silver coin coined in any of [his] Majesty's mints or lawfully current, by virtue of any proclamation or otherwise, in any part of [his] Majesty's dominions, whether within the United Kingdom or otherwise;

Current copper coin]—and the expression "the [King's] copper coin" shall include any copper coin and any coin of bronze or mixed metal coined in any of [his] Majesty's mints, or lawfully current, by virtue of any proclamation or otherwise, in any part of [his] Majesty's said dominions;

False or counterfeit coin]—and the expression "false or counterfeit coin resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any of the [King's] current gold or silver coin" shall include any of the current coin which shall have been gilt, silvered, washed, coloured, or cased over, or in any manner altered so as to resemble, or be apparently intended to resemble, or pass for, any of the [King's] current coin of a higher denomination;

Current coin]—and the expression "the [King's] current coin" shall include any coin coined in any of [his] Majesty's mints, or lawfully current, by virtue of any proclamation or otherwise, in any part of [his] Majesty's said dominions, and whether made of gold, silver, copper, bronze, or mixed metal. [This definition of "current coin" was new in 1861. It includes colonial coin. As to offences in colonies, see 16 & 17 Vict. c. 48. It does not include token coinage

(see 33 & 34 Vict. c. 10, s. 5), but does include foreign coin lawfully current. See Chalmers, Colonial Currency; and for the proclamations in force at the end of 1903, making certain coin current in different parts of the King's dominions, see Statutory Rules and Orders Revised (ed. 1904), vol. 2, tits. "Coin," and "Coin, Colonies." Those since issued are to be found in the subsequent annual volumes of the Statutory Rules and Orders. These works being published "by authority" can be put in evidence in the manner provided ante, p. 348.]

Criminal possession]—and where the having any matter in the custody or possession of any person is mentioned in this Act, it shall include not only the having of it by himself in his personal custody or possession, but also the knowingly and wilfully having it in the actual custody or possession of any other person, and also the knowingly and wilfully having it in any dwelling-house or other building, lodging, apartment, field, or other place, open or inclosed, whether belonging to or occupied by himself or not, and whether such matter shall be so had for his own use or benefit or for that of any other person. [This section re-enacts 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 34, s. 21, and 22 & 23 Vict. c. 30, with the additions italicized. The definition of "possession" was altered to get rid of doubts expressed in R. v. Rogers, 2 Mood. C. C. 85: R. v. Gerrish, 2 M. & Rob. 219: and R. v. Williams, C. & Mar. 259.]

Sect. 28—Venue for uttering.]—Where any person shall tender, utter, or put off any false or counterfeit coin in one county or jurisdiction, and shall also tender, utter, or put off any other false or counterfeit coin in any other county or jurisdiction, either on the day of such first-mentioned tendering, uttering, or putting off, or within the space of ten days next ensuing, or where two or more persons, acting in concert in different counties or jurisdictions, shall commit any offence against this Act, every such offender may be dealt with, indicted, tried, and punished, and the offence laid and charged to have been committed, in any one of the said counties or jurisdictions, in the same manner in all respects as if the offence had been actually and wholly committed within such one county or jurisdiction. [See ante, pp. 44, 47. The latter part of this section re-enacts 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 34, s. 15. The italicized part was new in 1861.]

Sect. 29—Proof of coin being counterfeit.]—Where, upon the trial of any person charged with any offence against this Act, it shall be necessary to prove that any coin produced in evidence against such person is false or counterfeit, it shall not be necessary to prove the same to be false and counterfeit by the evidence of any moneyer or other officer of [his] Majesty's Mint, but it shall be sufficient to prove the same to be false or counterfeit by the evidence of any other credible witness. [This section re-enacts 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 34, s. 17.]

Sect. 30—When the counterfeiting shall be complete.]—Every offence of falsely making or counterfeiting any coin, or of buying, selling, receiving, paying, tendering, uttering, or putting off, or of offering to buy, sell, receive, pay, utter, or put off, any false or counterfeit coin, against the provisions of this Act, shall be deemed to be complete, although the coin so made or counterfeited, or bought, sold, received, paid, tendered, uttered, or put off, or offered to be bought, sold, received, paid, uttered, or put off, shall not be in a fit state to be uttered, or the counterfeiting thereof shall not be finished or perfected. [This section re-enacts 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 34, s. 3, with the additions in italics, inserted to overrule R. v. Bradford, 2 Cr. & Dix. (Ir. Circ. Rep.) 41.]

Sect. 31—Apprehension of offenders.]—It shall be lawful for any person whatsoever to apprehend any person who shall be found committing any indictable offence, or any high crime and offence, or crime and offence, against this Act, and to convey or deliver him to some peace officer, constable, or officer of police, in order to his being conveyed as soon as reasonably may be before a justice of the peace or some other proper officer, to be dealt with according to law. [This was new law in 1861.]

Sect. 35—Accessories, etc.]—In the case of every felony punishable under the Act, every principal in the second degree and every accessory before the fact, shall be punishable in the same manner as the principal in the first degree is by this Act punishable; and every accessory after the fact to any felony punishable under this Act shall be liable to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. [This section re-enacts 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 34, s. 18; and see "Accessories," post, Book II. Part IV.]

Sect. 36—Admiralty offences.]—All indictable offences mentioned in this Act which shall be committed within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England or Ireland shall be deemed to be offences of the same nature and liable to the same punishments as if they had been committed upon the land in England or Ireland, and may be dealt with, inquired of, tried and determined in any county or place in England or Ireland in which the offender shall be apprehended or be in custody, in the same manner in all respects as if the same had been actually committed in that county or place; and in any indictment for any such offence, or for being accessory to any such offence, the venue in the margin shall be the same as if such offence had been committed in such county or place, and the offence itself shall be averred to have been committed "on the high seas;" and where any of the crimes and offences, or high crimes and offences, mentioned in this Act, shall be committed at sea, and the vessel in which the same shall be committed shall be registered in Scotland, or touch at any part thereof, the courts of criminal law of Scotland may inquire, try, and determine the same in the same manner as if such crime and offence, or high crime and offence, had been committed in Scotland; provided that nothing herein contained shall alter or affect any of the laws relating to the government of [his] Majesty's land or naval forces. [This section re-enacts 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 34, s. 20; and 7 & 8 Vict. c. 2, with the addition of the provisions as to Scotland.]

Sect. 37—Proof of former convictions.]—Where any person shall have been convicted of any offence against this Act, or any former Act relating to the coin, and shall afterwards be indicted for any offence against this Act committed subsequent to such conviction, it shall be sufficient in any such indictment, after charging such subsequent offence, to state the substance and effect only (omitting the formal part) of the indictment and conviction for the previous offence; and a certificate containing the substance and effect only (omitting the formal part) of the indictment and conviction for the previous offence, purporting to be signed by the clerk of the court or other officer having or purporting to have the custody of the records of the court where the offender was first convicted, or by the deputy of such clerk or officer, shall, upon proof of the identity of the person of the offender, be sufficient evidence of the previous conviction, without proof of the signature or official character or authority of the person appearing to have signed the same, or of his custody or right to the custody of the records of the court; and for every such certificate a fee of six shillings and eightpence, and no more, shall be demanded or taken; and the proceedings upon any indictment for committing any offence after a previous conviction or convictions shall be as follows; (that is to say), the offender shall, in the first instance, be arraigned upon so much only of the indictment, as charges the subsequent offence, and if he plead not guilty, or if the court order a plea of not guilty to be entered on his behalf, the jury shall he charged, in the first instance, to inquire concerning such subsequent offence only; and if they find him guilty, or if on arraignment he plead guilty, he shall then, and not before, be asked whether he had been previously convicted as alleged in the indictment, and if he answer that he had been so previously convicted the court may proceed to sentence him accordingly; but if he deny that he had been so previously convicted, or stand mute of malice, or will not answer directly to such question, the jury shall then be charged to inquire concerning such previous conviction or convictions, and in such case it shall not be necessary to swear the jury again, but the oath already taken by them shall for all purposes be deemed to extend to such last-mentioned inquiry; Provided that if upon the trial of any person for any such subsequent offence such person shall give evidence of his good character, it shall be lawful for the prosecutor in answer thereto to give evidence of the conviction of such person for the previous offence or offences, before such verdict of guilty shall be returned, and the jury shall inquire concerning such previous conviction or convictions at the same time that they inquire concerning such subsequent offence. [This section was new law in 1861. As to alternative modes of proving previous convictions, see ante, p. 360.]

Sect. 38—Fine and sureties.]—Whenever any person shall be convicted of any indictable misdemeanor punishable under this Act, the court may, if it shall think fit, in addition to or in lieu of any of the punishments by this Act authorized, fine the offender, and require him to enter into his own recognizances, and to find sureties, both or either, for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour; and in case of any felony punishable under this Act, the court may, if it shall think fit, require the offender to enter into his own recognizances, and to find sureties, both or either, for keeping the peace, in addition to any punishment by this Act authorized; Provided that no person shall be imprisoned under this clause for not finding sureties for any period exceeding one year. [This clause was new law in 1861.]

Sect. 42—Costs of prosecutions.]—In all prosecutions for any offence against this Act in England, which shall be conducted under the direction of the solicitors of [his] Majesty's Treasury, the court before which such offence shall be prosecuted or tried shall allow the expenses of the prosecution in all respects as in cases of felony;

And in all prosecutions for any such offence in England which shall not be so conducted it shall be lawful for such court, in case a conviction shall take place, but not otherwise, to allow the expenses of the prosecution in like manner; and every order for the payment of such costs shall be made out, and the sum of money mentioned therein paid and repaid, upon the same terms and in the same manner in all respects as in cases of felony. [See ante, p. 246, et seq.]

COUNTERFEITING COIN.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 99 (Coinage Offences Act, 1861), s. 2—The [King's] gold or silver coin.]—Whosoever shall falsely make or counterfeit any coin resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any of the [King's] current gold or silver coin, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for life. . . . Sect. 14—The [King's] copper coin.]—Whosoever shall falsely make or counterfeit any coin resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any of the [King's] current copper coin . . . shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding seven years. . . . [This provision re-enacts 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 34, s. 12. For the rest of the section, see post, pp. 970, 980.]

Sect. 18—Foreign gold and silver coin.]—Whosoever shall make or counterfeit any kind of coin not being the [King's] current gold or silver coin, but resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any gold or silver coin of any foreign prince, state, or country, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding seven years. . . . [This section re-enacts 37 G. 3, c. 126, s. 2.]

Sect. 22—Other foreign coin.]—Whosoever shall falsely make or counterfeit any kind of coin not being the [King's] current coin, but resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any copper coin, or any other coin made of any metal or mixed metals of less value than the silver coin, of any foreign prince, state, or country, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . for the first offence to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding one year, and for the second offence to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding seven years. . . . [This section re-enacts 43 G. 3, c. 139, s. 3.]

Central Criminal Court, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King on their oath present that J. S., on the first day of June, in the year of our Lord ——, at the parish of A., in the county of L., and within the jurisdiction of the said court, ten pieces of [false and counterfeit] coin, each piece thereof resembling and apparently intended to resemble and pass for ("resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for") a piece of the King's current gold ("gold or silver") coin, called a sovereign, falsely and feloniously did make and counterfeit ("make or counterfeit"); against the form [as ante, p. 465]. The words "false and counterfeit" appeared in the precedent in editions of this work prior to the 22nd: but seem unnecessary, and are not in the clauses of the Act. As to the venue, see ante, pp. 44, 47, 960.

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 2; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 38 (ante, p. 962).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

An indictment for counterfeiting foreign coin, or the King's copper coin, can be framed from the above form, with the necessary changes.

Felonies: penal servitude for not less than three nor more than seven years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for not more than two years. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, ss. 14, 18; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1 (ante, p. 235). As to recognizances and sureties, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 38 (ante, p. 962).

These offences are not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

It is rarely the case that the counterfeiting can be proved directly by positive evidence; it is usually made out by circumstantial evidence, such as finding the necessary coining tools in the defendant's house, together with some pieces of the counterfeit money in a finished, some in an unfinished state, or such other circumstances as may fairly warrant the jury in presuming that the defendant either counterfeited, or caused to be counterfeited, or was present aiding and abetting in counterfeiting the coin in question. Under the present statutes only the party who actually counterfeits would be the principal felon, and the others accessories before the fact, although triable as principals; see ante, pp. 16–19, 961. Before the modern statutes which reduced the offence of coining from treason to felony, if several conspired to counterfeit the King's coin, and one of them actually did so in pursuance of the conspiracy, it was treason in all, and they might have all been indicted for counterfeiting the King's coin generally. 1 Hale, 214.

A variance between the indictment and the evidence, in the number of the pieces of coin alleged to be counterfeited, is immaterial; but a variance as to the denomination of such coin, as sovereigns, shillings, pennies, etc., would be fatal unless amended. See ante, p. 296, et seq.

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 30 (ante, p. 960), the offence of counterfeiting is to be deemed complete, although the coin made or counterfeited is not in a fit state to be uttered, or the counterfeiting thereof is not finished or perfected. See R. v. Hermann, 4 Q. B. D. 284; 48 L. J. (M. C.) 106; 14 Cox, 279 (post, p. 975), from which it would appear that the addition of a new milling to a genuine sovereign, which has been fraudulently filed at the edges so as to reduce its weight and destroy the original milling, is the counterfeiting of a sovereign, and within s. 2 (ante, p. 963).

By the old law, the counterfeit coin produced in evidence must have appeared to have that degree of resemblance to the real coin, that it would be likely to be received as the coin for which it was intended to pass, by persons using the caution customary in taking money. See R. v. Varley, 2 W. Bl. 682; 1 East, P. C. 164, and R. v. Harris, 1 Leach, 135; 1 Hale, 215: R. v. Wilson, 1 Leach, 285: R. v. Welsh, Id. 364. In R. v. Byrne, 6 Cox, 475 (Ir.), where the alleged coin bore some resemblance to a good half-sovereign, with Queen Victoria's head on one side and on the other the Prince of Wales' plume, and an inscription, "Prince of Wales' model half-sovereign," the court ruled that it was for the jury to say whether it resembled or was intended to resemble current coin, and to pass as such, or was merely meant as a card-marker, counter, or medal.

Any credible witness may prove the coin to be counterfeit, and it is not necessary for this purpose to produce any moneyer or other officer from the Mint. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99 s. 29 (ante, p. 960).

If it become a question whether the coin which the counterfeit money was intended to imitate be the King's coin, it is not necessary to produce the proclamation to prove its legitimation; it is a mere question of fact to be left to the jury upon evidence of usage, reputation, etc. 1 Hale, 196, 212, 213. As to the proclamations and their proof, see ante, pp. 348, 351, 960.

It is not necessary to prove that the counterfeit coin was uttered or attempted to be uttered. 1 Hale, 215, 229; 3 Co. Inst. 16; 1 East, P. C. 165.

COLOURING, ETC., COIN OF THE REALM.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 99 (Coinage Offences Act, 1861), s. 3.]—Whosoever shall gild or silver, or shall with any wash or materials capable of producing the colour or appearance of gold or of silver, or by any means whatsoever wash, case over, or colour any coin whatsoever resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any of the [King's] current gold or silver coin; or shall gild or silver, or shall, with any wash or materials capable of producing the colour or appearance of gold or of silver, or by any means whatsoever wash, case over, or colour any piece of silver or copper, or of coarse gold or coarse silver, or of any metal or mixture of metals respectively, being of a fit size and figure to be coined, and with intent that the same shall be coined into false and counterfeit coin resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any of the [King's] current gold or silver coin; or shall gild, or shall, with any wash or materials capable of producing the colour or appearance of gold, or by any means whatsoever wash, case over, or colour any of the [King's] current silver coin, or file or in any manner alter such coin, with intent to make the same resemble or pass for any of the [King's] current gold coin; or shall gild or silver, or shall, with any wash or materials capable of producing the colour or appearance of gold or silver, or by any means whatsoever wash, case over, or colour any of the [King's] current copper coin, or file or in any manner alter such coin, with intent to make the same resemble or pass for any of the [King's] current gold or silver coin, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for life. . . .

This section re-enacts 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 34, s. 4, with the additions italicized. The introduction of the words "capable of producing" and "by any means whatsoever" appear to remove the doubts expressed on 8 & 9 W. 3, c. 26, s. 4 (rep.), and 12 G. 2, c. 28 (rep.), as to whether the word "colouring" was confined to superficial application. See R. v. Lavey, 1 Leach, 153; 1 East, P. C. 166.]

Commencement as ante, p. 963]—feloniously did gild ("gild or silver") [or wash ("by any means whatsoever wash, case over, or colour") with a certain wash ("any wash or materials") capable of producing the colour and appearance of gold ("gold or silver")] a certain false and counterfeit coin resembling ("resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for") a certain piece of the King's current gold coin ("any of the King's current gold or silver coin") called a sovereign; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. As to the venue, see ante, pp. 43, 47, 960. In earlier editions of this work the words "falsely and deceitfully" appear in precedents for indictments for coinage offences; they have been omitted from the present edition in all cases where they are not in the statute creating the offence, as being clearly unnecessary. See 3 Chit. Cr. L. 1042.

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 3; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 38 (ante, p. 962).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove the gilding, etc., or colouring, as stated in the indictment. In R. v. Case, 1 Leach, 154, n; 1 East, P. C. 165, the defendant was apprehended in the act of making counterfeit shillings, by steeping round blanks, composed of brass and silver, in aqua fortis, none of which were finished, but exhibited the appearance of lead, though by rubbing they readily acquired the appearance of silver, and would pass current; a conviction under 12 G. 2, c. 28 (rep.), was held to be right. Under 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 34 (rep.), it was held that where a wash or material is alleged to have been used by the defendant, it must be shown either from the application by the defendant, or from an examination of their properties, that they are capable of producing the colour of gold or silver. But an indictment, charging the use of such material, will be supported by proof of a colouring with gold itself. R. v. Turner, 2 Mood. C. C. 32.

Indictment for colouring Metal, etc. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 3, ante, p. 965.)

Commencement as ante, p. 963]—feloniously did gild ("gild or silver") [or wash ("by any means whatsoever wash, case over, or colour") with a certain wash ("any wash or materials") capable of producing the colour and appearance of gold ("gold or silver")] ten pieces of silver ("any piece of silver or copper, or of coarse gold, or coarse silver, or of any metal or mixture of metals"), each piece thereof being respectively of a fit size and figure to be coined, and with intent that each of the said pieces of silver respectively should be coined into false and counterfeit coin resembling ("resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for") a piece of the King's current gold coin, called a sovereign; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

2 & 3 W. 4, c. 34, s. 4 (rep.), applied also to the gilding or colouring of any silver coin, with intent to make the same resemble or pass for gold coin, and to gilding or colouring any copper coin, with intent to make the same resemble or pass for gold or silver coin. An indictment under 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 34 (rep.), charging the gilding of sixpences "with materials capable of producing the colour of gold" was held good, and to be supported by proof of colouring sixpences with gold. R. v. Turner, 2 Mood. C. C. 42.

Felony: 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 3. See the last precedent.

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove the colouring, etc., as in the last case, and the intent as stated in the indictment. For this purpose it may be proved that the defendant had the instruments for coining, or that other counterfeit money was found in his possession, or other circumstances may be given in evidence from which the jury may infer the intent. (See ante, pp. 303, 308–312, 340.)

Indictment for filing or altering the King's Coin. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 3, ante, p. 965.)

Commencement as ante, p. 963]—ten pieces of the King's current silver coin, called sixpences, feloniously did file ("file, or in any manner alter"), with intent to make each of the said pieces respectively resemble ("resemble or pass for") a piece of the King's current gold coin called a half-sovereign; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

Felony: 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 3. See the last precedent but one. The statute also applies to the filing or altering any of the King's copper money, with intent to make the same resemble or pass for any of the King's current gold or silver coin.

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove the filing and altering as stated in the indictment, and the intent by circumstances from which it may be inferred by the jury. (See ante, pp. 303, 308–312, 340.

IMPAIRING, ETC., BRITISH GOLD AND SILVER COIN.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 99 (Coinage Offences Act, 1861), s. 4.]—Whosoever shall impair, diminish, or lighten any of the [King's] current gold or silver coin, with intent that the coin so impaired, diminished, or lightened, may pass for the [King's] current gold or silver coin, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding fourteen years. . . . [This section re-enacts 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 34, s. 5, with the alterations italicized.]

Sect. 5.—Unlawful possession of filings and clippings of gold or silver coin.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully have in his custody or possession any filings or clippings, or any gold or silver bullion, or any gold or silver in dust, solution, or otherwise, which shall have been produced or obtained by impairing, diminishing, or lightening any of the [King's] current gold or silver coin, knowing the same to have been so produced or obtained, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding seven years. . . . [This section was new law in 1861.]

Commencement as ante, p. 963]—ten pieces of the King's current gold ("gold or silver") coin, called sovereigns, feloniously did impair ("impair, diminish, or lighten") with intent that each of the said pieces so impaired [diminished and lightened] might pass for a piece of the King's current gold ("gold or silver") coin called a sovereign; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. As to the venue, see ante, pp. 43, 47, 960.

Felony: penal servitude for not more than fourteen and not less than three years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 4; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 88 (ante, p. 962).

Evidence.

Prove the impairing, etc., by direct or presumptive evidence, as that the defendant was in possession of filings of impaired coin, or of the instruments for filing. Prove, also, the intent, by evidence from which it may be inferred by the jury; as, for instance, that the defendant attempted to pass the coin, or had passed other coin so impaired, or that he carried it about with him mixed with other money, particularly if it was not so impaired as apparently to affect its currency.

DEFACING BRITISH COIN.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 99 (Coinage Offences Act, 1861), s. 16.]—Whosoever shall deface any of the [King's] current gold, silver, or copper coin, by stamping thereon any names or words, whether such coin shall or shall not be thereby diminished or lightened, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and in Scotland of a crime and an offence, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding one year, with or without hard labour. [This section re-enacts 16 & 17 Vict. c. 102, s. 1, with certain omissions.]

Sect. 17—Defaced coin not legal tender—Prosecution.]—No tender of payment in money made in any gold, silver, or copper coin so defaced by stamping, as in the last preceding section mentioned, shall be allowed to be a legal tender; and whosoever shall tender, utter, or put off any coin so defaced, shall, on conviction thereof, before two justices, be liable to forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding forty shillings: provided that it shall not be lawful for any person to proceed for any such last-mentioned penalty, without the consent, in England or Ireland, of [his] Majesty's attorney-general for England or Ireland respectively, or in Scotland of the lord advocate. [This section re-enacts 16 & 17 Vict. c. 102, s. 2.]

Indictment for defacing British Coin. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 16.)

Commencement as ante, p. 963]—one piece of the King's current silver ("gold, silver, or copper") coin, called a half-crown, unlawfully [and wilfully] did deface, by then stamping thereon certain names and words ("any names or words"); against the form [as ante, p. 465]. The precedent given in editions of this work prior to the 22nd, contained the words "and wilfully," sed quære, as the words are not in the statute.

Misdemeanor: imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding one year. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 16. As to fining the offender and requiring him to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour, Id. s. 38 (ante, p. 962).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant defaced the coin in question, by stamping on it any names or words, or both. Although the word "wilfully" is not in the present statute, it is submitted that the defacing to be punishable must be not merely accidental. It is not necessary to prove that the coin was thereby diminished or lightened. The defaced coin is no longer a legal tender, and any person uttering it is liable to a penalty not exceeding forty shillings, which, however, cannot be proceeded for without the consent of the attorney-general or lord advocate. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 17 (ante, p. 968).

BUYING OR SELLING, ETC., COUNTERFEIT BRITISH COIN AT A LOWER VALUE.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 99 (Coinage Offences Act, 1861), s. 6—[King's] gold or silver coin.]—Whosoever, without lawful authority or excuse (the proof whereof shall lie on the party accused), shall buy, sell, receive, pay or put off, or offer to buy, sell, receive, pay or put off, any false or counterfeit coin resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any of the [King's] current gold or silver coin, at or for a lower rate of value than the same imports or was apparently intended to import, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for life; . . . and in any indictment for any such offence as in this section aforesaid it shall be sufficient to allege that the party accused did buy, sell, receive, pay, or put off, or did offer to buy, sell, receive, pay, or put off, the false or counterfeit coin at or for a lower rate or value than the same imports or was apparently intended to import, without alleging at or for what rate, price, or value the same was bought, sold, received, paid, or put off, or offered to be bought, sold, received, paid, or put off.

[The first part of this section re-enacts 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 34, s. 6, with the addition of the words in italics to protect officers engaged in detecting offences against the coin. The latter part of the section was new in 1861, and was framed to get rid of the decisions in R. v. Joyce, Car. Supp. 184; 3 C. & P. 411, n.: R. v. Hedges, 3 C. & P. 410; and R. v. Wooldridge, 1 Leach, 307; 1 East, P. C. 179.

Sect. 14—Copper coin.]—Whosoever . . . shall buy, sell, receive, pay, or put off, or offer to buy, sell, receive, pay, or put off, any false or counterfeit coin resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any of the [King's] current copper coin, at or for a lower rate of value than the same imports or was apparently intended to import, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding seven years. . . .

[For other offences created by the section, see ante, p. 963, post, p. 980. The section re-enacts 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 34, s. 12, with the additions italicized.]

Indictment for buying or selling Counterfeit Gold or Silver British Coin at a Lower Rate than by its Denomination it imports. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 6.)

Commencement as ante, p. 963]—ten pieces of false and counterfeit coin, each piece thereof resembling ("resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for") a piece of the King's current gold ("gold or silver") coin, called a sovereign, feloniously and without lawful authority or excuse, did put off ("buy, sell, receive, pay, or put off, or offer to buy, sell, receive, pay, or put off") to one J. N., at and for a lower rate and value than the same did then import ("import or was apparently intended to import"); against the form [as ante, p. 465].

As to the venue, see ante, pp. 43, 47, 960. The indictment need not state at what rate the coin was bought, sold, etc.

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 6; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 38 (ante, p. 962).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s, 1 (ante, p. 126).

The indictment for an offence against 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 14, may be framed from the above form, with the substitution of copper for gold or silver, and change of the denomination. It seems also necessary to state the rate at which copper coin was sold. See R. v. Joyce, Car. Supp. 184.

Felony: penal servitude for not less than three nor more than seven years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for not more than two years. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 15; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1 (ante, p. 235). As to recognizances and sureties, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 38 (ante, p. 962).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant put off, etc., the counterfeit coin, as mentioned in the indictment. By "putting off" is meant an actual passing or getting rid of the coin, and not a mere attempt to do so by tendering to another who refuses to accept and returns it. 1 East, P. C. 179. The proof of lawful authority or excuse for the act lies on the defendant.

It must also be proved that the coin was sold at a lower rate than it imports, but the precise rate at which it was sold need not now be stated in the indictment in the case of gold or silver coin. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 6 (ubi supra).

IMPORTING OR EXPORTING COUNTERFEIT COIN.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 99 (Coinage Offences Act, 1861), s. 7—Importing counterfeit of British gold or silver coin.]—Whosoever, without lawful authority or excuse (the proof whereof shall lie on the party accused), shall import or receive into the United Kingdom from beyond the seas any false or counterfeit coin resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any of the [King's] current gold or silver coin, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for life. . . . [This section re-enacts 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 34, s. 6, with additions italicized.]

Sect. 8—Exporting counterfeit British coin.]—Whosoever, without lawful authority or excuse (the proof whereof shall lie on the party accused), shall export, or put on board any ship, vessel, or boat for the purpose of being exported from the United Kingdom, any false or counterfeit coin resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any of the [King's] current coin, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. . . . [This section was new law in 1861. It appears to apply to counterfeit colonial coin. Greaves, Crim. Law Cons. Acts (2nd ed.), p. 324.]

Sect. 19—Importing foreign counterfeit gold or silver coin.]—Whosoever, without lawful authority or excuse (the proof whereof shall lie on the party accused), shall bring or receive into the United Kingdom any such false or counterfeit coin (i.e. any kind of coin not being the [King's] current gold or silver coin, s. 18) resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any gold or silver coin of any foreign prince, state, or country, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding seven years. . . . [This section re-enacts 37 G. 3, c. 126, s. 3, with the additions italicized.]

39 & 40 Vict. c. 36 (Customs Consolidation Act, 1876), s. 150—Importation of base coin into certain colonies prohibited.]—Base or counterfeit coin is hereby absolutely prohibited to be imported or brought, either by sea or inland carriage or navigation, into the British possessions in America or the Mauritius.

Sect. 151.]—Act to extend to British possessions abroad.

Indictment for importing Counterfeit Gold or Silver Coin. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 7, ante, p. 971.)

Commencement as ante, p. 963]—ten thousand pieces of false and counterfeit coin, each piece thereof resembling ("resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for") a piece of the King's current silver ("gold or silver") coin, called a shilling, feloniously, and without lawful authority or excuse, did import from beyond the seas into that part of the United Kingdom called England, he the said J. S., at the said time when he so imported the said pieces of false and counterfeit coin, well knowing the same to be false and counterfeit; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. As to the venue, see ante, pp. 43, 47, 960.

Felony: 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 7. See the last precedent.

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant imported the counterfeit coin. The terms of s. 7 appear to include importation from any place beyond the seas, whether within or without the King's dominions; but see 1 Hawk. c. 17, s. 87; 1 East, P. C. 175. Prove also the defendant's guilty knowledge: for unless that be averred in the indictment, and proved, it is no offence. 1 Hale, 228; 1 East, P. C. 175. The proof of lawful authority or excuse (if any) lies on the defendant. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 7 (ante, p. 971).

UTTERING COUNTERFEIT COIN.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 99 (Coinage Offences Act, 1861), s. 9—Uttering counterfeit British gold or silver coin.]—Whosoever shall tender, utter or put off any false or counterfeit coin resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any of the [King's] current gold or silver coin, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding one year, with or without hard labour. . . . [This section re-enacts 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 34, s. 7.]

Sect. 10—Uttering counterfeit British coin accompanied by possession of other counterfeit coin, or followed by a second uttering.]—Whosoever shall tender, utter, or put off any false or counterfeit coin resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any of the [King's] current gold or silver coin, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, and shall, at the time of such tendering, uttering or putting off, have in his custody or possession, besides the false or counterfeit coin so tendered, uttered, or put off, any other piece of false or counterfeit coin resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any of the [King's] current gold or silver coin, or shall, either on the day of such tendering, uttering, or putting off, or within the space of ten days then next ensuing, tender, utter or put off any false or counterfeit coin resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any of the [King's] current gold or silver coin, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. . . . [This section re-enacts 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 34, s. 7.]

Sect. 12—Uttering after former conviction.]—Whosoever having been convicted, either before or after the passing of this Act, of any such misdemeanor or crime and offence as in any of the last three preceding sections mentioned, or of any felony or high crime and offence against this or any former Act relating to the coin, shall afterwards commit any of the misdemeanors or crimes and offences in any of the said sections mentioned, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for life. . . . [This section re-enacts 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 34, ss. 7, 8, with the alterations italicized.]

Sect. 13—Uttering spurious coin, medals, etc., as current coin.]—Whosoever shall, with intent to defraud, tender, utter or put off as or for any of the [King's] current gold or silver coin, any coin not being such current gold or silver coin, or any medal or piece of metal or mixed metals, resembling in size, figure and colour the current coin as or for which the same shall be so tendered, uttered, or put off, such coin, medal, or piece of metal or mixed metals so tendered, uttered, or put off being of less value than the current coin as or for which the same shall be so tendered, uttered or put off, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding one year, with or without hard labour. . . . [This section was new law in 1861. The defendant knowingly passed as and for a half-sovereign a medal of about the same size and colour as a half-sovereign. On the obverse side was Queen Victoria's head, as on a half-sovereign, but with a different inscription. The coin itself was not produced to the jury, and there was no evidence as to the appearance of the reverse side. It was held that there was some evidence that the medal was one, in size, figure and colour, resembling a half-sovereign. R. v. Robinson, L. & C. 604; 34 L. J. (M. C.) 176.]

Sect. 15—Uttering counterfeit British copper coin.]—Whosoever shall tender, utter or put off any false or counterfeit coin resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any of the [King's] current copper coin, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, . . . (as to possession, see post, p. 978), shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding one year, with or without hard labour. . . . [This section re-enacts 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 34, s. 12.]

Sect. 20—Uttering foreign counterfeit gold or silver coin.]—Whosoever shall tender, utter or put off any such false or counterfeit coin (as mentioned in s. 19, ante, p. 971) resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any gold or silver coin of any foreign prince, state, or country, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding six months, with or without hard labour. [This section re-enacts 37 G. 3, c. 126, s. 4.]

Sect. 21—Uttering foreign counterfeit gold or silver coin after former conviction.]—Whosoever, having been so convicted as in the last preceding section mentioned, shall afterwards commit the like offence of tendering, uttering or putting off any such false or counterfeit coin as aforesaid, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement (see ante, p. 237): and whosoever, having been so convicted of a second offence, shall afterwards commit the like offence of tendering, uttering or putting off any such false or counterfeit coin as aforesaid, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for life. . . . [This section re-enacts 37 G. 3, c. 126, s. 4.]

Indictment for uttering Counterfeit British Gold or Silver Coin.

Commencement as ante, p. 963]—one piece of false and counterfeit coin resembling ("resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for") a piece of the King's current gold ("gold or silver") coin, called a sovereign, unlawfully did utter ("tender, utter or put off"), he the said J. S. at the time he so uttered the said piece of false and counterfeit coin well knowing the same to be false and counterfeit; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

Misdemeanor: imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding one year. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 9. As to fining the offender and requiring him to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour, Id. s. 38 (ante, p. 962).

Evidence.

1. Prove the tendering, uttering or putting off the sovereign in question, and prove it to be a base and counterfeit sovereign. R. v. Wooldridge, 1 Leach, 307. Where a good shilling was given to a boy for fruit, and he put it into his mouth, under pretence of trying whether it was good, and then taking a bad shilling out of his mouth instead of it, returned it to the prosecutor saying it was not good; this (which is called ringing the changes) was held to be an uttering within the meaning of 16 G. 2, c. 28 (rep.). R. v. Franks, 2 Leach, 644.

It is submitted that to be within the statute the uttering must at least amount to a holding forth of the thing uttered as current coin for the purpose of currency, and that it would not include use of a false coin as a means of cheating at play. See R. v. McMahon [1894] 18 N. S. W. Rep. Law, at p. 137, Foster, J.; and cf. R. v. Shukard, R. & R. 200.

The giving of a piece of counterfeit coin in charity was held not to be an uttering within 2 W. 4, c. 34, s. 7 (rep.), although the party knew it to be counterfeit; for that there must be some intention to defraud. R. v. Page, 8 C. & P. 122; 1 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 240. But this case was doubted by Mr. Greaves; see 1 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 240, n.; and appears to have been treated as erroneous. See R. v. Ion, 2 Den. 475, 484, Alderson, B., and Anon., 1 Cox, 250, where the giving of a counterfeit coin to a woman, as the price of connection with her, was held to be "uttering."

It is an "uttering and putting off," as well as a "tendering," if the counterfeit coin be offered in payment, though it be refused by the person to whom it is offered. R. v. Welch, 2 Den. 78; 20 L. J. (M. C.) 101: see R. v. Radford, 1 Den. 59: R. v. Ion, 2 Den. 475; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 166.

As there are no accessories in misdemeanors, all persons who are engaged in the common purpose of uttering counterfeit coin, although the uttering in pursuance of that common purpose be by one only of such persons in the absence of the others, may be jointly convicted, or any of such persons may be separately convicted, of that offence of uttering. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 94, s. 8 (ante, p. 16): R. v. Greenwood, 2 Den. 453; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 127: see R. v. Hurse, 2 M. & Rob. 360. These decisions overrule a series of cases in which it had been held that persons not present at the actual uttering could not be convicted of it, unless they were within such a distance as to be able to render assistance to the actual utterer, and which appear to have been decided without consideration of the distinction between felonies and misdemeanors as to principals and accessories, see ante, pp. 12–21.

A genuine sovereign, which has been fraudulently filed at the edges to such an extent as to reduce the weight by one twenty-fourth part, and to remove the milling entirely, or almost entirely, and to which a new milling has been added in order to restore the appearance of the coin, is a false and counterfeit coin within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 9. R. v. Hermann, 4 Q. B. D. 284; 48 L. J. (M. C.) 106.

A coin made by splitting two genuine coins, and joining the heads together so as to make a double-headed coin, has been held counterfeit. R. v. McMahon [1894] 15 N. S. W. Rep. Law, 131, 136.

2. Prove that the defendant knew it to be a counterfeit sovereign at the time he uttered it. This, of course, must be done by circumstantial evidence. (See ante, pp. 303, 308–312, 340). If, for instance, it be proved that he uttered, either on the same day or at other times, whether before or after the uttering charged, base money, either of the same or a different denomination, to the same or to a different person, or had other pieces of base money about him when he uttered the counterfeit money in question: this will be evidence from which the jury may presume a guilty knowledge. R. v. Whiley, 2 Leach, 983: R. v. Forster, Dears. 456; 24 L. J. (M. C.) 134. (See ante, p. 720.)

Indictment for uttering Counterfeit British Coin, having at the same time Counterfeit Coin in Possession. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 10, ante, p. 972.)

The same as in the last precedent, to the words "well knowing the same to be false and counterfeit." Then proceed thus]:—And that he the said J. S., at the time when he so uttered ("tender, utter or put off") the said piece of false and counterfeit coin as aforesaid, had in his possession, besides the said piece of false and counterfeit coin so uttered, one other piece of false and counterfeit coin resembling ("resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for") a piece of the King's current silver ("gold or silver") coin called a shilling; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

Misdemeanor: imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 10. As to fining the offender and requiring him to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour, Id. s. 38 (ante, p. 962).

Evidence.

Prove the offence of uttering as directed ante, p. 974, and prove that the defendant at the same time had about him one or more pieces of the counterfeit money specified in the indictment. The guilty knowledge may reasonably be implied from the possession of the other counterfeit coin. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 1 (ante, p. 960), enacts that "where the having any matter in the custody or possession of any person is mentioned in this Act, it shall include not only the having of it by himself in his personal custody or possession, but also the knowingly and wilfully having it in the actual custody or possession of any other person." Even prior to this enactment it had been held that where two persons went to a shop, and one of them went in and uttered a bad piece of money, having no more in her possession, and the other stayed outside the shop, having other bad money, both might be convicted, the uttering and the possession being joint; R. v. Skerrit, 2 C. & P. 427; and that where one of two persons in company (or, as it seems, apart from each other) utters counterfeit coin, and other counterfeit coin is found on the other, both are guilty of the aggravated offence of acting in concert, and both knowing of the possession. R. v. Gerrish, 2 M. & Rob. 219. See R. v. Rogers, 2 Mood. C. C. 85: R. v. Williams, C. & Mar. 259 (post, p. 980): R. v. Greenwood, R. v. Hurse (ante, p. 975).

Indictment for uttering twice within Ten Days. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 10, ante, p. 972.)

Proceed as in the precedent ante, p. 974, to the words "well knowing the same to be false and counterfeit" inclusive, and then proceed thus]:—And that the said J. S. afterwards, on the same day, that is to say, on the said third day of August, in the year last aforesaid [or afterwards and within the space of ten days then next ensuing, to wit, on the 6th day of August, in the year last aforesaid], one other piece of false and counterfeit coin, resembling ("resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for") a piece of the King's current silver ("gold or silver") coin, called a shilling, unlawfully did utter ("tender, utter or put off"), he the said J. S., at the time when he so uttered the said last-mentioned piece of false and counterfeit coin, well knowing the same to be false and counterfeit; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. The double uttering must be charged in one count of the indictment. R. v. Tandy, 2 Leach, 833: see R. v. Martin, 2 Leach, 923.

Misdemeanor: 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 10. See the last precedent.

On a conviction for two separate offences of uttering, in two counts, one judgment for two years' imprisonment, under s. 10, would be bad. R. v. Robinson, 1 Mood. C. C. 413. But a sentence of one year's imprisonment, under s. 9, may in such a case be passed for each offence, and the commencement of the second year's imprisonment may be postponed until the termination of the first. Id.

Evidence.

Prove the two offences as directed ante, p. 974, and prove them to have been committed on the same day, or within the space of ten days according as it is alleged in the indictment.

Indictment for a Subsequent Uttering, after a Previous Conviction, under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, ss. 9, 10, 11, for Uttering. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 12, ante, p. 973.)

Commencement as ante, p. 963]—one piece of false and counterfeit coin resembling and apparently intended to resemble and pass for a piece of the King's current gold coin, called a sovereign [or of the gold ("gold or silver") coin of —— ("foreign prince, state, or country," s. 21)], unlawfully did utter ("tender, utter or put off"), he the said J. S. then knowing the same to be false and counterfeit; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do say that heretofore and before the committing of the offence hereinbefore charged and stated, to wit, at the general quarter sessions of the peace for the county of ——, holden at ——, on the —— day of ——, in the year of our Lord ——, the said J. S. was in due form of law convicted on a certain indictment against him for [here state the substance and effect only (omitting the formal part) of the indictment and conviction for the previous offence]. And so the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do say that the said J. S., on the day and year first aforesaid, feloniously and unlawfully did utter the said piece of false and counterfeit coin, in manner and form aforesaid, and against the form [as ante, p. 465]. (2nd Count)—And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present that the said J. S. afterwards, to wit, on the first day of June, in the year of our Lord ——, one piece of false and counterfeit coin resembling and apparently intended to resemble and pass for a piece of the King's current gold coin called a sovereign, unlawfully and feloniously did utter and put off, he, the said J. S. then knowing the same to be false and counterfeit; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do say that heretofore and before the committing of the offence in this count charged and stated, to wit, at the general quarter sessions of the peace for the county of ——, holden at ——, on the —— day of ——, in the year of our Lord ——, the said J. S. was in due form of law convicted on a certain indictment against him for [here state the substance and effect only (omitting the formal part) of the indictment and conviction for the previous offence].

A similar provision is made by s. 21 (ante, p. 974) as to uttering foreign gold or silver coin. An indictment for the latter offence can be framed from the above precedent. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 37 (ante, p. 961), enacts that "where any person shall have been convicted of any offence against this Act, or any former Act relating to the coin, and shall afterwards be indicted for any offence against this Act committed subsequent to such conviction, it shall be sufficient in any such indictment, after charging such subsequent offence, to state the substance and effect only (omitting the formal part) of the indictment and conviction for the previous offence," etc. It seems clear from this that it was intended that the subsequent offence should always be first charged, and in both counts of the above form of indictment that course has been adopted. The mode of framing the indictment and the proceedings at the trial are regulated by s. 37 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, which is analogous to s. 116 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 (ante, p. 430), and the reader is referred to pp. 486, 487, ante, for an explanation of the mode in which the above indictment is drawn.

To commit any of the misdemeanors mentioned in ss. 9, 10 (ante, p. 972), or s. 11 (post, p. 978), after a conviction for any one of those offences respectively, is felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 12; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 38 (ante, p. 962).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove the subsequent offence, as directed under the last three precedents. Before the prisoner has pleaded guilty or is found guilty of the subsequent offence, the previous conviction cannot be given in evidence, except under the provisions of s. 1 (f) of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (ante, p. 395), or under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 37 (ante, p. 961). R. v. Martin, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 214; 39 L. J. (M. C.) 31 (overruling on this point R. v. Goodwin, 10 Cox, 534). It is not necessary that any judgment should have been pronounced against the prisoner on the first conviction. R. v. Blaby [1894] 2 Q. B. 170; 18 Cox, 5. If the prisoner pleads guilty, or is found guilty of the subsequent offence, prove the former conviction in manner directed by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 37 (ante, p. 961), and the identity of the prisoner with the person described in the former conviction. The course of proceedings at the trial as to arraignment, etc., is also regulated by that section. R. v. Martin, ubi supra.

If the prisoner is found guilty of the subsequent offence, and then upon being asked whether he has been previously convicted, denies that he has, and the jury after inquiry find that he has not been so previously convicted, he is entitled to be acquitted of the whole charge laid against him in the indictment and cannot be convicted, under s. 9, of the misdemeanor of uttering counterfeit coin. R. v. Thomas, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 141; 44 L. J. (M. C.) 42. He may, however, after such acquittal be indicted for the misdemeanor alone, and cannot to such indictment plead autrefois acquit. Id., Mellor, J.

POSSESSION OF COUNTERFEIT COIN.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 99 (Coinage Offences Act, 1861), s. 11—Having in possession three or more pieces of counterfeit British gold or silver coin.]—Whosoever shall have in his custody or possession three or more pieces of false or counterfeit coin resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any of the [King's] current gold or silver coin, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, and with intent to utter or put off the same or any of them, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude. . . . [This section re-enacts 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 34, s. 8, with the additions italicized.]

Sect. 15—Having in possession three or more pieces of counterfeit British copper coin.]—Whosoever . . . shall have in his custody or possession three or more pieces of false or counterfeit coin resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any of the [King's] current copper coin, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, and with intent to utter or put off the same, or any of them, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and in Scotland of a crime or offence, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for a term not exceeding one year, with or without hard labour. . . . [For rest of section, see ante, p. 973. The above provision re-enacts 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 34, s. 12, with the additions italicized.]

Sect. 23—Having possession of more than five pieces of counterfeit foreign coin.]—Whosoever, without lawful authority or excuse (the proof whereof shall lie on the party accused), shall have in his custody or possession any greater number of pieces than five pieces of false or counterfeit coin resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any gold or silver coin of any foreign prince, state, or country, or any such copper or other coin as in the last preceding section (s. 22, ante, p. 963) mentioned, shall, on conviction thereof before any justice of the peace, forfeit and lose all such false and counterfeit coin, which shall be cut in pieces and destroyed by order of such justice, and shall for every such offence forfeit and pay any sum of money not exceeding forty shillings nor less than ten shillings for every such piece of false and counterfeit coin which shall be found in the custody or possession of such person, one moiety to the informer, and the other moiety to the poor of the parish where such offence shall be committed; and in case any such penalty shall not be forthwith paid, it shall be lawful for any such justice to commit the person who shall have been adjudged to pay the same to the common gaol or house of correction, there to be kept to hard labour for the space of three months, or until such penalty shall be paid.

[This section was framed from 37 G. 3, c. 126, s. 6, and 43 G. 3, c. 139, s. 6, with the alterations italicized.]

Indictment for Possession of Counterfeit British Gold or Silver Coin.
(24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 11, ante, p. 978.)

Commencement as ante, p. 963]—unlawfully had in his custody and possession four pieces of false and counterfeit coin resembling ("resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for") the King's current silver ("gold or silver") coin, called shillings, with intent to utter ("tender, utter, or put off") the said pieces of false and counterfeit coin, he the said J. S. then well knowing the said pieces of false and counterfeit coin to be false and counterfeit; against the form [as ante, p. 465].

Misdemeanor: penal servitude for not less than three years and not exceeding five years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 11; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). As to fining the offender and requiring him to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 38 (ante, p. 962). This offence, after a previous conviction for the like offence, or for any of the misdemeanors mentioned in ss. 9 and 10, or for any felony against 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, or any former Act relating to the coin, is felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 12; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, p. 235). An indictment for that offence may be easily framed from this and the last precedent. Indictment for Possession of Counterfeit British Copper Coin (24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 15).

An indictment for possessing counterfeit British copper coin may be in the same form, with substitution of copper and the denomination for gold or silver.

Misdemeanor: imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding one year. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 15 (ante, p. 978). As to fine and recognizances, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 38 (ante, p. 962).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant had in his custody or possession three or more pieces of counterfeit gold or silver coin. They will be deemed to be in his custody or possession if he have them in his personal custody or possession, or knowingly and wilfully have them in the actual custody or possession of any other person, or knowingly and wilfully have them in any dwelling-house or other building, lodging, apartment, field, or other place, open or enclosed, whether belonging to or occupied by himself or not, and whether they be had for his own use or benefit, or for that of another. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 1 (ante, p. 960). So, also, when pieces of counterfeit coin are found on one of two persons acting in guilty concert, and both knowing of the possession, both are guilty under this section. R. v. Rogers, 2 Mood. C. C. 85: R. v. Williams, C. & Mar. 259 (see ante, p. 976). Prove also the defendant's knowledge that the coin was counterfeit, and his intent to utter it. These, of course, can only be proved by circumstances; as, for instance, by evidence of former utterings, or by the fact of the defendant's having in his possession a large quantity of counterfeit coin of like date, and made in the same mould, wrapped up in separate papers, and distributed in different pockets of his dress. R. v. Jarvis, Dears. 552; 25 L. J. (M. C.) 30. See R. v. Fuller, R. & R. 308.

At common law, it was no offence to have possession of counterfeit coin with intent to utter it; R. v. Stewart, R. & R. 288: R. v. Heath, Id. 184; but to procure it with that intent was a misdemeanor. R. v. Fuller, R. & R. 308: see R. v. Roberts, Dears. 539; 25 L. J. (M. C.) 17 (post, p. 982): cf. Dugdale v. Reg., Dears. 64. And proof that the defendant was the coiner was an answer to an indictment for the common law misdemeanor for procuring (see 1 Russ. Cr. (6th ed.) 198); but this would not be so under the present statute.

MAKING, ETC., COINING TOOLS.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 99 (Coinage Offences Act, 1861), s. 14—Tools for counterfeiting British copper coin.] . . . Whosoever, without lawful authority or excuse (the proof whereof shall lie on the party accused), shall knowingly make or mend, or begin or proceed to make or mend, or buy or sell, or have in his custody or possession, any instrument, tool, or engine adapted and intended for the counterfeiting any of the [King's] current copper coin . . . shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding seven years. . . . [For other offences created by this section, see ante, pp. 963, 970. The section re-enacts 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 34, s. 12.]

Sect. 24—Tools for counterfeiting British gold or silver coin, or any foreign coin.]—Whosoever, without lawful authority or excuse (the proof whereof shall lie on the party accused), shall knowingly make or mend, or begin or proceed to make or mend, or buy or sell, or have in his custody or possession, any puncheon, counter-puncheon, matrix, stamp, die, pattern, or mould, in or upon which there shall be made or impressed, or which will make or impress, or shall be adapted and intended to make or impress the figure, stamp, or apparent resemblance of both or either of the sides of any of the [King's] current gold or silver coin, or of any coin of any foreign prince, state or country (see post, p. 984), or any part or parts of both or either of such sides; or shall make or mend, or begin or proceed to make or mend, or shall buy or sell, or have in his custody or possession, any edger, edging or other tool, collar, instrument or engine adapted and intended for the marking of coin round the edges with letters, grainings or other marks or figures apparently resembling those on the edges of any such coin as in this section aforesaid, knowing the same to be so adapted and intended as aforesaid; or shall make or mend, or begin or proceed to make or mend, or shall buy or sell, or have in his custody or possession, any press for coinage, or any cutting engine for cutting by force of a screw, or of any other contrivance, round blanks out of gold, silver, or other metal or mixture of metals, or any other machine, knowing such press to be a press for coinage, or knowing such engine or machine to have been used, or to be intended to be used, for or in order to the false making or counterfeiting of any such coin as in this section aforesaid, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for life. . . . [This section re-enacts 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 34, s. 10, with the additions italicized. A galvanic battery is a machine within this section. R. v. Gover, 9 Cox, 282.]

Indictment for making, etc., a Puncheon, etc., for Coining Gold and Silver Coin. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 24.)

Commencement as ante, p. 963]—one puncheon ("any puncheon, counter-puncheon, matrix, stamp, die, pattern or mould") in and upon which there was then made and impressed ("in or upon which there shall be made or impressed, or which will make or impress, or which shall be adapted and intended to make or impress") the figure ("figure, stamp, or apparent resemblance") of one of the sides ("of both or either of the sides, or any part or parts of both or either of such sides"), that is to say, the head side of a piece of the King's current silver ("gold or silver") coin, commonly called a shilling,* feloniously, and without lawful authority or excuse, did knowingly make ("make or mend, or begin or proceed to make or mend, or buy or sell"); against the form [as ante, p. 465]. As to the venue, see ante, pp. 43, 47, 960. As to the words "without lawful authority or excuse" in the precedent, see R. v. Harvey (post, p. 983). The words "knowingly, falsely, and deceitfully," which appeared in the precedent in the 21*st edition of this work at* p. 875, are not in the statute.

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, if the offence relates to British current gold or silver coin or any foreign coin, and penal servitude for not less than three nor more than seven years, if it relates to British current copper coin; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, ss. 14, 24; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1 (ante, p. 235); or in either case, imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years. 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2

(ante, p. 235). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 38 (ante, p. 962).

These offences are not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126.

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant made, etc., a puncheon, etc., as stated in the indictment; and prove that the instrument in question is a puncheon or other instrument described in the indictment, and included in the statute. The words in the statute "upon which there shall be made or impressed," etc., apply to the puncheon, which, being convex, bears upon it the figure of the coin; and the words "which will make and impress," etc., apply to the counter-puncheon, etc., which, being concave, will make and impress. Although it is more accurate to describe the instruments according to their actual use, even under earlier statutes they might be described either way. R. v. Lennard, 1 Leach, 85, 90; 1 East, P. C. 170; 2 W. Bl. 807. It is not necessary that the instrument should be capable of making an impression of the whole of one side of the coin; for the words "or any part or parts," etc., are introduced into this statute, and consequently the difficulty in R. v. Sutton, 2 Str. 1074, where the instrument was capable of making the sceptre only, cannot now occur. And on an indictment for making a mould "intended to make and impress the figure and apparent resemblance of the obverse side" of a shilling, it is sufficient to prove that the prisoner made the mould, and a part of the impression, though he had not completed the entire impression. R. v. Foster, 7 C. & P. 495. It is not necessary to prove, under this branch of the statute, the intent of the defendant; the mere similitude is treated by the legislature as evidence of the intent; neither is it essential to show that money was actually made with the instrument in question. R. v. Ridgeley, 1 East, P. C. 171, 172. The proof of lawful authority or excuse (if any) for the act lies on the defendant. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 24. See Dickins v. Gill [1896] 2 Q. B. 310.

Where the defendant employed a die-sinker to make, for a pretended innocent purpose, a die calculated to make shillings; and the die-sinker, suspecting fraud, informed the authorities at the Mint, and under their directions made the die for the purpose of detecting the prisoner; it was held that the die-sinker was an innocent agent, and the defendant was rightly convicted as a principal under 2 W. 4, c. 34, s. 10 (rep.). R. v. Bannen, 2 Mood. C. C. 309; 1 C. & K. 295.

The making and procuring dies and other materials, with intent to use them in coining Peruvian half-dollars in England, not in order to utter them here, but by way of trying whether the apparatus would answer before sending it out to Peru, to be there used in making the counterfeit coin for circulation in that country, was held to be an indictable misdemeanor at common law. R. v. Roberts, Dears. 539; 25 L. J. (M. C.) 17 (see ante, p. 980). As to the liability of a wife for implements found in a room occupied by her husband, see R. v. Boober, 4 Cox, 272.

Indictment for having a Puncheon, etc., in Possession. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 24, ante, p. 981.)

Proceed as in the last precedent to the asterisk *, and then thus].—feloniously, and without lawful excuse, did knowingly have in his custody and possession; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. See [note to last precedent (ante, p. 981). An indictment which charged that the defendant feloniously had in his possession a mould, "upon which said mould was made and impressed the figure and apparent resemblance" of the obverse side of a sixpence, was held bad on demurrer, as not sufficiently showing that the impression was on the mould at the time when he had it in his possession. R. v. Richmond, 1 C. & K. 240. In the above precedent the prisoner's possession is averred to have been "without lawful authority or excuse;" it is sufficient, however, if the possession is averred to have been "without lawful excuse," on the ground that there can be no authority which would not also be an excuse, and therefore to negative excuse is to negative authority. R. v. Harvey, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 284; 40 L. J. (M. C.) 63. An indictment which does not expressly or impliedly, as in the case last mentioned, aver the prisoner's possession to have been without lawful authority or excuse, would be bad. Id. As to the venue, see ante, pp. 43, 47, 960.

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

Prove the custody or possession, that is, that the defendant had the instrument either in his personal custody or possession, or in the actual custody or possession of any other person, or in some dwelling-house or building, lodging, apartment, field or other place, open or enclosed, whether belonging to or occupied by himself or not, and whether the instrument was had for his own use or benefit, or for that of another. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 1 (ante, p. 960); see R. v. Rogers, 2 Mood. C. C. 85 (ante, p. 980). To prove the guilty knowledge, evidence may be given of the defendant's having previously uttered counterfeit money. R. v. Weeks, L. & C. 18; 30 L. J. (M. C.) 141. The guilty knowledge required is the being knowingly in possession of the instrument contrary to the provisions of the statute, i.e., without lawful authority or excuse. A guilty intention in reference to the use or possession of the instrument is not necessary under the statute. R. v. Harvey, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 284; 40 L. J. (M. C.) 63; 11 Cox, 662. Where the prisoner ordered of a die-sinker two dies having an apparent resemblance to the sides of a sovereign, whereupon the die-sinker communicated with the police, who in consequence of orders from the Mint told him to furnish the dies to the prisoner, which he accordingly did; it was held that these facts constituted no lawful authority or excuse for the prisoner's possession of the dies. Id. The lawful authority or excuse, if any, must be proved by the defendant. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 24. See Dickins v. Gill [1896] 2 Q. B. 310. It must also be proved that the puncheon or instrument is such as is specified in the indictment, and included in the statute. Where the prisoner was indicted for having in his possession a mould on which was impressed a resemblance of the obverse side of a shilling, it was held that, in order to convict, the jury must be satisfied, that, at the time he had it in his possession, the whole of the obverse side of the shilling was impressed on the mould. R. v. Foster, 7 C. & P. 494. The police, entering prisoner's house in his absence, took from some persons inside a plaster-of-Paris mould of a half-crown, part of which was still wet, after resistance on their part, and an attempt by them to destroy the mould. Materials suitable for melting lead and making plaster-of-Paris moulds were found in various parts of the house. Shortly afterwards the prisoner came in. He had passed a bad half-crown thirteen days before, but there was no evidence to show that it was made in the mould seized. It was held, that this evidence warranted the conviction of the prisoner for knowingly and without lawful excuse feloniously having in his custody and possession a mould on which was impressed the figure and apparent resemblance of the obverse side of a half-crown. R. v. Weeks (ubi supra).

Indictment for making, etc., a Collar, etc. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 24, ante, p. 981.)

Commencement as ante, p. 963]—one collar ("any edger, edging or other tool, collar, instrument, or engine") adapted and intended for the marking of coin round the edges with grainings ("letters, grainings, or other marks or figures") apparently resembling those on the edges of a piece of the King's current gold ("gold or silver") coin called a sovereign, feloniously, and without lawful authority or excuse, did make ("make or mend, or begin or proceed to make or mend, or buy or sell, or have in his custody or possession"), he the said J. S. then well knowing the same to be so adapted and intended as aforesaid; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. From this and the last precedent an indictment for having possession of such tools may be easily framed.

Felony: 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 24. See the precedent ante, p. 981.

Evidence.

The evidence upon this indictment will be the same as on the last two respectively, except that it must also be proved that the defendant knew the instrument to be adapted and intended for the marking of coin round the edge. This was a new provision introduced into 2 W. 4, c. 34 (rep.), and was substituted for the words "not of common use in any trade," in the former statute, upon which much difficulty arose. See R. v. Moore, 2 C. & P. 235.

Indictment for making, etc., a Press, etc., for Coinage. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 24, ante, p. 981.)

Commencement as ante, p. 963]—one press for coinage ("any press for coinage, or any cutting-engine for cutting, by force of a screw or any other contrivance, round blanks out of gold, silver, or other metal or mixture of metals, or any other machine") feloniously, and without lawful authority or excuse, did make ("make or mend, or begin or proceed to make or mend, or buy or sell, or have in his custody or possession"), he the said J. S. then well knowing such press to be a press for coinage [or such engine to have been used or to be intended to be used for and in order to the counterfeiting of the King's current gold and silver coin]; against the form [as ante, p. 465]. As to the venue, see ante, pp. 43, 47, 960. From this and the precedent ante, p. 982, an indictment may be easily framed for having possession of a coining-press or instrument for cutting. As to the words "without lawful authority or excuse," see R. v. Harvey (ante, p. 983).

Felony: 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 24. See the precedent ante, p. 981.

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

Evidence.

The evidence will be the same as under the last precedent. In R. v. Bell, 1 East, P. C. 169; Fost. 430, it was held that a coining-press used to make Louis d'or was not within the meaning of similar words in 8 & 9 W. 3, c. 26 (rep.), contrary to the opinion of Ryder, C.J., and Foster, J., in which Lord Mansfield concurred; but 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 24 (ante, p. 981), expressly applies to instruments used or intended to be used for counterfeiting any coin of "any foreign prince, state or country."

CONVEYING COINING TOOLS OR COINS OUT OF THE MINT.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 99 (Coinage Offences Act, 1861), s. 25.]—Whosoever, without lawful authority or excuse (the proof whereof shall lie on the party accused), shall knowingly convey out of any of [his] Majesty's Mints any puncheon, counter-puncheon, matrix, stamp, die, pattern, mould, edger, edging or other tool, collar, instrument, press, or engine used or employed in or about the coining of coin, or any useful part of any of the several matters aforesaid, or any coin, bullion, metal, or mixture of metals, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for life. . . . [This section is taken from 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 34, s. 11, with alterations italicized.]

Indictment.

An indictment for offences against this section can readily be framed from the precedents ante, pp. 981–984.

MAKING, ETC., MEDALS RESEMBLING CURRENT COIN.

Statute.

46 & 47 Vict. c. 45 (Counterfeit Medal Act, 1883), s. 2—Punishment for making, etc., medals resembling current gold or silver coin.]—If any person, without due authority or excuse [see R. v. Harvey, ante, p. 983] (the proof whereof shall lie on the person accused), makes or has in his possession for sale, or offers for sale, or sells, any medal, cast, coin, or any other like thing made wholly or partially of metal or any metallic combination and resembling in size, figure, and colour any of the [King's] current gold or silver coin, or having thereon a device resembling any device on any of the [King's] current gold or silver coin, or being so formed that it can by gilding, silvering, colouring, washing, or other like process, be so dealt with as to resemble any of the [King's] current gold or silver coin, he shall be guilty, in England and Ireland, of a misdemeanor, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and on being convicted thereof shall be liable to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding one year, with or without hard labour. [See also 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 13 (ante, p. 973).]

Sect. 3—Interpretation.]—"The [King's] current gold or silver coin" includes any gold or silver coin coined in or for any of [his] Majesty's Mints, or lawfully current by virtue of any proclamation or otherwise in any part of [his] Majesty's dominions, whether within the United Kingdom or otherwise. [See ante, p. 959.]

Indictment for a Seditious Libel (Common Law).

Kent, to wit:—The jurors for our lord the King, upon their oath present that J. H. [late of the parish of B., in the county of M., clerk], being a wicked, malicious, seditious, and ill-disposed person, and being greatly disaffected to our said lord the King, and to his administration of the government of this kingdom, and the dominions thereunto belonging, and wickedly, maliciously, and seditiously contriving, devising, and intending to stir up and excite discontents and seditions amongst his Majesty's subjects, and to alienate and withdraw the affection, fidelity and allegiance of his said Majesty's subjects from his said Majesty and cause it to be believed that divers of his Majesty's innocent and deserving subjects had been inhumanly murdered by his said Majesty's troops, in the province, colony, or plantation of the Massachusetts Bay in New England, in America, belonging to the crown of Great Britain, and unlawfully and wickedly to seduce and encourage his Majesty's subjects in the said province, colony, or plantation, to resist and oppose his Majesty's government, on the eighth day of June, in the fifteenth year of the reign of our sovereign lord George the Third [with force and arms], at the parish aforesaid, in the county aforesaid, wickedly, maliciously, and seditiously did write and publish, and cause and procure to be written and published, a certain [false], wicked, malicious, scandalous, and seditious libel of and concerning his said Majesty's government, and the employment of his troops, according to the tenor and effect following: that is to say, "King's Arms Tavern, Cornhill, June 7, 1775.—At a special meeting this day of several members of the Constitutional Society, during an adjournment, a gentleman proposed that a subscription should be immediately entered into by such of the members present who might approve the purpose, for raising the sum of one hundred pounds, to be applied to the relief of the widows, orphans and aged parents of our beloved American fellow-subjects, who, faithful to the character of Englishmen, preferring death to slavery, were, for that reason only, inhumanly murdered by the King's (meaning his said Majesty's) troops at Lexington and Concord, in the province of Massachusetts (meaning the said province, colony, or plantation of the Massachusetts Bay, in New England, in America), on the nineteenth of last April: which sum being immediately collected, it was thereupon resolved, that Mr. H. (meaning himself, the said J. H.) do pay to-morrow into the hands of Messrs. B. & C., on account of Dr. F., the said sum of one hundred pounds; and that Dr. F. be requested to apply the same to the above-mentioned purpose.—J. H." (meaning himself, the said J. H.): in contempt of our said lord the King, in open violation of the laws of this kingdom, to the evil and pernicious example of all others in the like case offending, and against the peace of our lord the King, his crown and dignity. There were other counts charging that the defendant "printed and published, and caused and procured to be printed and published" in several newspapers, the same libel; and other counts, charging the printing and publishing of part of the same libel, setting it out to the words, "the nineteenth of last April," inclusive; and lastly, a count charging the defendant with having written and published another but similar libel.—This indictment was framed from the ex-officio information in the case of R. v. Horne, 2 Cowp. 672; 20 St. Tr. 651. See also the precedent in R. v. Finerty, 26 St. Tr. 901, 923 (Ir.), and two precedents, 4 Wentw. 190, 200. For an indictment for seditious libel, see 4 Wentw. 199, 200: R. v. Cobbett, 2 St. Tr., N. S. 789, 791: R. v. Collins, 3 St. Tr., N. S. 1149; 9 C. & P. 456. In R. v. Horne, ubi supra, the defendant himself moved in arrest of judyment, and made several objections, the principal of which was, that it was not averred that the employment of the troops was by the King's authority; but the court, after much consideration, declared themselves clearly of opinion that the information was sufficient. See also R. v. Burdett, 1 St. Tr., N. S. 1; 4 B. & Ald. 314. The word "false" seems unnecessary, as truth is no defence. See post, p. 997. It has been held in R. v. McHugh [1901] 2 Ir. Rep. 369, that the words "seditious" and "seditiously" are not essential.

Misdemeanor: fine and imprisonment. 60 G. 3 & 1 G. 4, c. 8, s. 4 (ante, p. 987). As to the treatment of prisoners convicted of seditious libel, see 40 & 41 Vict. c. 21, s. 40; 61 & 62 Vict. c. 41, s. 6 (ante, p. 988). Seditious libel is within the provisions of the Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859, as extended by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867 (ante, p. 7, et seq.); 44 & 45 Vict. c. 60, s. 6 (post, p. 1121).

The offence of composing, printing, or publishing blasphemous, or seditious, or defamatory libels, is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 126).

It seems that no prosecution of persons concerned in the publication of a seditious libel ("any libel") appearing in a newspaper, as defined by 44 & 45 Vict. c. 60, s. 1 (post, p. 1120), and 51 & 52 Vict. c. 64, s. 1 (post, p. 1121), may be instituted without the order of a judge of the High Court in chambers. See 51 & 52 Vict. c. 64, s. 8 (post, p. 1122).
